THE FRIEND OF INDIA.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY MORNING.

No. 418. Vol. IX.] SERAMPORE: THURSDAY, JANUARY 5TH, 1843. [Price [illegible]

The year 1842, which has just closed, is by far the most eventful year in the history of our remarkable career in Asia. We do not allude to the desolating storm, the terrific earthquake, the burning of ships, or the repeated instances of bankruptcy, though these have served to give the year a peculiar and a gloomy character; but to the unexampled vicissitudes which have attended our arms beyond the Indus, and our unexpected and gratifying successes in China.

In Affghanistan the greatness of the individual and national calamity which marked the beginning of the present year, struck the mind with dismay, and with a fearful apprehension of future consequences. It may be true, that the number of Europeans who perished in the Black-hole, was greater than that of the officers lost in the retreat from Affghanistan. In the war with Hyder, our arms experienced great reverses; but in the catastrophe of Cabul, was combined both the loss of national honour, and a most calamitous sacrifice of life, under circumstances the most appalling. The public mind was also kept for a long period in a state of anxiety for the safety of the garrisons of Jellalabad, Ghuznie and Candahar, and of the prisoners who had fallen into the hands of the enemy.

The calamity was heightened by the great elevation which we had attained. When Hyder burst upon the Carnatic, and carried his ravages almost to the gates of Madras, our power was then but in its infancy. The thrones of India were filled with independent princes, who claimed to treat with us as equals. We were but a single, though a leading, power among many others on this Continent. The calamity of the past year overtook us, not only after we had prostrated every power within the Indus, and occupied the throne of the Great Mogul, but after we had carried our victorious arms into the unexplored regions of Central Asia, and surprised the distant chiefs of Bokhara and Khiva by our successes. The theatre, on which we experienced such unexampled reverses, was so vast and elevated, as to attract to it the eyes of all Asia, and to render our humiliation the more conspicuous. It is no hyperbole to say, that the blow which our power received at Cabul, resounded through the world; that not only was every Court in Asia, but that of every country in the civilized world was filled with the report of our disasters, and with speculations on its consequences; and that one general feeling of exultation was diffused throughout the minds of those, in every quarter, who envied our elevation and longed for our downfall.

At the close of the year, the whole scene is changed. In January, our troops were hunted to death upon the mountains of Affghanistan, and the remains of a whole army lay unburied on its snows. In December, twenty thousand troops, after having retrieved our national character, vindicated our lost honour, and re-establish- [illegible] superiority in the eyes of all Asia, have [illegible] greater confirmation to our power than as though it had never been assailed. The bold measure of marching to Cabul, which appears to have been adopted with such hesitation, has overawed all opposition within the Indus and given us the prospect of a long tranquillity. That prospect would have been cheaply purchased had it cost us ten times the expense, which has been incurred by the advance from Candahar and Jellalabad.

This is the bright side of the picture. The dark side presents the vacillation of our councils before the advance was ordered, and the use we have made of our victory. It will be for the future historian, when he has full access to documents of which we have only a glimpse, to describe how little of one of the wisest measure ever pursued since we became a power in Asia, was owing to the wisdom or consistency of our public councils. The use we have made of our success is too palpable to be mistaken, even in the present age. Never, since our standard was first set up in India, have we carried such havoc and desolation into any country, or left in any region such terrific memorials of our vengeance. It is a sickening subject, and we turn from it cheerfully to more grateful considerations. On no former occasion has the interposition of a gracious Providence been so signally manifested in our favour, as in almost every circumstance connected with the march to Cabul. The brief period of forty-three days, which intervened between the departure of General Nott from Candahar and the liberation of our prisoners from Bameun, is crowded with events which call for the warmest gratitude. It is to his gracious protection we owe it, that the unwise delay of the march to the most inappropriate season of the year did not prove fatal. Had there been any detention at Ghuzni, or any well organized opposition in the passes between Jellalabad and Cabul, our troops must have been exposed to risks which we shudder to contemplate. One day later, and the unhappy prisoners would have been carried into hopeless captivity. It is impossible to review the events which have transpired within the last three months, without finding cause for the warmest gratitude to the all-wise Disposer of human affairs, who has turned our mourning into joy, who has restored the prisoners to their friends, brought back our arms triumphant, and re-established us more firmly than ever in the Empire of the East.

Our dispute with China has been brought to a termination as unexpected as it is gratifying. It is seldom we have an opportunity of seeing a treaty of peace concluded after a war so humiliating to the vanquished, which is equally satisfactory to both the belligerent powers. We have reason to rejoice that a war which arose out of the aggressions of our own cupidity, has been brought to a termination; that our commercial intercourse has been re-established and [illegible] ever, with the [illegible] empire under the [illegible] the Tariff which [illegible] stipulating with the [illegible] the six hostile [illegible] against us by [illegible] Europe and America. It was the proud boast of Warren Hastings, who, arraigned at the bar in Westminster Hall, that while the Ministry were losing an empire in America, he was founding one in India. It may be equally the proud boast of Sir Henry Pottinger, that while the nations of Christendom are combining to exclude our manufactures from their countries, he has opened to them a boundless market among Heathens.—Finally; it is most gratifying to find the large empire of China, comprizing a third of the human race, brought within the pale of relations with what is termed the civilized world; and the active and ingenious mind of the Chinese placed in intimate contact with the European mind in its present advanced state. It is difficult to estimate the effect which this intercourse will produce upon such a people; or the rapid strides of improvement they may be expected to make in the happy circumstances in which they are now placed. Suffice it for us to remark, that the year, in which the foundation of this improvement was laid, will be one of the most memorable in the annals of China.

The Show at Ferozepore.—The object for which the army of Reserve, consisting of 16,000 troops, has been kept together on the banks of the Sutlege, is accomplished. The troops returning from Affghanistan have arrived within our own territories, and have received the congratulations of their brethren in arms assembled to greet them. On the 17th of December the Illustrious Garrison of Jellalabad passed the bridge which had been thrown across that river, and was received with all honor by the Governor General. The Army of Reserve was drawn up in one continuous line, extending two miles and a half in length, and saluted the troops as they moved on to their own encampment. Seldom has greater honor been bestowed on any soldiers than the defenders of Jellalabad have received, and never have honors been more richly earned by the exercise of the highest military virtues under the most appalling difficulties. The other divisions of the army crossed on subsequent days, and the whole body congregated at Ferozepore is only waiting to be dispersed.

The spectacle now exhibited on the banks of the Sutledge has a most impressive appearance, whether we regard the vast body of troops, amounting to nearly forty thousand, which are assembled in one encampment, or the heart-stirring recollections which are associated with it. The soldiers, who have retrieved the unexampled disasters which marked the opening of the year, and restored victory to our arms, who have planted our standard anew on the citadel of Ghuzni and the Bala Hissar of Cabul, and vindicated our national superiority in the eyes of Central Asia, are greeted on touching the soil of British India, by the Governor General in person and his escort of Sixteen thousand men. The report of this event will be conveyed to all the Chiefs from the Himalaya to Cape Comorin. They will learn with feelings of no ordinary surprise that the English Government, which not twelve months since was struck with the heaviest blow it has ever received, and seemed to be reeling to the earth, has recovered from the shock, and after having retrieved its honor, has now an [illegible]aks of the Sutlege, [illegible]mbined hostility of [illegible]. The impression [illegible]ted to produce is in- [illegible]ary, that we almost lose sight of the fact, that the noble exertions which are now rewarded in so extraordinary a manner, arose out of permission granted to the Generals to march on their own responsibility to Cabul, and not from any steady determination of purpose. In the exhilaration of this spectacle, we are happy to forget that the Army of Reserve, which has been kept together to receive the returning soldiers, has cost the state from six to eight lakhs of Rupees a month. We will not open the year ungraciously by begrudging the cost of this gathering, when we remember the gratification it must afford to those on whom this honor is bestowed, or the effect which the assemblage of such an army on such an occasion may produce on all those who have been anticipating the extinction of our rule.

But what is that procession crossing the Bridge, with all the "pomp and pride and circumstance of war;" and what objects are those covered with the embroidered trappings of the Governor General's State Elephant? They are the Heathen Gates of Somnath, "the trophies of our victory over the Affghans." In that vast assemblage of forty thousand troops, there is not one minister of our holy religion; but what matters it?— There are the holy sandal wood gates, which once adorned a heathen temple, and which, after the lapse of Eight centuries of improvement, a Christian Governor General is about to restore to it, with more than heathen parade.

THE COMPLETION OF THE REGIMENTS.—The Governor General has at length filled up the Regiments which suffered so severely during the calamitous retreat from Cabul; and in a mode which is likely to create universal dissatisfaction through the army. The principle of regimental promotion has now been set aside, for the first time, and the vacancies have been supplied for the most part from other Regiments. Of those who had a claim to these steps a great number have thus been disappointed while those whom it is intended to serve, have in many instances found their prospects deteriorated by the change. At the same time officers, who have no personal interest in these mutations, are dismayed by the abrogation of the prescriptive rule on which they have hitherto been accustomed to look for their advancement. They naturally argue, that if the rule has been broken through in one instance, its integrity is gone, and that what is an innovation to-day, will be a precedent to-morrow. If, when a Regiment has been deprived of three-fourths of its officers by one calamity, the vacant steps are to be distributed among other corps, what is to prevent a repetition of this arrangement, when half the officers of any Regiment have been annihilated by any other calamity? They reason justly, that the rule of promotion by seniority is the vital principle of the army; that it cannot be violated without depriving the service of its covenanted and vested rights, and that this rule has been held sacred even in extreme cases, of the same character with that which has now occurred. To instance only one of many instances. The 37th Madras Regiment lost half its officers in the Golconda, not three years ago, on her way to China, yet the vacancies were filled up in the Regiment, and those who survived enjoyed all the benefit of the steps, which had been created by those who perished. A right which is held in so sacred a light, ought not to have been infringed, except upon the strongest and most palpable necessity. And what necessity was there for violating it in the present instance? None whatever. The only plea which can be offered is, that some inconvenience might possibly have arisen, if officers of extreme youth and great inexperience had been pushed on towards the head of a Regiment; that is to say, if four young men had risen earlier than usual to the rank of Major, and acquired the chance of commanding the corps. Yet even this disadvantage might have been obviated, by placing Lieutenant Colonels in command of the Regiments. But it is much to be doubted, whether the acquisition of such a command by men in the vigor of manhood would have been half so great a disadvantage as that to which the army is constantly exposed, by the responsibility of a Regiment being placed in the hands of dotards, in the last stage of mental decrepitude. On the contrary, it might turn out to be a solid advantage to have a young and active man in command of a corps. In the Queen's Service, men are constantly rising, by the principle of purchase, to the head of Regiments, while yet the fire of youth is in them. There is therefore no reasonable ground, even upon the score of inconvenience, for thus departing from prescription, and invading the privileges of the army. The officers enter the service with the clear understanding, that every step occasioned by the calamities of war or of climate, belongs to those who survive; and it is no argument for breaking this rule, that the vacancies have been numerous, and the good fortune of the survivers unusual. When men are required to submit to the deterioration of their prospects by the inactivity of a season of peace, it is unjust to deprive them of any incidental advantages which may arise from a season of active service. The army has undoubtedly been wronged by the present arrangement; and as neither Government nor the public interests are any the better for it, we think it becomes every Regiment, individually, to transmit a respectful petition to the Court of Directors and to the Board of Control, praying that the order may be reconsidered, and that the principle which has been so long the acknowledged rule of promotion, may be upheld.

THE SALE LAW, FOR THE THIRD AND LAST TIME.—A friend, on whose judgment in all matters connected with the Revenue laws, we place great reliance, has favoured us with some observations on the two articles, which have appeared during the past month in this journal, relative to the working of the new Sale Law. We have carefully gone over the argument, and frankly confess, that the question wears a different aspect in the light in which he has placed it. It is not clear however that the Act intended, that the days fixed for the sale of land for arrears of past years, or for arrears due on account of estates other than that to be sold, should correspond with the days fixed by the Board for sales on account of the current year. Reasoning from the analogy of circumstances, any man would be justified in supposing, that the rules which applied to the one were not intended to apply to the other; and that the day of sale in the one case was to be fixed by the Board and remain unaltered, and in the other to be fixed by the Commissioner and the Collector, with no other principle of fixity, than that fifteen clear days must intervene between the publication of the Notification and the day of sale. Upon this supposition we were led to the opinion that if the Notification, in the latter case, did not happen to have been published fifteen clear days before the day which had been fixed for the sale, the sale itself might be postponed till the time had expired. We do not think it was the intention of the Legislature, that sales for arrears which were to be peremptory without any Notification to the landholders, and sales which were conditional on the publication of notices for the information of the defaulting landlord, should follow the same rule of time and precision.

Supposing therefore, that the days for the sale of estates in arrears for the revenue of the preceding year may be fixed by the Collector and Commissioner, the law may, without any violence, be taken to mean, that if the fifteen clear days of Notification have not expired when the day arrives, the sale may be put off till that period has elapsed; but it is to be remembered that no payment made by the defaulter after sunset of the day preceding the day which may thus have been fixed in the Notification, will stop the sale of his estate. And as it was evidently the intention of the law, that notice of the intended sale should reach the defaulter fifteen clear days before his lands were sold by auction, it is necessary that this intention should not be defeated by any construction of it. Hence it appears advisable to issue a fresh advertisement, in order that a sufficiently long intimation may be given to him of his danger. Thus, supposing that the day fixed for the sale be 31st of January next; and that the Notification be not affixed at the Cutchery of the landholder before the 20th of that month, although the Collector might possibly, under a fair construction of the law, postpone the sale to the 5th of the next month, yet he could not postpone the period for the payment of the arrear by the Zemindar; and unless that sum was paid on the evening of the 29th, that is to say, within nine days after the Notification had been made known to the defaulter, his estate must be sold. This course would appear to be contrary to the equitable provision of the law, and in such a case, we think it would be but reasonable to give him the chance of saving his estate by renewing the proclamation. But the Collector may at any time prevent the occurrence of such a difficulty, by issuing his Notification a month before the day fixed. It is not necessary, that the landholder should acknowledge the receipt of the notice,—were that the case, he would always be out of the way. The messenger has only to affix it at his residence and retire, with sufficient evidence of his having thus served it.

THE BALI-KHAL BRIDGE.—We have much pleasure in publishing a letter from An Observer, on the subject of this useful undertaking. He places the matter altogether in a new light. We were not previously aware, that the Native gentry had taken so deep an interest in the question, and we think there is every reason to hope that their laudable exertions will be seconded by Government. The utility of the bridge is unquestionable. The fact, that the natives propose to raise half the sum, or 2[illegible]000 Rupees, among themselves towards its completion, would of itself form a sufficient answer to all the objections, which the Correspondent of the Hurkaru has urged, or may yet urge against it; [illegible] it is but reasonable that Government should lend its assistance to this enterprise. It would be reasonable even if no funds were available, and if they were required to be drawn from the ordinary resources of the country. Nothing can be more consonant with the duty of the British administration, than to offer to meet one half the expenses of such works, when the native community offers a voluntary subscription of the other half. The funds of the state could not be laid out more advantageously in the improvement of the country, than in thus affording a stimulus to the zeal and generosity of the people. But when a fund to the extent of 80,000 Rupees exists, which Government has pledged itself to devote to the object of facilitating the means of internal communication, the projected bridge has an unquestionable claim on at least a fourth of this sum. We consider it therefore the duty of the Ferry Committee to lose no time in addressing the public authorities, with the view of obtaining a promise of one half the expense from the surplus funds in the Hooghly district, as soon as the other moiety shall have been raised by the public. Such an engagement would give a new impulse to the subscription now in progress, and change our hopes into certainty.

THE HARDSHIP OF EUROPEANS HAVING THEIR SUITS DECIDED BY NATIVE JUDGES.—The individual who reported a certain case to the Englishman, which appeared in that journal on the 8th of the last month, deserves attention, were it only for his indefatigable perseverance. In addition to the notice which appeared in that paper, a second reference has been made to the same case in the Agra Ukhbar of the 24th December; and we have been favored with a letter which expresses much surprize at our having omitted to take it up. It would be difficult to account for such repeated importunity, except by ascribing it to a common origin.

The case thus brought forward is one of great hardship, but it appears to us to have arisen from an unaccountable misapprehension of the rules laid down for the guidance of the Courts. To prevent the recurrence of such acts of injustice, it is not necessary, as our correspondent suggests, to repeal the Act which subjects Europeans and Natives to the same tribunal, and which the Europeans have been accustomed to describe as the Black Act. We think this will appear self evident from a very cursory examination of the case.

In the year 1837, it was determined that the original cognizance of all suits should be vested in the Uncovenanted Judges, the great majority of whom are Natives, leaving to the European officers the higher and more important function of hearing appeals from their decisions. The next year it was ordained by a Circular Order, that no suits should be referred to a Principal Sudder Ameen, in which the documentary evidence was in the English language, unless that officer was acquainted with it. The year after, this Order was modified, and it was directed that "the mere circumstance of the initial petition reciting the existence of an English document in support of a claim, was not to constitute a necessary ground for retaining the case on the Judge's file." The party, who tendered an English document to a Native Court, was required to file an Oordoo translation with it. In order that substantial justice might be rendered in every case, the Native Judge was directed, after the original and the translation had been filed, to send both up to the European Judge, who was instructed, with due advertence to the nature of the English writing and of the transaction to which it related, to use his own discretion in referring the suit to the Native Judge, or in retaining it on his own file.

The Agra Ukhbar, of the 24th December, says, that the second order rescinds the first, which it does not. The Editor calls this second order, "a precious Circular;" and so indeed it is, for it was manifestly dictated by a high sense of the duty of doing justice between man and man. It was intended, on the one hand, to prevent the unnecessary interference of the European Judges in cases cognizable by the Native Judges, merely on the ground that there was one single document written in English. It was intended, on the other hand, to prevent injustice, by giving the European Judge an opportunity of determining, from the character of this English deed, and its relation to the matter at issue, whether the ends of justice would not be promoted by retaining the case on his own file. The order itself is perfectly unobjectionable. The grievance, the just grievance, of which our correspondent complains, has arisen, not in consequence of its provisions, but owing to a total departure from them.

The case, as represented by the complainant, is this: A suit was brought by one European against another to the Civil Judge, who referred it to the Principal Native Judge of his Court. The party or parties thereupon represented that there were sixty or seventy documents in English, which it was next to impossible to translate into Hindoostanee, with sufficient accuracy to convey the meaning of them. It was entirely unnecessary for them to have added this latter clause to their petition. It was quite enough for them to have stated, that there were half a hundred English deeds to be read and digested, before the Judge could reach the marrow of the case. The lessons of stern experience have taught us, that nothing defies translation so effectually as English deeds drawn up by a thorough English lawyer. On receiving the representation, the Judge is stated to have written, that by the order of Oct. 31st, 1839,—the purport of which we have given above—he had no option but to send all cases to the Native Judges, whether connected with English documents or not, and that when the Principal Sudder Ameen sent in the papers, he would, if he deemed it necessary, retain the suit on his own file. Here one link in the chain of events is wanting, for we are not told, whether the Judge, on seeing the sixty barely intelligible English documents translated into utterly unintelligible Oordoo, determined to take the trouble of examining the suit himself; but as we are told that an appeal was made against the Judge's order to the Sudder, and that this Court decided that there was no occasion to change his order, we are led to suppose that the Judge instructed the Principal Sudder Ameen to make out the sixty translated documents in the best way he could, and decide the case. We are further informed, that this Officer, when the case came on finally in his tribunal, had the good sense to acknowledge his inability to decide it, and to send it back to the Judge. And thus eight months of precious time, and all the labour and expense of translating the aforesaid sixty documents into Oordoo, were lost.

Now the question is whether this grievance was occasioned by the Act, facetiously denominated the Black Act, or was it because the Civil Judges, and the Court of Sudder Dewanny were unable to comprehend the meaning of a certain Circular Order, the object and phraseology of which are as clear as the sun in the month of May. We trace it to this latter cause; we think, that if the Judges of the controlling or of the Zillah Court had rightly interpreted the order to signify, that no suit, of which the documentary evidence was beyond the clear and undeniable comprehension of a Native Judge, should be transferred to his Court, they would have escaped the censure of our correspondent, and retained the confidence of the public.

THE RATES OF FREIGHT ON THE HINDOOSTAN Steamer have been made public since our last issue, and they appear to be as reasonable, as the rates of passage money are the reverse. It is scarcely to be expected that much indigo or silk, or indeed of any other produce will be despatched by Steamers, except under very extraordinary circumstances. The bulk of freight will probably consist of books and pamphlets, the chief value of which consists in their being fresh. The additional expense, as now established, of importing them through Egypt, bears no proportion to the advantage which will be enjoyed of receiving them within two months after their appearance in London. The charge for a cubic foot of literature is fixed at Seven Rupees and a half; and for this price one may import, on an average, twelve ordinarily sized octavo volumes, the cost of which at the present time, at the booksellers, would be within Eighty Rupees. We may therefore expect, that when a monthly intercourse has been established from Calcutta to Suez, all the periodical publications, as well as the most interesting works of the month, will be placed within the reach of the reading public at a very small additional charge. Thus an additional interest will be given to every political and intellectual movement in our own beloved native land; and India will cease to be regarded as the land of exile.

We adverted last week to the subject of postage on the monthly steamers; and the question becomes the more interesting, as our prospects of a regular monthly communication becomes more proximate. Those who are in the habit of commissioning newspapers from England,—and the number of them will now be greatly augmented,—will naturally be anxious to make arrangements for receiving them by our own steamers; and it is therefore important that the amount of steam postage should be distinctly understood. At Bombay, no charge whatever is made on the receipt or the delivery of either letters or papers. In the case of the India, letters were charged at the rate of two annas for each letter and an anna for each newspaper. But there is one point on which it is important that the present system should be reformed. We allude to the arrangement by which the Steam postage of all letters, which are despatched from India or England, is thrown upon people at home, who are far more impatient of a shilling postage than we are of that of a Rupee.

It is very unreasonable that our friends and correspondents at home should be required to pay for the letters they receive as well as for those they send; and it is highly desirable that the arrangement should be modified. The burden ought to be more equitably distributed; and the parties on both sides of the water should be required to pay only for the letters they may respectively send. This would tend in no inconsiderable degree to increase the correspondence; for many are now deterred on motives of delicacy from writing to their friends at home and entailing on them a heavy charge for postage. The subject ought to be taken up by the local Government, the depository of our wishes, and to be brought through its agency before Her Majesty's Ministers at home.

WEEKLY EPITOME OF NEWS.

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 29.

— We are happy to learn that Lord Auckland has subscribed 6000 Rs. to the Affghan Relief Fund.

— In consequence of the Hindoostan Steamer's starting for Suez on the 14th of January, the departure of the India Steamer has been judiciously postponed to the 10th of February. In the beginning of March we shall probably have the Tenasserim sent to Suez by Government; and the Hindoostan will be back—that is to say, if she takes the best coal the country affords—in time to start in April.

— Letters have been received from Ferozepore, dated the 17th of December, on which day the troops, which formed the garrison of Jellalabad, crossed the Sutlege and were received in the most flattering manner by the Governor General. We have copied an account of the procession from the Englishman. It is gratifying to find that two alterations have been made in the original programme, which are decided improvements. Dost Mahomed and the Affghan Chiefs were not required to be present at this triumphal procession, and the triumphal arch of brick and mortar was dispensed with.

— The following is Lord Ellenborough's own proclamation on this subject:

Camp Ferozepore, 17th December, 1842.—This day Major General Sir Robert Sale, G. C. B. passed the Sutlege at the head of all the troops which composed the garrison of Jellalabad.

The Major General was received at the foot of the bridge by the Governor General and his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief.

The Army of Reserve, formed in one line extending two miles and a half, received the Major General and the Garrison of Jellalabad in review order, with presented arms.

A salute of nineteen guns was fired as the Major General passed the centre of the line.

Captain Somerset, Military Secretary, and Captain Colville, A. D. C. to the Governor General, had on the 14th instant, conveyed the medals granted to the Garrison of Jellalabad, under an escort of the body-guard, to the camp of the Major General and all the officers and soldiers of the Garrison passed the bridge of the Sutlege, wearing the honor they have justly won.

— There was as usual a grand Masonic procession the day before yesterday to the Cathedral, when the Rev. Mr. Fisher preached a sermon to the Brethren. An account of this procession, also, we have copied from our contemporary.

— The collection on Christmas-day at the Cathedral amounted to the sum of 1719 Rs. Though the Presbyterians do not appreciate Christmas day, they were resolved to make the most of it, and a collection was made in the morning at the Kirk, after an eloquent sermon by Dr. Charles, which amounted to 2000 Rs. The fragments were gathered up in the evening after a sermon by Mr. Smith, and they amounted to 300 Rupees.

— The new arrangement regarding the Sessions, for which we are indebted to the present Chief Justice, comes into operation in the present year; in which there will be seven instead of four gaol deliveries. The Jury will, it is true, be summoned oftener, but it will sit a shorter time, and the inconvenience will not be increased; whereas these more frequent sessions will shorten the term of imprisonment for those who are charged with crime.

— The Hurkaru states, that the Ameers of Scinde have positively refused to sign the treaty, and are preparing themselves for a resort to arms. Should they hold out, General Napier will be able to give a good account of Hydrabad, and the army will not grumble at the millions of prize money the city is said to hold. It remains yet to be seen whether we have any more right to interfere with the independence of Scinde than with that of Affghanistan.

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 30.

— The Star, in the issue of this morning, gives a very different version of the conduct of General Nott in reference to the great gun, which Lord Ellenborough ordered to be brought from Affghanistan as a trophy, from that which has appeared in the papers. It relieves the General's conduct from that fractious appearance it once wore, and disproves the assertion that he ordered Major Sotheby to pay no attention to General Pollock's trophies. As we were instrumental in propagating the unfounded and injurious rumour, we have copied the refutation; and recommend it to our readers.

— The case of James Kiernan, who addressed a letter to us some time back, respecting what he supposed, were the unwarrantable assertions of the Press in his case, has now been found guilty at the Sessions, of an assault with intent to do some bodily harm.

— We have heard it stated, that the statement we made some time ago, that there was no Hindoo temple at Somnath to receive the gates, was not correct. Not having visited the spot ourselves, we were obliged to depend for our information on those who had been there, and had recorded their observations. We are happy to find our assertions corroborated by a Friend of the Englishman, at Bombay, who visited the spot not long since. He states that the temple is now in ruins, and that the only portion left standing is surmounted by a Mahomedan dome.

— General Pollock's division crossed the Sutlege on the 18th. Its march was hastened by the appearance of rain which might have swelled the river and swept away the bridges.

— The Star states, that the Loll Bazar, the great resort of sailors, has been in a more disorderly state than usual. In this assemblage of gin palaces and brothels, revel and riot are not only the order of the day, but of the night also. It is there that the native, who admires the majesty of Britain, in its far spread empire, beholds its sons reduced to a condition lower than that of the brute. On the evening of Sunday last, four of the drunken sailors seized a gentleman's buggy; two of them mounted the horse, one took his seat along side of the driver, and the other got up behind. The reporter says, he coaxed them off with two or three Rupees apiece; which would only enable them to make greater beasts of themselves than they were before.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 31.

— The Bombay Courier has just published a narrative of the sufferings to which the garrison of Ghuzni was subjected, after Col. Palmer had capitulated on the promise of a safe conduct to Peshawur. We have transferred the whole document to our columns. It will be read with a deep and painful interest. We hope next week to be able to offer some observations both on this narrative and on that which we republished last week, relative to the retreat from Cabul.

— Mr. William Francis Thompson, of the Civil Service, has put a period to his existence, in one of the dawk Bungalows at or near Agra.

— The whole of General Pollock's force having crossed the Sutlege, the 26th Native Infantry were, by order of the Governor General, formed into a hollow square, when his Lordship informed them that for their gallant conduct in the field, he would make them a Light Infantry corps. The especial notice taken of this corps is said to be regarded in Camp as somewhat invidious.

MONDAY, JANUARY 2, 1843.

— The Englishman has with the beginning of the present year, put on a new dress, and appears in new type. The Daily Star has been enlarged and is now published in two sheets. The Madras Athenæum and the Bombay Courier, both announce an augmentation of size, and thus we have an unequivocal token of the increase of the reading public in India.

— The Agra Ukhbar states, that the Rev. Francis St. Etienne passed through Sirhind on his way to Ferozepore, to minister to the wants of the Catholics in the army collected on the banks of the Sutlege, who are said to amount to four thousand.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 3.

— General Nott's Brigade marched across the Bridge of the Sutledge on the 23d of December, and was cordially welcomed to the British territories by the Governor General. His Lordship gave an entertainment to the General and his staff in the evening.

— At the Opium Sale held yesterday, 4965 chests of Opium were disposed of at a very high rate; the Behar averaged 1456 Rs. the Benares 1283 Rs., the chest. The result of the sale was nearly Seventy lakhs of Rupees. The clear profit to Government of this first sale of the year was half a million sterling.

— We find that Sir Charles Napier did actually insert in his Division Orders, "Gentlemen, as well as beggars, may if they like, ride to the devil when they get on horseback, but neither gentlemen nor beggars have a right to send other people there, which will be the case if furious driving be allowed in camp or bazar." This order ends in a marvellous strain, but we fully concur with the Bombay Times that it is "full of strong sense, wittily and sarcastically put;" more especially the 9th paragraph which orders that "Officers commanding Regiments must be particular not to fire till they see their front perfectly clear; to-day we fired on our own pickets."

— The report which was given yesterday, of farther disturbances in Bundlekund, appears groundless. After the difficulties which our armies have had to cope with in Affghanistan and the scenes of mortal struggle through which they have been called to pass, this insurrection in Bundlekund appears very lilliputian.

— We are happy to find that the gallant Captain Anderson, who has commanded the Shah's artillery throughout the whole of the campaign with such distinguished honour, is to be rewarded with the gunpowder agency at Ishapore.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 4.

— The Court Martial for the trial of the prisoners returning from Affghanistan has been organized at Ferozepore. Sir Joseph Thackwell has been nominated President.

— The two bridges across the Sutlege have been swept away by a sudden rise in the river. It was a fortunate circumstance that the last Brigade of the army of Affghanistan had passed over before the bridges disappeared.

— The Postscript to a letter which appears in the Hurkaru of this morning, states, that Shere Sing was mugrah, that is, sulky, and would not visit Lord Ellenborough.

— From the same journal we learn, that at the banquet given by the Governor General to the Illustrious Garrison of Jellalabad, while his Lordship alluded distinctly to the services of the officers, whose merits had been most conspicuously displayed during the siege, the name of Major McGregor was passed over in a manner which could not be mistaken. No man during that memorable siege, rendered himself more deserving of the commendation of Government by his indefatigable zeal, activity, and courage, than the late political Agent. Sir Robert Sale, it is said, proposed his health in the course of the evening, and acknowledged the important assistance he had derived from him during the investment of the town.

— We stated in our last number that the issue of general warrants was not common, much less universal, in the courts in the interior, and that it was the exception, not the rule; and we cited in exemplification, the recent case of the Native convert in the Court of the 24-Pergunnahs. We have been since informed that we did not put the case in its true light. The fact is that the Magistrate refused to issue his warrant, unless the Missionary would swear that the young man was at that identical time in a particular house or place; that he was there in close confinement, and that his life was in danger from certain persons who were to be distinctly named and described.

— The Enterprize Steamer is announced from Madras with Dwarkenath Tagore and thirteen of his fellow passengers on board.

CONTEMPORARY SELECTIONS.

MASONIC PROCESSION.

As is usual with the Masonic fraternity on St. John's day, they marched in procession to the Cathedral on Tuesday morning accompanied by the Artillery Band and a goodly display of banners and other emblems of the Mystic tie. The Revd. Mr. Fisher preached on the occasion an excellent and appropriate sermon, at the conclusion of which a collection was made among the brethren, the proceeds being devoted to the District Charitable Society. They then marched back to the Mason's Hall to do honor to their Provincial Grand Master, Dr. J. Grant, who is on the eve of departing to his native land ; and a more really sincere or affecting scene it has never been our fortune to witness before : may God grant that it may never fall to our lot again. The parting with this amiable and distinguished brother seemed to act upon every one present with the full force, which the separation by death impresses on the human mind. The scene was one which it is impossible to pourtray either by pen or pencil, and could only be felt and appreciated by those present on the occasion.

A farewell address was read by Brother Neave, couched in terms of gratitude and regret, sorrow and gladness ; gratitude for the many, many acts of kindness and courtesy which every brother had from time to time experienced from their master ; regret and sorrow—that the craft in India were about to be deprived of its greatest ornament ; and gladness from the reflection that a separation from all eastern ties would be the means of throwing him into the arms of his family in the west. In addition to the address a splendid piece of plate has been ordered to be manufactured by an eminent house in London, and to be ready for presentation on the arrival in Europe of the worthy brother for whom it is intended. A suitable and feeling reply was returned by Brother Grant, expressive of the heart-felt regret at the separation, but it was an act quite involuntary on his part, and that he was merely bending to the dictates of stern necessity, and sought his native land in order to restore to vigour a broken constitution.

In the evening a grand banquet was given in the Hall, and amidst the glare of chandeliers, transparencies, and all the good things of this life (under the weight of the latter item, the large tables literally groaned,) sat down some sixty or seventy brothers honored by the company of the Revd. Mr. Fisher and his two sons. All was harmony, cordiality, and good fellowship ; some excellent and appropriate speeches were made on the occasion, and the company broke up at 11 o'clock P. M.—Englishman, December 29.

THE ARRIVAL OF THE GARRISON OF JELLALABAD AT FEROZEPORE.

Our letters from the Army of Reserve, received this Morning, give the following account of the arrival of the Illustrious Garrison ;

Ferozepore, 17th Dec.—The long-talked-of and anxiously-looked-for arrival of Sir Robert Sale G. C. B., and the Illustrious Garrison on this side of the Sutledge took place this morning. The Troops drawn up, as named in the G. O. of the 15th instant, took their ground about half past 7, forming a line upwards of 2 miles in extent, on the road leading from the Camp to the river ; and on the right of the Artillery a line of 250 Elephants with their heads and faces painted and decorated according to the most approved native tastes, formed a street on both sides of the road connecting the right of the line of Troops with the foot of the bridge. The Governor General and Staff arrived at a very early hour at the foot of the Bridge where he and his suite alighted, and walked about until the arrival of His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief and Staff, who, I rather suspect, must have kept his Lordship waiting some time, for immediately he arrived—the Governor General shook hands with and spoke to him, and then some signal was passed to the other side for the troops to move. The Commander-in-Chief rode half way over the bridge adorned with the tricolored flags, and met Sir Robert Sale, G. C. B., who, however, was preceded by Lady Sale and her daughters on two of the Governor General's elephants, each wearing a cross belt, from which was suspended a Jellalabad medal.

The Governor General and suite dismounted and awaited Sir Robert's arrival under a Semianah a little to the left of the tri-coloured-arch which had been erected at the foot of the Bridge, and on the right of which His Lordship's Body Guard were drawn up, and here His Lordship remained until the whole of the Troops had passed, graciously acknowledging each salute.

The Commander-in-Chief and Staff rode some little distance with Sir Robert, and then took their leave when the gallant old soldier, proceeded on his march at the head of the 13th Light Infantry, the band playing the British Grenadiers, the 35th, the Sappers and Miners, Mountain Train and Oldfield's Squadron of the 5th Cavalry following, and passed down the line of troops to his own encamping ground which is between the Commander-in-Chief's and the Governor General's, each Regiment saluting as the head of his column arrived on their right flank.

Both men and officers appeared in good health, and looked extremely happy to get back to their own provinces. I never beheld so many elephants assembled on one occasion ; for, independent of the 250 which were paraded near the bridge, and made their salaams to the conquering hero, as he passed through them, there could not have been less than 100 more sowarree ones whose respective howdahs, charjamahs, pads, &c. bore to this scene of military pomp the fair forms, and joy causing countenances of the belles of the camp and station of Ferozepore ; and [illegible] there discover among them a [illegible] to the eye [illegible] of joy with [illegible] of grateful pride with others, but to many, alas ! of grief for those who have indeed passed away, but whose memories will live ever green in the bosoms of their brave companions in arms ; for it was impossible to look upon the gratifying sight of the return of this gallant little garrison, without the memory recurring to many painful events of the past. A salute of [illegible] guns was fired as the illustrious column arrived in the centre of our line, and thus ended a spectacle that has kept every one on the tiptoe of expectation for the last month, and probably has had a similar result to most highly wrought expectation, viz. that of disappointment that the picture of our own fancy has not been presented to us.—*Eng. ### NARRATIVE OF THE SUFFERINGS OF THE OFFICERS AT GHUZNI.

Our readers will peruse with interest the following extract from a letter recently received from Lieut. Andrew Crawford of the 3rd Bombay N. I. and late of the Shah's cavalry affording a more minute and particular account, than we recollect to have seen in print before, of the circumstances under which the great fortress of Ghuzni passed again into the hands of its former possessors.

"In my letter of the 9th instant, I promised, that at my earliest convenience, I would send you, a full, true, and particular account of all my adventures during the past year, and I now take up my pen to fulfil my promise, and without further preamble commence my narrative at once from the period of my quitting Candahar.

I left that city on the 30th October last year, having under my charge three state prisoners and seven hostages to be escorted to Cabul, and for the safeguard of the same, I was accompanied by a troop from my own corps and about forty Affghan horse under a chief called Guddoo Khan. It was on the 7th November we reached Oba ; we had marched rapidly, but in perfect peace, and as little expected to be attacked on the road, as I do at this moment ; you may imagine, therefore, how thunder struck I was, when Guddoo Khan entered my tent, bringing with him a native official of that part of the country, styled the Urz Beggie, who gave me an account of the disasters in Cabul on the second of the month, and as I afterwards found, bad as matters really were at the Capital, he made them out to be much more so. He strongly pressed my returning to Khelat in Ghilzi, saying, that there were 20,000 men round Ghuzni, and to go on would be to certain death. I considered, however, it would never do for an officer to turn back on a mere rumour of danger, and that should the man's story really be true, still I had a better chance of reaching Ghuzni which was only fifty-four miles off, than Khelat which was ninety. Tired though my horses were, they might make Ghuzni in one forced march, but they would not be able to get to the other station under a couple of days ; the road lay through the barren and hostile country of the Ghilzies, and, as I subsequently discovered, it proved that Urz Beggie was a traitor : he wished to get me back through the Ghilzi districts, as he himself was a man of that tribe, and would have raised the whole country about my ears : not a man of us would have escaped to tell the tale.—After duly considering all the pros and cons of the case, I mounted my detachment at 8 P. M. and moved on toward Ghuzni. We marched rapidly the whole night and by daylight had reached Nanee, about thirteen miles from Ghuzni, but the first streak of dawn shewed us that the people were on the alert, there were videttes on every hill, and in a very short time, word was passed from fort to fort, and their inhabitants turned out hanging on my flanks and rear, and firing with their rifles at us. Their horsemen were bolder, they swarmed round us like wasps, riding up, firing their pieces into our troop, and galloping off to reload. We were nearly helpless against such a foe, twice we charged and cut up a few, but the rascals always sought shelter near the numerous forts, that covered the plain, and then laughed at us ; in addition to not being able to catch the villains, we found that every time we charged or halted to shew a front, it only gave the enemy time to circle round our flanks and head us ; and their footmen also came up from the rear. Accordingly we left the high road altogether and turned out into the plain, where the foot would scarcely dare to follow us, and indeed by proceeding at the trot we pretty well shook off these gentry, but the horsemen still followed and to our troubles, I found that the ponies, on which the prisoners were mounted, were exhausted and could proceed no further, as they knocked up. I doubled the riders on the other animals, but one after another they gave in. One prisoner was cut down by a horseman of the enemy (plainly shewing there was no collusion between them) two others rolled over in a ditch where with their horse a top of them and their legs chained under his belly, I left them ; indeed I now found it was impossible I could ever get my charge into Ghuzni alive and I had only to decide on putting them to death or setting them at liberty. My instructions would have justified my pursuing the former course, but the poor wretches had clearly made no attempt to escape ; they were in no manner answerable for attack made on my party, as was evident from one of their number falling by the sword of our adversaries : and I conceived then, and do now conceive, that in letting these men go with their lives, I was not only acting according to the strict letter of my instructions, but that justice and humanity required I should not slay them in cold blood—had I put them to death, then Shums-odeen or Mahomed Uckbar would have been equally justified in taking our lives (the lives of all their prisoners) on the advance of Pollock and Nott on Cabul—I may add that the Court of Inquiry which I called for, after investigating all the circumstance decided, that I had acted perfectly right.—But to return to my story.—After following and harassing us for miles, the enemy drew off when we got near Ghuzni, and I reached that place about 10 A. M. on the 8th with the loss of all my baggage and prisoners, and fifteen men and twenty horses killed, and several wounded out of my little party.—Every day now brought us bad accounts from Cabul and the infatuation that appears to have seized the Chief Authorities there not only hurried them on to ruin at the Capital but also paralyzed us at Ghuzni.—Can you imagine that the necessary repairs and alterations in the citadel were not sanctioned, nor was Palmer permitted to lay in provisions! At the eleventh hour the Colonel took the responsibility upon himself and set to work; but most invaluable time had been suffered to pass unimproved, and when the enemy made their appearance under our walls, they found us but ill prepared for a siege, especially when it was not man alone we had to combat with, but the rigours of a winter, as intense as that of Canada. The enemy and the snow made their appearance together; on the 20th November, the town was surrounded with the one, and the ground covered with the other, but in a week afterwards, the insurgents broke up their investment of the place, on a report of McLaren's brigade advancing to our relief.—This permitted our destroying the villages and buildings within musket shot of the walls, and also afforded us a week's skating on the ditch, but on the 7th December the enemy returned in increased numbers and we were then closely confined to the walls.—The necessity and advantages of turning the inhabitants out of the town was not lost sight of, but unfortunately for us an idea had got abroad that the town people were strongly attached to us and that the sending out so many poor people to perish in the snow was an act of cruelty too great to be dreamt of.—The consequence was that the Townsmen entered into a correspondence with their countrymen on the outside and on the night of the 16th December having dug a hole through the town—they admitted their friends, who poured in by thousands, and compelled us after fighting all that night and next day to retire into the citadel.—It so happened that from this day the winter set in with increased severity, and its effect soon told fearfully upon the men.—The whole garrison, officers and men, were told off into three watches, one of which was constantly on duty, so that every one in the place was eight hours on duty out of the twenty-four, and you may imagine, that such constant work and exposure to the intense cold very soon rendered the Sepoys useless.—The snow lay deep, very deep, and often in the course of a single night would fall to the depth of a couple of feet. The thermometer sunk to ten, twelve, and even fourteen degrees below zero!! and to such weather were the natives of India exposed day and night, with no prospect of relief, and with no comforts to enable them to support their sufferings.—We were reduced to half rations of bad flour and raw grain, on alternate days, and a seer of wood per man each day was all that could be allowed, either for cooking or warmth.—The Sepoys were constantly soaked and unable to dry themselves got sickly, and the hospital was crowded with men whose feet had ulcerated from frost bites.—I do think, that if the enemy had pluck enough to have made a rush upon us, they could at any time, after Christmas day, have carried the works with very little difficulty.—As it was, however, they contented themselves with keeping up a smart fire with their rifles, and not a man could shew his head above the walls for a moment.—Up to the 15th January this work continued, and we lost three or four men daily, from the fire of their marksmen; but on the day mentioned some sort of a truce was entered into and active hostilities ceased, it being understood, we were to evacuate the place on the arrival of Shumsoodeen Khan.—This worthy did not arrive till the middle of the following month, and even then the Colonel managed to keep him in pay, till the beginning of March, but at last he and his chiefs would stand it no longer, and said that if we did not give up the place immediately, they would recommence hostilities, and we, being utterly helpless, having no water in the citadel, and the snow (on which we had depended for a supply) having all vanished, our provision being exhausted, and there being no prospect of the arrival of succour, had no resource, but to make the best terms we could, and trust to Providence that the Enemy would abide by them. On the 6th March we marched out from the citadel, under a treaty signed and solemnly sworn to by all the chiefs, that we should be escorted in safety and honour to Peshawur, with our colours, arms and baggage, and fifty rounds of ammunition per man. There was still some snow in the passes between Ghuzni, and till that should melt, and the necessary carriage could be procured for us, we were quartered in a portion of the town, immediately below the citadel. Scarcely had we entered our new abode, when our enemies flung off the mask and shewed how much they valued oaths made to Infidels. At noon on the 7th whilst nearly every man of ours were cooking, and we were totally unprepared for an outbreak, the Ghazees rushed upon our lines, and succeeded in carrying the houses in which my squadron had been placed. I was in the next house with Burnet of the 54th, and Nicholson of the 27th, there being no decent room for me in my own proper quarters. On hearing the uproar, I ran to the roof to see what was the matter, and finding what had taken place among my men, and that balls were flying thick, I called up Burnet; he had scarcely joined me, when he was struck down by a rifle ball, which knocked his eye out, and as he was thus rendered hors de combat, I assumed command of the two companies of the 27th that had been under him, and Nicholson and myself proceeded to defend ourselves as well as circumstances would permit. We were on the left of the mass of houses occupied by our troops, and the first and sharpest attacks were directed at us; the enemy fired our house, and gradually as room after room caught fire, we were forced to retreat to the others, till at last by midnight of the 9th our house was nearly burnt in halves; we were exhausted with hunger and thirst, having had nothing to eat or drink since the morning of the 7th; our ammunition was expended, the place was filled with dead and dying men, and our position was no longer tenable; but the only entrance in front of the house, was surrounded by the enemy, and we scarcely knew how to get out and endeavour to join Col. Palmer; at last we dug a hole through the wall of the back of the house; we had only bayonets to work with, and it cost us much labour to make a hole sufficiently large to admit of one man at a time dropping from it into the street below; but we were fortunate enough to get clear out of our ruined quarters in this way, and join the Colonel unperceived by the savages round us. As soon as day broke on the 9th they occupied our abandoned post, and shortly afterwards attacked and carried the next house, in which was poor Lumsden and his wife and thirty sepoys, every one of whom and their servants were put to death. On the morning of the 10th, Poett and Davis were obliged to retire from their posts, and the survivors here now assembled in the two houses held by Colonel Palmer and the Head Quarters of the corps. You cannot picture to yourself the scene these two houses presented; every room was crammed, not only with sepoys but camp followers, men, women, and children, and it is astonishing the slaughter among them was not greater, seeing that the guns of the citadel sent round shot, crushing through and through the walls. I saw high-caste men groping in the mud, endeavouring to discover pieces of unmelted ice that by sucking them, they might relieve the thirst that so tormented them. Certainly when that morning dawned I thought it was the last I should see on this earth, and so did we all and proceeded to make a few little arrangements, ere the final attack on us took place. The regimental colours were burnt to prevent their falling into the hands of the enemy, I destroyed my watch and flung it, and what money I had, over the wall of the ditch; I also burnt my poor wife's miniature, first cramming the gold frame of it into a musket being determined that one of the Ghazees should have his belly full of gold ere I died. Hour after hour passed on and still we sat expecting every minute to hear the shout of the final attack, but it came not, from our loop holes we saw the enemy swarming all around us, in every lane and house and on the hill of the citadel; the place was black with their masses, and as they themselves afterwards told us, there were not less than ten thousand men there thirsting for our blood. But it appears that Shumsoodeen had been affected with some qualms of conscience and had held a council of his chiefs on the subject of admitting us to quarter, I should tell you, that during the three previous days fighting, Shumsoodeen had repeatedly offered us terms, but they were such as we could not accede to; in as much as they commenced by desiring we would surrender ourselves to him and abandon the sepoys to the fury of the Ghazees. The sepoys, it appears, had held a consultation among themselves, and believing they had no chance of their lives, determined on forcing their way out of the town and endeavouring to get to Peshawur; when we first heard of this mad design and spoke to the men about it, they denied it; but on the 10th two Native Officers came forward and told us they had made up their minds to go off that night; that if we chose to accompany them, they would be exceedingly glad, but if otherwise they would go alone; it was in vain we pointed out the utter impracticability of their plan; they had got an idea among them, that Peshawur was not above fifty or sixty miles off across the country, and that there was a short cut to it, through the mountains, they immediately commenced digging a hole through the outer wall of the town, by which as soon as it got dark, they might march out into the country. Seeing that our men had now flung off all authority and were about to desert us, we had nothing further to do but to make the best bargain we could for our lives, Shumsoodeen and all the Ghazee chiefs again swore by all that was holy, that if we laid down our arms, we should be honourably treated, and sent to Cabool to the Shah as soon as possible; at 10 P. M. we surrendered. The chief sent and begged the officers to come into the citadel immediately, as the Ghazees were yelling for the blood of the Ferringee Kaffirs and he could not answer for our safety, if we delayed till daylight; accordingly we went up to the citadel and gave up our swords; the chief placing bodies of his men round our late quarters to keep the Ghazees from molesting the sepoys; a large party of these latter however, during the night endeavoured to put their ridiculous plan of flight into execution and made their way about two or three miles from the town; it came on to snow heavily; they got bewildered in the fields, and in the morning were all cut to pieces or made prisoners. For the first few days after we had surrendered, we were treated pretty tolerably; the chief and his brother used to visit and condole with us on the change of fortune we had experienced, and expressed their sorrow at the violence of their fanatical followers not having permitted their strict observance of the treaty, on which we had yielded up the Citadel to them, but gradually they discontinued their visits; every little thing we had managed to secure, such as watches, penknives, money, &c., was taken from us and we were strictly confined to a small room eighteen feet by thirteen. In it there were ten of us, so you may imagine we had not much room to spare: indeed when we lay down at night we exactly occupied the whole floor, and when we wanted to take a little exercise, we were obliged to walk up and down (six paces) in turns. Few of us had a change of linen and the consequence was, we were soon swarming with vermin, the catching of which afforded us an hour's employment every morning, I wore my solitary shirt for five weeks, till it became literally black and rotten, and I am really surprised none of us contracted any loathsome disease from the state of filth we were compelled to live in. On the 7th April we heard of Shah Soojah's murder, and from that date the severities of our confinement were redoubled; they shut and darkened the solitary window, from which we had hitherto derived light and air, and they also kept the door of our room constantly closed, so that the air we breathed became perfectly pestiferous. On the 21st of the month they tortured Colonel Palmer with a tent peg and rope, in such a manner that it is wonderful he ever recovered the use of his foot; I cannot in a letter explain the process of the torture, but we all witnessed it, and it was something on the principle of the Scotch boot described in "Old Mortality." We were told we should each be tortured in our turn, unless we gave up four lacs of rupees, which the rascals swore we had buried, and that if we continued obstinate, they told us, we should be blown from guns, beginning with the junior. This was a pleasant sort of life to lead, never being certain of that life for twenty-four hours together; I think a little similar experience would do some of the newspaper Editors a deal of good, and render them not quite so prone to lavish their criticisms on the conduct of unfortunates like ourselves, they sit under their punkahs, drink lal surab and write leading articles, laying down the law and talking as familiarly on Military matters "as maids" do "of puppy dogs" the self elected, self constituted judges of mankind. In the end of April our guards suddenly became particularly civil to us for a few days, and we found out they had a report of the advance of our troops; indeed up to the period of our actual release, we could always form a pretty shrewd guess, of what our troops were about by the treatment we experienced at the hands of our Captors; if there was any forward movement among our people, any arrival of reinforcements at Jullalabad or Candahar, &c. then we were treated well for a few days and we got better food, but if our people appeared to be idle and things remained in statu quo for a week, then our guard taunted us on the unwarlike spirit of Ferringee Armies; and boasted how they would exterminate them if they advanced. Gool Mahomed Khan, the brother of Shumsoodeen, who had always behaved more civilly towards us, than the big chief, was unfortunately for us, despatched to Cabool, on business, about the middle of April, but I believe it was owing to the receipt of a letter from him, that on the 12th May we were permitted to quit our prison room and walk on the terrace of the citadel for one hour, and we were told that similar kindness would be shewn us once a week (!!!) viz. on Friday, when Shumsoodeen was to make a kept of religious nic mic to a neighbouring shrine.—Even this we thought a great blessing and used to count the days and hours to each succeeding Friday, anxiously expecting the moment, when our guard would tell us we might breath God's fresh air, and look out on the green fields for the allotted period. I thought I had always been an admirer of the beauties of nature but I had never imagined that the time would have come, that the sight of a few ordinary fields of clover and wheat would have caused me such delight in their contemplation.

On the 15th June Gool Mahomed returned from Cabool bringing with him, some of the ladies of his brother's family; on their account we were told, we should be removed to other quarters and of course we expected a change for the worse, but, as it eventually proved, we were agreeably disappointed, just at this period one of our number, Lieut. Davis, 27th N. I, had sickened with Typhus fever; we had no medicines, no comforts for him and he lay on the ground delirious, raving about home and his family, and every hour proving worse till on the 19th death put an end to his sufferings. We read the burial service over him, and then made his body over to the guard to bury, but I am afraid, they merely flung the poor fellow into a ditch outside the gate. It was a melancholy ceremony, that burial service: few among us, I imagine, but thought it might be his turn next, especially now that sickness had broken out in such a shape; however, on the following day we were removed to another building, where we had three or four rooms to ourselves, and a court yard to walk about in, and our guard was replaced by a more civil set; this was a delightful change, and being greedy of fresh air after so long a deprivation of it, we made the most of our new berth by always sleeping in the open air in the court yard; it is true it was utterly impossible to get a minute's rest in any of the rooms allotted us, as they were swarming with the foulest vermin, so we thought it no hardship to have the stars for a canopy; for three months we never slept under a roof, or with any other covering beyond our sheep-skin cloaks. From this date the conduct of Shumsoodeen toward us improved greatly: he came to see us frequently and chatted in a kind manner, always telling us, we should shortly be set at liberty in exchange for Dost Mahomed, who was returning to Cabool, having been freed by our Government: this gave us renewed hopes of soon again becoming free agents, and our circumstances were improved and our guards more friendly toward us, our captivity was more easily borne, but still as time wore on, and nothing definite was learnt regarding our release, we again began to despair, especially when the middle of August arrived, and we seemed as far as ever from the attainment of our wishes: it was on the 19th August we had as usual wrapped ourselves up in our cloaks and taken lodgings on the cold ground for the night, when the chief suddenly entered the yard, and told us we were to march immediately for Cabool, and sure enough in half an hour afterwards, we found ourselves along in pairs in Kujiawans on each side of Camels, and moving toward the capital. How delighted we were to bid adieu to the walls of Ghuznie. I do believe, if we had known we were going to execution, the change would nevertheless have gladdened us. We reached Cabool in three days, without meeting any adventure on the road, but we were abused most grossly by the populace as we proceeded through the street of the city; fortunately it was in the dusk of the evening and but few people witnessed our arrival, otherwise they might not have confined their ill treatment to words. We went direct to Mahomed Ukhbar's quarters in the Balla Hissar, and from him we met with the kindest reception. I could not bring myself to believe that the stout, good-humoured, open hearted looking young man, who was making such kind inquiries after our health and how we had borne the fatigues of the journey, could be the murderer of Macnaghten and the leader of the massacre of our troops. He told us we had come most unexpectedly; that though he had written repeatedly to have us sent to him (as he had heard we were ill-treated by Shumsoodeen) yet no attention had been paid to his orders, and now that we had come, it was without any intimation of our approach, he bade us be of good cheer, as our future comfort would be his care, and we should find ourselves treated like officers and gentlemen. After many similarly civil speeches he ordered dinner and sent for Troup and Pottinger to see us; when they arrived, the whole of us, Mahomed Ukhbar, his chiefs, and ourselves, all sat down to the best meal I had had for many a month. The Wuzeer (as he always styled himself) chatted and joked away on indifferent subjects during the meal, and shortly after its conclusion dismissed us by saying he would make us over to the care of Pottinger and Troup for the night, and we might go and have a chat with them in private, as doubtless we were anxious to do so. On the following morning the arch fiend sent us an excellent breakfast, and horses to carry us out a few miles to the fort, where the other British prisoners were living and he desired a list of our wants, regarding clothes, &c. might be made out, and they should be furnished. We found our countrymen living in what appeared to us a small paradise; they had comfortable quarters, servants, money, and no little baggage, and a beautiful garden to walk about in. To our great regret we had only been four or five days in this Elysium, when we were sent off to Bameean, being thus away from the immediate care of Mahomed Akbar we soon found ourselves called on to rough it once more. Tents had been sent for the use of the ladies, but our guards would only pitch them, when it suited their convenience, and consequently the poor women and children had frequently to bivouac with us men and that too in the nipping night air of the mountains; none of them however I am happy to say, suffered in the least, and they one and all bore their privations most admirably. I see that Johnson and one or two others have already given very good accounts in the public prints of our doings at Bameean and return from thence to the blessings of freedom, so I will not inflict a second edition of the tale upon you. The public papers will also long ere this reaches you have given you some information anent our doings at Istaliff and our retrograde march from Cabool, during which there was a good deal more fighting than on the advance.

Camp at Boorlain, 21st Nov. 1842.—We are now to march on the Punjaub side of the Indus, having crossed that river the day before yesterday, and I trust bid a final adieu to Affghanistan and its villainous race of inhabitants. To judge by the expressions uttered by the troops, European and Native, as they filed across the river, I was not the only one who bitterly detested the land and the people we had left.

Rawul Pindee, 25th Nov. 1842.—We arrived here this morning and I think I may now entrust this precious epistle to the tender mercies of the dawk runners, with no great fear of the mails being looted. Nothing new within the last three or four days, except that I hear they have already commenced cutting each other's throats in Cabool and Candahar. We have a fine view of the mountains of Cashmere from this."—Bombay Courier.

SCINDE.

By the latest accounts, received from Scinde and dated the 12th instant, it appears that the Ameers have positively refused to sign the treaty proposed to them; and that they have already commenced assembling their forces. Ali Moorad Khan (of Deejee) until the present moment our friend, has joined the chief of Khyrepore, and by the last intelligence, one of the Hyderabad Ameers was daily expected at the former place. The Ameers, when united, can muster about thirty thousand men; but, it seems to be their intention to act merely on the defensive, and to await any attack that may be meditated by us, at Khyrepore in the first instance, and if beaten thus, to make a final stand at Hyderabad. Acknowledging their own weakness and the power of the British, they yet declare most positively that they will not sign the treaty.

A portion of General Napier's force has crossed the Indus and encamped at Roree (about 16 miles from Khyrepore); the Shikarpoor Brigade has been called in. These, together with the troops at Sukkur, will form a somewhat considerable corps d'armée, amounting to about 7,000 Native Infantry, and 1,500 Cavalry, together with a troop of Horse Artillery (late Shah's), a Horse Field Battery (9-pounders), a Camel Battery (also 9-pounders), four 8-inch Howitzers, and several heavy pieces of ordnance. Besides these the Head Quarters, 22d Foot, were expected to arrive immediately, completing the European portion of the force, to about 900. At Karachee, moreover, there are two Regiments of Foot.

According to the information, which is before us, the principal terms of the treaty, upon which the British-Indian Government insists, appear to be these—the cession in perpetuity to us of Kurachee, Tatea, Sukkur, Bukkur, and Roree; also of a tract of forest-land, one hundred yards in breadth, on either bank of the Indus, for the purpose of supplying the steamers with fuel:—the whole territory North of Roree and on the East bank, to be ceded by the Ameer of Khyrepore to Bhawul Khan; the Company's Rupee to be declared the only legal tender, and the chiefs to cease coining in their own name.—Hurk. Dec. 29.

THE ENVOY'S MURDER.

Various accounts have been given to the public of the manner in which Sir. W. Macnaghten met his death; the following related by an eye witness may be relied on:—

"On the forenoon of the 23d December there was great excitement in cantonments by the rumour that the Envoy had ordered two regiments to be in readiness, as he was going out to a conference with Mahomed Ukhbar, who had promised to deliver Naib Ameenoolah up to [illegible] to come into cantonments himself.

The Envoy now proceeded out by the south Seea Sung gate of cantonments, accompanied by twelve sowars of his escort and Captains Trevor, Lawrence and Mackenzie. He proceeded along the plain, to a nullah or canal, about a quarter of a mile from the gate, where he was met by Mahomed Ukhbar and party; and carpets were now spread on the sloping bank, and the Envoy and Mahomed Ukhbar sat down surrounded by their respective followers. The Envoy sat on the rising face of the bank, and Mahomed Ukhbar opposite him, attended by Mahomed Khan, Mahomed Shah Khan, Uzeez Khan, and a son of the Shah Ghazee Khan, and immediately behind him Alee Khan, a son of Saqee Khan and Surarax Khan, brother of the Naib Ameenoolah.

It appears that the previous night a letter had been received by Mahomed Ukhbar, purporting to be from the Envoy, making most extravagant offers to him, provided he would come over and bring with him the "head and front of the rebellion," Naib Ameenoolah; that this letter was shown to the Sirdars, who could not believe it, and the Naib accordingly sent his brother to be an eye and ear witness of the truth of it. It was also decided that the Envoy should be seized and brought a prisoner into the city, where they could force him to whatever measures they pleased, but if he resisted he was to take the consequences; and Mahomed Ukhbar declared he should perform the act himself. Accordingly in the forenoon Mahomed Ukhbar wrote to the Envoy to come out to him as he had enticed the Naib into Hejat's fort, and would deliver him up.

On being seated, and after the usual salutations and compliments, the Envoy hinted to Mahomed Ukhbar that he wished the conference to be private, and he immediately ordered his followers out of the circle. Mahomed Ukhbar now took a letter out of his breast, and proceeded to read it paragraph by paragraph, to each of which the Envoy gave his assent. On finishing it, Mahomed Ukhbar Khan thrust the letter into his vest, exclaiming with a sneer, "We cannot, sahib, settle the business here, you must come into the city with us." At the same time giving the signal to his followers, he seized the Envoy by both his wrists, and attempted to drag him forward. This movement was seconded by one of Mahomed Ukhbar's followers, seizing the Envoy from behind and forcing him on. The Envoy violently resisted, and a severe struggle now ensued—the one party endeavouring to force the Envoy forward, and he using every exertion to extricate himself—exclaiming, "uz bure khoda—uz bure khoda." The Envoy, who was a powerfully strong man, forced himself from Mahomed Ukhbar's grasp, and hurled him from him, Mahomed Ukhbar reeled back and fell to the ground. He now started up alarmed and fired his pistol at the Envoy, exclaiming in Pushtoo—"Woozia ouruttogheim" "kill the rascal." He hit the Envoy on the left breast; Mahomed Shah Khan now fired his matchlock into the Envoy's side, and Alee Khan fired from behind. It was all the work of a moment. and the Envoy did not fall till he received the third ball. The whole party lost not a moment, but instantly mounting their horses, rode off to the Hejat's fort, half way between the city and cantonment.

Immediately on the signal from Mahomed Ukhbar, and his seizing the Envoy by the wrists, Trevor, Lawrence and Mackenzie were simultaneously seized by his followers, deprived of their arms, hurried forward, mounted on horseback, each behind his man, and carried off towards the city. Poor Trevor had made himself particularly obnoxious to the Affghan Chiefs by his assiduity in cutting down their allowances wherever the smallest plea offered. He had for a long time been a marked man and denounced by them, and his death determined on. He was seated on horseback behind Mahomed Riza Khan. It so unluckily occurred that they were met on the way by a Ghilzie, Naib Moola Momia, who, riding up enquired what feringee he was carrying away. The moment he heard Trevor's name, he drew his sword, dragged him off the horse, cursed him for a "coost-i-sun" and literally cut him to pieces.

The Envoy's favourite Hindu Jemadar, who accompanied him every where, a noble looking fellow, was cut down by his master's side.

The Envoy's twelve mounted escorts, immediately on the shots being fired, turned tail and came into cantonment at full gallop, declaring that a party of the enemy had come suddenly on them, and made prisoner of the Envoy and sahibs, and carried them into the city.

It will now be naturally asked, who commanded the escort, and where was the Captain of it at the time? It so unfortunately occurred that the Envoy, to forward the interest of his nephew, Lieutenant Conolly, the Captain of the escort, had sent him into the Balla Hissar to do a little politics, and in the mean time Captain Lawrence had agreed to take charge. On the fatal morning instead of his being at the head of his men, he had alighted, and was in attendance on the conference. This fatal error was the death of the Envoy. Had he been at the head of his men and made a rush at the moment of the attack on the Envoy, it is probable we would have a different tale to tell today. The troopers themselves, on being upbraided with cowardice by the people in cantonment, retorted by saying "they had no sahib to lead them on," and the Affghans themselves declared, "that when violence was first offered to the Envoy, had the sowars rushed forward to the rescue, the Envoy would, in all probability, have escaped!" We all know how helpless the Indian soldiery are without an European leader, and how bold with a British officer to command them and lead them on. This is but one among many instances of that total want of esprit de corps which was alas, so manifest during the unfortunate transactions of the doomed cantonment.

When Mahomed Ukhbar and party had reached the Hejat's fort, and observed that no demonstration was made from cantonment, but that all was quiet as usual there, he sent off a couple of suwars who tied a rope round the Envoy's body and carried it off. On the way the head was cut off and fastened on a spear, and exhibited through the bazars, the body, with that of Trevor's also was taken to the market place, where they were hung up, exposed for many a day to every indignity and to the lawless gaze of an Affghan populace.

But let us finish our tale. Will it now be said after this breach of all the laws of nations, after this infraction of all treaties, and the murder of the representative of Majesty, they had nothing else for it, but sacrificing and abandoning every thing and making a forced march without bag and baggage to Jellalabad? Not a bit of it. The General, who seemed to be bitten with the political mania, and thinking nothing could be done without the assistance of the [illegible], named politicals, called into his council. Major Pottinger, who, the very day the Envoy's death was announced, commenced drawing out a new treaty with the Envoy's murderer! He continued this folly for twelve whole days, till the Affghans had matured all their plans, till the snow was a foot deep on the ground, the thermometer down to zero, and every thing fully prepared for the total annihilation of our army. "Can such things be and pass by us like a summer's cloud without our special wonder?"—Delhi Gazette, December 21.

GENERAL NOTT.

We have received letters from General Nott's Camp of a late date which tend to contradict many of the reports that have recently gone the rounds of the India Journals and to place the conduct of the Officer commanding that Force as regards the abandonment and destruction of the notorious Cane Gun, [Lord Ellenborough's pet trophy] in a very different light from that in which it was originally represented.

It appears that one of the causes of the difficulty experienced in carrying on this cumbrous piece was the want of a suitable or efficient Carriage, none of the four 18 pr. Carriages which General Nott had brought from Candahar being available, as the two made over to General Pollock's Division were destroyed on the return march from Caubul to Jellalabad, and the remaining two with General Nott's Division were employed in the conveyance of the Somnath Gates, and not destroyed as was erroneously stated and generally believed.

This Gun accompanied General Pollock's Force as far as Dakkha, but when the two Divisions separated at that point, it was entrusted to the rear Division under the command of General McCaskill. Here the difficulties of the road, the inefficient nature of the carriage, and the wretched, jaded state of the miserable draught cattle brought it to a stand still in the Lundekhanna Pass, there not being sufficient men available, with the weakened 3d Brigade, to bring it on in addition to the numerous store and ammunition carriages which required assistance, and which could not be left behind.

Under these circumstances Captain Lane the Commissary of Ordnance in charge of the Park with the 2nd Division wrote to Major Sotheby commanding the Artillery with General Nott's Division requesting him to destroy the piece as they were unable to carry it on farther without endangering the safety of the more valuable stores.

Major Sotheby reported the circumstance to the General, who naturally stated his objections to order compliance with any such request, as he was unaware how far the measure might be consonant with General Pollock's views and opinions, the more particularly as the last communications from that Officer had been expressive of a strong desire to carry on the gun in accordance with the wishes of the Governor General;—but he desired Major Sotheby, if Captain Lane considered himself justified or had sufficient authority for the destruction of the piece, to furnish him with powder and any other assistance he required. The following morning the Advance of General Nott's Division perceived the Gun at the bottom of a Ravine, where it had evidently been pushed down by the Rear Guard of General McCaskill's Force. When it thus became apparent that the Gun must be either abandoned to the Enemy or destroyed, General Nott immediately ordered its destruction which was accordingly carried into effect by Major Browne with a party of H. M.'s 41st Regiment, and not by Captain Thomas or Captain Mackison as erroneously reported.—Col. Star, Dec. 29.

GALLANT CONDUCT OF AN OFFICER.

We have great pleasure in publishing from the London "Naval and Military Gazette" of the 22nd of October last, the following account of an instance of intrepidity and humanity on the part of a young Officer in the Bengal Service, which circumstance we do not remember to have seen noticed in any Indian Journal.

The Officer to whom it alludes is we believe Ensign Francis Jacques Burgess of the 74th Regiment of Native Infantry, the only individual of that name in the Company's Army and the date of whose commission corresponds with the period mentioned.

So bright a commencement augurs a noble career in the Service:—

"Gallant Conduct.—During the passage of the Princess Royal, Capt. Brock, from Madras to Calcutta on the 22nd July, the carpenter, who was working on a stage over the side of the ship, by accident fell into the sea; Mr. Burgess, a cadet, who was on the poop, instantly threw a rope to him, but unfortunately the carpenter did not see it, and sank. Mr. Burgess then took hold of the rope and jumped overboard, and succeeded in reaching the man (who was quite insensible), and supported him until the boat took them both up in a very exhausted state. Mr. Burgess is, we understand, the son of Capt. Burgess, the late Commissioner of Police at Birmingham."—Cal. Star, Dec. 29.

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.

THE BLACK ACT.

To the Editor of the Friend of India.

SIR,—I have, in common with several of my neighbours, been much disappointed at receiving your paper of the 15th without finding in it any notice of the case reported in the "Englishman" of 3d, and noticed in the same paper of 13th Inst. regarding "the working of the Black Act in the Mofussil." A more vexatious instance of the incapacity of Natives to administer Justice to our countrymen could hardly have been found, and as the champion of Justice to India, you should not be wanting in your endeavours to prevent the continuance of a system so fraught with injustice, as that which at present obtains in the Mofussil.

I maintain that the Native Judges do not give the satisfaction to their own countrymen, that European Judges formerly did, and that the Natives have not the same confidence in their integrity. That there are good men among them capable of settling minor cases for which European Judges cannot have time, I do not mean to deny, and they are most useful when strictly watched by the European Judge; but it was surely a grievous mistake to transfer the Civil Suits entirely to Natives, few of whom had ever before gone through any ordeal to prove their fitness for the onerous duties now entrusted to them. The Judges of Zillahs have little if any control over the Principal Native Judges, as the appeal from them lies to the Sudder Court, and the Office of Judge in many districts is now a sort of sinecure; for, beyond a few Sessions Cases, and Appeals from the lower Native Courts, they have nothing to do. If they were required to go over the proceedings after the investigation by the Native Officers, and then let the decree be given, it would be a great check on the latter.

Although so much power has been conferred on Natives, they have been deprived of one portion of that exercised by Judges; a power that in bad hands, may be made the means of great oppression, but in a country like this, where frauds are alas! of such frequent occurrence, it has often proved a most salutary check. I allude to the power of "calling for Security while a case is pending," under Section 4, Regulation II. of 1806; as it is, a Principal Sudder Ameen cannot do it without first applying to the Sudder Dewanny Court for permission, and when such a measure, as calling for such Security, becomes requisite, it is very clear that all the moveable property of a defendant can be made away with, ere orders can be received from the Sudder; to procure which, in the ordinary course of business, two or three weeks at the least will be required. Some instances in point of excessive hardship have lately occurred at Benares and Ghazeepore. In the latter, a Native has been a severe sufferer it is said, by a European withdrawing himself and his property from the Court's Jurisdiction, before the necessary authority was received from the Sudder, and making it over to parties in Calcutta; perhaps some of your readers will report the case. If these men cannot be safely entrusted with an authority so obviously necessary, are they fit to hold the Office of Judge at all?

Now that the attention of Government can be spared to the improvement of the Judicial system of the country, let us hope something will be done ere long towards it. One great step to improvement in the Courts would be the introduction of men of integrity and knowledge, as Vakeels; qualities in which the present incumbents are sadly wanting, as all must know who have ever had the misfortune to have any dealings with them.

I remain,

Your obedient servant,

"MOOZAFIR."

In the Hurkaru of the 27th July last, a proceeding in the case of "Baboo Bandeb Sing" versus the "Rajah of Durbunga," held by the "Principal Sudder Ameen of Tirhoot," is stated. What was the result of the Appeal in that case? If correctly reported it was an infamous one. It is to be hoped that a report of the order of the Sudder will be published, if it has not already been done.

THE BALOO BRIDGE.

To the Editor of the Friend of India.

SIR,—The simpleton Correspondent of the Hurkaru, as you facetiously call him, not being content with your just remarks on the importance of the Balookhal Bridge has again made his appearance in the last Thursday's Hurkaru. Mr. Editor, he, the Correspondent, is not only unfortunate in his reasoning, but seems to be totally unacquainted with the merits of the case he is discussing with such confidence. I will try to set him right. The fact is that a Native Gentleman of Hooghly subscribed 5000 Rupees, towards the expenses of a suspension bridge on the Baloo khal on which the Hooghly Ferry Committee requested him to write a letter explaining the advantages the community will derive from the measure, for the purpose of circulating the same among the rich folks. As the people of the 24-Pergunnahs will participate larger in the benefits, and the Khal being situated within its jurisdiction, the Hooghly Committee resolved to send a copy of that letter to the Committee of the former district for co-operation. The accompanying is a copy of the letter alluded to, you can either publish it or not as you think proper. The subscription is, I am happy to hear, progressing in both the districts, notwithstanding the formidable opposition of the Hurkaru Correspondent. The estimated cost of the bridge is about 40,000 Rs., of which it is proposed to raise one-half by subscription and to apply to Government to grant the other half from the accumulated Ferry Funds. The accumulation in the Hooghly district alone exceeds, if I mistake not, 80,000 Rs., so the call upon Government to pay about ½ of what it has taken from a single district for a work of such public utility, will not be deemed I hope, either very selfish or unreasonable on the part of the people. If these facts will not convince the Correspondent of the Hurkaru, he is welcome to attribute as much aristocratical and private motives to the advocates of the Bridge as will gratify his feelings.

AN OBSERVER.

JS. EADAILE, Esq.
Secy. to the Surplus Ferry Fund Committee, Hooghly.

SIR,—Having been requested by the Committee to state the advantages the public is likely to derive from placing an Iron Suspension Bridge over the Khal at Bally, I have the honour to state that the Khal in question is situated within the Civil Jurisdiction of the 24-Pergunnahs at the distance of four miles north-west of Calcutta on the west Bank of the river Hooghly; it is a branch of the Surrosutty River, and is joined to the Hooghly at a large and populous village called Bally, from which it derives its name Balookhal. Since the discontinuance of Jharkandy road viâ Sulkea, all the merchandise from the Western Provinces to Calcutta, and vice versâ by land carriage passes over this Khal, and as it intercepts the great western road, innumerable travellers have to cross it daily. The extraordinary communication by this road may be gathered from the circumstance of the ferry collections of this Nullah having been increased from 500 Rs. to 3000 Rs. annually during the last few years. A bridge at this place will greatly tend to augment this communication and consequently there will be an accession to the commerce of the city of palaces, and its concomitant advantage to the country in general and its vicinity in particular. Independent of these, the local agriculture will be largely benefited. The principle Landholders, who own land in this neighbourhood, are Baboos Dwarkanath Tagore, Bycuntnath Chowdry, Unnadah Persaud Roy and the minor sons (now under the Court of Wards) of the late Hurrish Chunder Roy. What a blessing it will be to the Ryots, who, from miles distance take the produce of the lands daily to the Calcutta Market, and on the sale of which they chiefly depend for the payment of revenue. But what appears to me to be fraught with incalculable advantage to the people of Calcutta is, that this bridge, with the steam ferry bridge now in contemplation to be put over the Hooghly, will naturally connect this part of the country with the Suburbs of Calcutta. Numerous buildings will rise up simultaneously on this side of the river and afford a healthy and cheap residence to a large number of the new denizens of Calcutta. It will not be uncommon then for parties to go and return from Serampore in their evening drives. Although I have not exaggerated the advantages of the proposed bridge, yet I would humbly submit that if even a part of these be acknowledged by the cautious public, the work ought not to be delayed any longer from the comparatively small outlay required for the purpose.

I have, &c.

RELIGIOUS.

THE CLERGY OF ESSEX AND FIELD SPORTS.—As proof of the increased attention to official propriety and consistency now paid by the clergy of the Established Church, the diminished number of that body who qualify themselves for what are called field sports, by taking out game certificates, may be adduced. There are not more than 30 clergymen included in the first publication of the game lists for the county of Essex for the present year; the number was, within a few years, more than double.—Globe.

THE BAPTISTS IN DENMARK.—"MY DEAR BROTHER.—Considering the cordial and self-sacrificing interest which you hitherto have shown, in the good and evil fortune of your Danish brethren, I am convinced that the continued recital of the Lord's guiding of his people in this country will not weary you. And believing that the communication of our joys and sorrows may afford you, as well as many others of our English brethren, spiritual enjoyment, and even support, consolation, and encouragement, I take the liberty of exhibiting to you a concise survey of what has happened since my last report.

"After my property, as well as that of my brother Adolphe and friend Ryding, had been sold to pay the fines and costs in which we had been amerced, we were (unconditionally) liberated from prison, where my brother had lain on a bed of sickness, and which kept him confined to his couch for more than a month after our discharge. I myself did immediately enter on the duties of my mission, though somewhat suffering from a pulmonary complaint arising from the damp prison air; not, however, in the same degree as my brother, who has also had some heart-grief from his wife's death and his child's illness. I began to arrange the concerns of our church, which had become disorganised during our long imprisonment. I undertook a journey to Hamburgh, and consulted our experienced brother Oncken, who is indefatigable in assisting us both with act and advice: and subsequently I made a missionary tour to Langeland and the western part of Sealand, on purpose to visit the churches there; and, through God's grace, I have seen much spiritual fruit from this journey, although the vigilant police always was at my heels, and spied out my undertakings.

As soon as my brother recovered from his illness, he set out for Aalberg, in order to establish the church there, and exert himself for the mission in Jutland, where we have great hope of the victory of light and truth over the prince of darkness and falsehood. He has had much spiritual joy from this journey, the fruits of which will not be wanting.

Although unprovided with, and having no immediate prospect of receiving, that pecuniary aid which we so greatly needed, (being by a second imprisonment and fines quite ruined,) we were not put to the blush in our hope; inasmuch as the Lord, through our brethren in England and the United States, sent us assistance which was not inconsiderable, by which our immediate wants were supplied, two brothers liberated, from the disgraceful punishment of imprisonment, &c. and the expenses of our journeys defrayed. Thus we have many proofs of the faithfulness of our God and Saviour, though we sometimes may be weak enough to doubt, because we do not always understand the mysterious ways of the Lord. We are, through that considerable aid which from time to time has been sent us from England and America, in part relieved from that bodily want and necessity which accompanies such a persecution; and we have that confidence in God, that he furthermore, as long as it is required for the propagation and establishment of his kingdom will open sympathising hearts towards us, and that the trial may not be more severe than that we may be enabled to sustain it, unto final victory. In spite of all obstacles by which it has been attempted to prevent our increase, the Lord has, from eleven, (the number of the congregation first established three years ago,) augmented our flock to more than two hundred regenerated souls, who, in the ardour of first love, praise the Saviour for their liberation from Egyptian thraldom.

But still we have a severe conflict remaining. Still the magistrates, slavishly yoked to an obsolete law against Anabaptists, and which is pretended to apply to Baptists, continue to imprison, prosecute, condemn, and distrain to the last rag. Thus cows, sheep, and furniture, have been seized and sold from the pastor of the church in Western Sealand, because he keeps devotional meetings; and besides, a separate action has been brought against him for administering the Lord's Supper: the sentence will, in temporal respects, completely ruin him. In Langeland an action has now, for the fifth time, been brought against the pastor, and he is sentenced to pay a considerable fine. Several brethren of the different churches are still under prosecution, and must atone for the fines to which they are subjected, by disgraceful imprisonment, living on bread and water. I should myself, for the sake of the example, willingly have, in this manner, atoned for the fines which I was sentenced to pay, but our laws do not allow to any body who is in the rank of a citizen, this mode of atoning for fines; when, however, there is nothing more to be seized from them, such persons are, by a protracted simple arrest, (in which two-pence a day and one pound of bread is allowed to them for their sustenance,) made to atone for their fines. The bodily distress in our churches is very great, as they consist mostly of poor [illegible] and the few who had some property h[illegible] for the common good. We are, how[illegible] tory, if we only endure and remain [illegible] end. And if religious liberty can be obtai[illegible] at so easy a purchase as the sacrifice of [illegible] liberty, health, and temporal goods, it is [illegible] for nothing when compared with what [illegible] relations in England; who, two hundre[illegible] through the Lord's power, were victoriou[illegible] flict, which we have commenced, relying [illegible] the same Lord who gave the victory to them; whose power also is perfected in our infirmity.

Two professors, Messrs. Conant and Hacket, sent by the Baptists of North America, were here lately on purpose (like our dear English brethren last year) to obtain from the State a recognition of the Baptists. They had no interview with our King, he being absent on a journey, but they applied to the supreme men in power, who received them friendly, and showed them much esteem and kindness; but, at the same time, how little their intercession was regarded appeared in this, that the next Sunday after their departure the police made its appearance in our assembly, and in the middle of our devotional exercises, in rather an insolent manner, dispersed us, to the great amusement of the mob gathered in the street. Still I am persuaded that this intercession, as well as that of the English, will not be without prospective advantage and blessing to us, since these have, in part, been the cause of that kindness and esteem which the King, the Queen, and all the higher secular authorities, show towards us; and we are likewise protected by all respectable journalists, and particularly our friend Mr. Reff, the interpreter, who continues indefatigably, as well in conversation as through the press, to exert himself in our behalf, and also for general religious liberty in Denmark.

An apologetical work of considerable merit is in process of publication, by a highly respected person named Erichsen, a graduate of divinity, chiefly directed against an attack on the Baptists by one Bishop Faber. I promise myself, under the blessing of God, much from this work, of which the respected author has communicated a part to me in manuscript, and allowed me to make some illustrative remarks upon it. The only visible obstacle at present to the complete victory of Baptist principles in Denmark is the total lack of pecuniary means; for even should our sovereign monarch (as I hope soon, partly compelled by circumstances, and partly from love to the Baptists, he will) grant to them freedom of worship, we will not, from the above-mentioned cause, be able to avail ourselves of such a liberty, with any tolerably decent degree of Christian dignity, compared with the other tolerated sects. We are, for example, not able to procure a plain decent accommodation for our public meetings, which are now visited by several hundreds of people, for whom there is no room, and who must go away again without having heard any thing. Only in the hope and in the confidence that he who has said, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you," is a God of truth, and mighty enough to fulfil his promises, we continue the conflict which we have commenced, in his holy name. The blood-besprinkled banner of Christ, whose inscription is "Here is Emmanuel," leads us to eternal victory.

Well assured that you and very many of our dear English friends remember us, their weak, suffering brethren, in their fervent prayers to the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who is also their Father and ours, I am, with the grateful greeting of a brother, from our congregation, your, in Christ, obliged brother,

PETER C. MONSTER.

PRUSSIA.—The German Journal of Frankfort, of the 10th inst., publishes the reply made by the King of Prussia to a deputation from the citizens of Konigsberg, who waited on his Majesty on his passage through that town on his return from St. Petersburgh with a remonstrance against the appointment of Dr. Hævernek as professor of Theology, on account of his religious opinions. His Majesty replied to the deputation in the following terms —

"I have received, gentlemen, a complaint against the Minister of Public Instruction, M. Eichhorn. This complaint is directed not only against the Professor Hævernek, but likewise against myself, for M. Eichhorn has acted in my name. Now, I declare this Minister to be an honourable man, although the party called 'Young Germany' have taken the liberty to decry him as a Mucker and a pietist. The Minister, I repeat, is an honourable man, and I approve of what he has done. You complain of Dr. Hævernek, because you say he committed a fault fifteen years since. I have examined into that affair, and I find that it was not what you represent. Besides, which of us can review his youth and not find similar, and even greater faults! In fine, you complain that Professor Hœvernck is too much devoted to the Evangelical religion. Well! I tell you that I myself am devotedly attached to that worship. I have passed through serious errors in my life, and I have concluded by returning to this belief. I am proud of having done so, and as long as I govern I shall protect it with all my [illegible]. You have not sufficiently examined what passed [illegible] Professor Hœvernck and the students. [illegible] would have been punished. I am so much pained at this affair, that I would have deposed the Heads of the University, had not agreeable recollections attached me to it, for I have attended lectures in the University of this city."—Record.

THE KING OF PRUSSIA.—A number of German papers had given different versions of an impressive Address delivered by the King of Prussia to a body of the clergy that came to pay their respects to him at Minden, during his late progress through his Rhenish provinces. The Westphalian Mercury declares inaccurate all the versions that have hitherto appeared, and gives the following as the true one:—"After the King had thanked the clergy for the sentiments they had manifested towards him, and particularly for the confidence they had expressed in his disposition towards the Evangelical Church, he added that the voice of calumny had published so much respecting his views and endeavours as regarded ecclesiastical affairs, that it would be difficult for him to preserve silence altogether. Things utterly inconsistent with the spirit of the age, nay downright absurdities, had been gratuitously attributed to him. Among other matters, it had been said he contemplated the enactment of laws for enforcing a strict observance of the Sunday. Now, there was certainly something very beautiful, something of great national importance, in the holy observance of the Sunday; but he was far from thinking of attaining so desirable an end by the enactment of outward laws. That end could be attained only by the religious habits of the people; and those habits must be formed by the endeavours of the clergy themselves. There was much, he was well aware, remained to be done in the Church; but he had no wish to force anything upon the Church by legal violence. On the contrary, his own opinion was, that the church ought of her own accord to repair the defects that still existed in the Church, and he was not disposed to deprive her of the office."—Morning paper.

GERMANS IN SOUTH AUSTRALIA.—In addition to the religious statistics of South Australia, contained in our Number of the 19th ult., the following interesting circumstances relative to the German Lutherans, there mentioned, have been communicated to us by a Correspondent, who is intimately acquainted with the affairs of that Colony. We insert them with pleasure, under the persuasion that they will prove gratifying to our readers:—

"These Germans arrived in the Colony in the latter part of the year 1838. They had been subjected to a vexatious and lengthened persecution, merely on account of their religious sentiments, in Silesia, their native country; and, while persecuted at home, they were denied the liberty of leaving the scene of their unmerited sufferings. The necessary passports sanctioning their emigration from the land of their fathers, were refused, from time to time, by the Prussian Court; which held them fast by one hand, while it was inflicting unrighteous pains and penalties on them by the other. Their painful situation excited the Christian sympathy of a decided friend of religious liberty, resident in London, who not only exerted himself, zealously and successfully, in obtaining the removal of these obstructions, but who generously advanced their passage-money to South Australia, where they are blessed with the quiet and unmolested enjoyment of their religious privileges, under their esteemed pastor, the Rev. Mr. Kavel, who accompanied them to the land of their adoption. They form two congregations; the one located at Klemzig, in the immediate neighbourhood of Adelaide; the other, at a village named Hahnsdorf, about 25 miles distant from town. Mr. Kavel officiates alternately in both, generally about a fortnight at a time in each. The conduct of these Germans has been very exemplary; they are, generally speaking, quiet, sober, industrious people—raising vegetables, and cultivating small patches of corn; while the women, particularly those residing at Klemzig, are employed in washing and dressing linens, &c.

"Another Evangelical Lutheran clergyman has arrived lately, accompanied by another body of German emigrants, who are understood to be of the same character as those who went thither under Mr. Kavel.

"It is deserving of particular notice also, that the only Missionary Society which has compassionated the degraded and destitute condition, in a moral and spiritual respect, of the Aborigines of the British Colony of South Australia, is a foreign Society,—namely, the Dresden Lutheran Evangelical Missionary Society, which has sent out four missionaries, to endeavour to bring these poor natives to the knowledge of the only true God, and of Jesus Christ whom he has sent."—From a Correspondent of the Patriot.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Preparations are making at Brighton Pavilion to receive the Queen and Prince Albert, with the royal infants, early in November.

The King of Hanover is understood to be in an extremely delicate state of health.

The preliminaries for the marriages of Her Royal Highness the Princess Augusta of Cambridge have been finally arranged, and the nuptial ceremony will take place at no very distant period. The future husband of the Princess Mary is His Royal Highness the Hereditary Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Strelitz, the eldest son of the reigning Duke, George V. It is expected that the ceremony will take place on the Continent. The bridegroom elect has just entered his 24th year. The Princess Augusta of Cambridge is in her 21st year.

The Hanover Gazette contains a Royal ordinance, by which His Majesty King Ernest Augustus gives his consent to the marriage of his Royal Highness the Prince Royal with the Princess Alexandrina Maria of Saxe-Altenburg, conformably to the laws which regulate the conditions under which the reigning members of the family of Brunswick-Lunenburg can marry.

The malicious rumours in connection with His Royal Highness Prince George of Cambridge and Lady Augusta Somerset, are said to be utterly devoid of truth, though a marriage between the parties has been spoken of.

On the occasion of the marriage of the Crown Prince of Bavaria with the young Princess of Prussia, the inhabitants of the Bavarian Palatinate have contributed to purchase the Castle of Hambach, and to present it to his Royal Highness as a wedding day gift. The King has allowed the Crown Prince to accept the gift, and the Castle of Hambach, henceforth a royal residence, will bear in future the appellation of Maxburg.

The political career of Lord Melbourne may now, we much fear, be considered to have closed forever, inasmuch as his lordship has recently sustained two paralytic attacks, from which, however, he is slowly recovering.

The vacancy in the Order of the Garter, occasioned by the death of the Marquis Wellesley, will probably be supplied by the nomination of the Earl de Grey.

The remains of the late Marquis Wellesley were publicly interred in the chapel of Eton College, in the same vault with those of his old and esteemed friend Dr. Goodall. The coffin, which was covered with rich crimson velvet, brilliantly ornamented, and emblazoned with the banner and the armorial bearings of the late marquis, bore the following inscription upon a brass plate:—"Richard Colley Wellesley, Marquis Wellesley, Knight of the Most Hon. Order of the Garter, &c., died 26th Sept. 1842, in the 83d year of his age."

The pall was supported by Lord Burghley, Lord Belgrave, Lord Henley, Lord Darnley, Lord Dunkellin, and Lord Clive.

The Earl of Mornington followed as chief mourner, supported on the right by Mr. Anthony Montgomery, the late noble marquis's private secretary, and on the left by the Right Hon. R. R. Blake. The other mourners were his Grace the Duke of Wellington, K. G., The Right Hon. Lord Cowley, Lord Hatherton, the Marquis of Douro, the Hon and Rev. Gerald Valerian Wellesley, D. D., Mr. Charles Curling Smith, the Rev. Henry Wellesley, the Hon. Gerald Wellesley, Mr. R. Wellesley, Mr. John Thornton Down, the late peer's confidential agent and executor; Mr. E. J. Smith, Surgeon to the late Marquis; Mr. William Stephens, Solicitor to the late Marquis; Mr. R. Montgomery Martin, Mr. Fortescue Bate, five of the upper servants of the deceased peer, and four footmen.

At the conclusion of the service, as soon as the mournful cavalcade had left the chapel, the whole of the Etonians who were present during the sermon in the choir, proceeded to the grave to take a last farewell of the remains of one of the brightest and most illustrious sons of old Etona.

As a tribute of respect to the memory of the late illustrious Marquis, Her Majesty commanded that neither the military nor the Queen's private band should perform at the Castle that evening. During the whole of the morning all the shops near the College, and the shutters of the private houses, were closed, and remained so until after the funeral.

The following Latin lines were written by Lord Wellesley for his own epitaph, and given to Dr. Goodall, provost of Eton College. The translation is by a correspondent:—

"TITULUM PROPRIO SEPULCHRO INSCRIBENDUM.

"Fortunæ rerumque vagis exercitus undis,
In gremium redeo, serus, Etona, tuum:
Magna sequi, et summæ mirari culmina famæ,
Et purum antiquæ lucis adire jubar,
Auspice te didici, puer; atque in limine vitæ,
Ingenuas veræ laudis amare vias.
Siqua meum vitæ decursu gloria nomen,
Auxerit, aut si quis nobilitaret honos,
Muneris, Alma, tui est: altrix da terra sepulchrum, Supremam lacrymam da! memoremque mei!"

"WELLESLEY."

TRANSLATION.

"Thro' life on fortune's varied waters cast,
To Eton's bosom I return at last—
By her in chidhood taught the steep to climb
Of lofty fame—to search the 'olden time'—
And, led by virtue's pure and fostering rays,
To track the ascending path of well-earned praise.
If glory's beams have played around my name,
And made me soar aloft on wings of fame—
Nurse of my youth! the praise be wholly thine!
The peaceful nook of earth and parting tear be mine!"

—London Mail.

The following lines were written by the late Marquis of Wellesley, and intended as an inscription for the pedestal of the state of the Duke of Wellington, about to be erected by the citizens of London:—

"CONSERVATA . TVIS . ASIA . ATQVE . EVROPA .
TRIVMPHIS .
INVICTVM . BELLO . TE . COLVERE . DVCEM .
NVNC . VMBRATA . GERIS . CIVILI . TEMPORA .
QVERCV . UT . DESIT . FAMÆ . GLORIA . NVLLA . TVÆ."

These lines have been rendered by Lord Wellesley himself:—

"Europe and Asia, saved by thee, proclaim
Invincible in war thy deathless name—
Now round thy brows the civic oak we twine,
That every earthly glory may be thine!"

Capt. Basil Hall is suffering from paralysis, attributed to great mental excitement.

It will give all admirers of true poetry gratification to hear that her Majesty has conferred a pension of 300*l.* a-year upon William Wordsworth. Long may he live to enjoy it!

The number of admissions last term, at Cambridge, amounts to 426, the chief portion of which were as usual at Trinity and St. John's; the former having 134 and the latter 111. Clare Hall had but two and King's one. On the whole the admissions have been more numerous than those of last year, which were an increase on those of the previous one.

The completion of that truly great and national work, the Thames Tunnel, has just been appropriately commemorated by the striking of a medal of its ingenious and indefatigable projector, Sir I. M. Brunel, executed by W. J. Taylor, from a design by Warrington. The profile of this eminent engineer is given in high relief, and, with a finished and delicate accuracy of detail, exhibits all those characteristics of deep thought, accurate observation, and indomitable perseverance, by which alone an undertaking of this novelty, magnitude, and danger could have been successfully accomplished. Whilst the arts are too habitually prostituted in the commemoration of achievements hostile to the peace of mankind and the dictates of humanity, let us, as good citizens of the world, gratefully hail this one happy effort of their resources, in honour of a work of great domestic usefulness, the memory and merit of which must endure as long as the river flows which it undermines. The obverse of the medal has the inscription, "Sir Isambert Mark Brunel, F.R.S.;" and the reverse, "Thames Tunnel from Rotherhithe to Wapping, 1200 feet. Commenced Jan, 1826, progressed 600 feet Jan. 1828; 180,000*l.* subscribed by proprietors; recommenced 1836 by Parliamentary grant, 270,000*l.*; and completed 1842."—Ibid.

BABOO DWARKANAUTH TAGORE.—On the 15th October this distinguished gentleman left England for France en route for India, whither he proceeds by the present overland mail, carrying with him the respect and good wishes of all who have had the pleasure of his acquaintance. Previously to his departure he was admitted to a special interview with her Majesty and his Royal Highness Prince Albert at Windsor Castle, to take leave prior to his departure for Paris, and we understand that the conduct of the Queen and her Royal Consort was on the occasion marked by peculiar kindness, and that her Majesty signified her gracious intention of presenting Dwarkanauth Tagore with her portrait, accompanied by one of the Prince. He had also an audience of Lord Fitzgerald, President of the Board of Control, at which the noble lord delivered, by command of her Majesty the Queen, a gold medal, as a special mark of her Majesty's royal favour, and her high appreciation of his public and private worth. The noble President accompanied the presentation by a complimentary address, distinguished by the kindest feeling and the most enlightened regard for the interests of the great empire with whose prosperity Dwarkanauth Tagore is identified.

On the 28th Oct. the Baboo was received by the King of the French, when his Majesty was graciously pleased to dispense with the usual Court etiquette and admit him into his family circle. After introducing the illustrious Oriental to Her Majesty the Queen to the King and Queen of the Belgians, the Duke a[illegible]

Duchess of Nemours, and the Princess Clementine, the King led his guest through the various apartments of the Palace, which was specially lit up for the occasion. The King during the evening conversed very fully on the condition of India and the present state of Indian affairs, and was pleased to express a wish that his distinguished guest would renew his visit to France, which he promised to do in the course of the winter of 1843.

The Court of Directors of the East India Company having voted a gold medal to Dwarkanauth Tagore, as a mark of their sense of his public spirited services, the following correspondence has taken place: —

"East India-house, Oct. 21.

"Sir,—On the occasion of your return to your native country, the Court of Directors of the East India Company are desirous of presenting you with a testimonial of their esteem, and of the approbation with which they regard the public benefits conferred by you upon British India, by the liberal encouragement you have afforded to the diffusion of education, and to the introduction of the arts and sciences; and by the generous support you have given to the charitable institutions of Calcutta, whether established for the relief of the Hindoo or of the British community. The Court trust that the noble course which you have pursued will have the effect of contributing to the accomplishment of that object which it has ever been their anxious desire to promote, viz., the identification of the feelings and interests of the native and European population committed to their government, and thus strengthening the bonds which unite India with Great Britain.

"Impressed with these sentiments the Court request your acceptance of a gold medal, for the preparation of which they have given the necessary instructions. In making this communication on their behalf, permit us to assure you of the satisfaction which we derive from being the medium of conveying the Court's feelings and wishes, in which we most fully participate, and to express our sincere hope that your visit to this country has been productive to you of much gratification, and that your future career may be marked by happiness and prosperity. We have the honour to be, Sir, your most obedient humble servants.

Paris, 25th October, 1842. "J. L. LUSHINGTON.
"Dwarkanauth Tagore." "JOHN COTTON."

"Gentlemen,—I have received, with a pride and pleasure I cannot find words to express, the letter with which you have honoured me. If my efforts to promote the improvements of my countrymen, and the welfare of my native land, had been attended by suffering, privation, or evil to myself, I should have sought no higher recompense than the flattering opinion the Honourable the Court of Directors have been pleased to express of my conduct, and the gratifying testimonial of that opinion to which you advert, and which I shall be proud to wear. I repeat, that, if distress and danger had beset my path, I should have considered myself more than rewarded by the distinguished honour now conferred upon me; but I felt with confidence, and not less with gratitude, that, under the just and liberal rule of the honourable court, an honest citizen seeking to improve the condition of his country by legal and not unworthy means had everything to hope for, and nothing to apprehend. I have worked in my humble sphere under a firm conviction that the happiness of India is best secured by her connexion with your own great and glorious country, and that the more the people of that vast empire were enlightened, the more sensible they would become of the invincible power of the protecting state, and of the excellence of a Government, whose pure and benevolent intentions, whose noble solicitude for the welfare and improvement of the millions committed by PROVIDENCE to its charge, may challenge the admiration of the wide world. To yourselves, gentlemen, allow me to offer my unfeigned thanks for the manner in which you have communicated the gracious sentiments and intentions of the honourable court. The honour, so great in itself, has been doubly acceptable by the terms in which your kindness conveyed it. Indeed, if I might be allowed, I would solicit permission to present my humble and grateful acknowledgements to the honourable court individually, as well as collectively, for this generous hospitality, delicate courtesy, and unvaried goodness, which I shall not cease to remember with gratitude while I live.—I have the honour to be, with the greatest respect, gentlemen, your most obedient servant, "DWARKANAUTH TAGORE."—London Mail.

The Queen has been pleased to grant the office of Her Majesty's Advocate for Scotland to Duncan M'Neil, Esq., Her Majesty's Solicitor-General for Scotland, in the room of Sir William Rae, Bart., deceased.

It is thought Adam Anderson, Esq., formerly sheriff of Perthshire, will be appointed Solicitor-General.

The Excellent, Capt. Sir T. Hastings, is to have a complement of 700 men. She is to have 12 Lieutenants, 50 Mates and Midshipmen, half of whom may be students at the Naval College, a Chaplain, a Second Master, and an Engineer. From these, she will be continually enabled to supply gunnerymen and officers to the fleet. The Bee, a small steamer of ten-horse power, is to be attached to her as her tender, in order to give her officers an opportunity of acquiring a practical knowledge of steam navigation.

Orders have been issued to build the Royal steam-yacht forthwith at Pembroke Dock-yard. As far as we can learn, the dimensions will be about 200 feet in length, by 30 feet in breadth; burthen upwards of 1,000 tons, and of 450 horse power. The yacht will be launched in March, and brought into the river for her engines, internal embellishments, and furniture. She is expected to be quite ready to receive Her Majesty by the month of June.

Intelligence has been received from Western Africa to the 2nd August. It announces the return to Fernando Po of the steamer Wilberforce, from the ascent of Niger to the model-farm of the African Civilization Society, and the bringing away of all the people and property left there by the Niger expedition. The Wilberforce ascended under command of Lieut. Webb, with some eight or ten Europeans, who volunteered from Fernando Po; the rest of the ship's company being native Africans. With the exception of the commander, and one of the volunteers, all the Whites were laid up with sickness before the Wilberforce reached the coast; and latterly the engine had been worked by a black boy, who had learnt its management on board Mr. Jamieson's Steamer Ethiope; the engineers being sick with the rest. "Such a wreck of property," says a private letter from Liverpool, "as was landing at Clarence Cove never was seen." The natives had not molested the people at the model-farm; but Mr. Car, who attempted to ascend from the coast in a canoe, had, it is supposed, been murdered in the Nun river.—London Mail.

It is with extreme regret we have to announce the death of Allan Cunningham, so well known as the friend of Sir Francis Chantrey, and better still for his own poetical and prose performances. His health had long been precarious, but it was not till the morning of 28th October that his illness took a fatal turn. The night before, he had been both cheerful and communicative, and went to bed at his usual early hour apparently free from pain. He rose at 7 in the morning with an expressed consciousness of death upon him. The whole of his right arm and side was stricken with paralysis, and his brain became seriously affected. He was soon unconscious, and to all appearance free from pain, lying in an insensible state till half-past 10 on the night of the 29th, when he was seen to die in a kind of solemn stillness. Mr. Cunningham could boast of a large circle of friends; and if his own unassuming virtues and volumes are not enough to perpetuate his name, he will still live through The Fortunes of Nigel, The Diary and Correspondence of Sir Walter Scott, and the verse of Southey. Mr. Cunningham had completed the Life of Sir David Wilkie but two nights before his death.

We are sorry to announce the decease of William Ellery Channing, D. D., late pastor of the Federal-st. Congregation in Boston. This eminent man died at Burlington, Vermont, on the 2d Oct., in his 63rd year, of typhus fever. Dr. Channing was born at Newport, Rhode Island. His grandfather was William Ellery, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence.

In 1803, Mr. Channing was ordained over the congregation in Federal-st., Boston. The lines between the Orthodox and Unitarian denominations were not, at that day, so distinctly drawn as they are at the present time. In fact, the term Unitarian was not in general use. Mr. Channing was considered a serious-minded young preacher, of irreproachable morals, with a cultivated mind, refined taste, unique eloquence, and leaning to evangelical views in theology. The Rev. Dr. Mason, and other staunch divines of orthodox sentiments, in different parts of the country, used to preach in Mr. Channing's pulpit. Circumstances occasioned a more marked division of theological men, not many years after, and Mr. Channing's preaching and theological writings assumed a more decided character. His celebrated sermon at Baltimore at the ordination of the Rev. Jared Sparks (the historian) made this division more complete, and his congregation increased—his people erected a more spacious edifice on the site of the old church—and a colleague, the Rev. Mr. Gannett, was associated with him in the charge of the congregation.

Dr. Channing's published sermons during the war of 1812 brought him into general notice throughout the country. Subsequently his review of the writings of Milton, the character of Napoleon Buonaparte, and other able performances, established his reputation among eminent scholars. Dr. Channing's publications on the subject of American slavery have attracted no little attention throughout his country and Europe. He belonged to no anti-slavery society—he even doubted the wisdom of these associations—but he was an uncompromising enemy to slavery, and thought, spoke, and wrote accordingly. One of the latest, if not the last public performance of Dr. Channing, was on the 1st of August, the anniversary of emancipation in the British West Indies, when he delivered a discourse in Berkshire county, Massachusetts. A report of it was published, and attracted the admiration even of those who do not espouse the cause in behalf of which Dr. Channing directed so much labour and sympathy.

Dr. Channing was a man of great independence of mind. He was never swayed by popular applause to do an act which his principles condemned. He paid no respect to men on account of their wealth or [illegible]. He honoured moral worth wherever [illegible] sermons on the paternal character of [illegible] liness of the example of Jesus Christ, [illegible] of Christianity, and on political an[illegible] are admirable.

SPAIN.— A Private letter from [illegible] the 10th Oct gives the following interesting particulars relative to the young Queen:

The Queen Isabel II., her sister the Infanta, the Regent, Duke de la Victoria, with the household, and all the high functionaries of the Palace, attended yesterday in the Royal Chapel, at the Te Deum, in commemoration of the escape of the Queen and her sister, and of the triumph obtained over the enemies of the country on the night of the 7th of last October. The scene was interesting, from the circumstance of the individuals present, the event with which it was associated, and the edifice where it took place, and was heightened by the great beauty of the chapel, and the admirable manner in which the service was celebrated. It was the wish of the young Queen that Colonel Dulce and the eighteen halberdiers who defended the apartments of her Majesty on the night of the 7th of Oct. last should have also served upon guard upon that day this year, and assisted at the Te Deum; but, unfortunately, the health of Colonel Dulce, who has been suffering under a tedious illness for some time back, prevented this thoughtful idea of her Majesty from being carried into effect. Persons who have the best opportunity of knowing the fact, have assured me that her Majesty has been so strongly impressed by the events of the night of the 7th, that she spoke of little else the whole day of its anniversary this year. To-morrow her Majesty completes her twelfth year, having been born on the 10th of October, 1830. On the 29th of September, 1833, she commenced her reign on the death of Ferdinand VII., and on the 24th of October, of the same year, was proclaimed Queen of Spain in Madrid. Though not of age for two years more, according to an article of the constitution of 1837, that is, till she completes her fourteenth year, such has been the rapid physical and intellectual development of her Majesty's constitution within the last year, that she can no longer be included within the period of childhood. Promising for many years to be extremely delicate, she has of late gained much strength, and is now in excellent health. The circumstance of vacancies existing in the higher female department of her Majesty's household, prevents a levee being held at the palace to-morrow in celebration of her birth-day.—London Mail.

REAL PROPERTY OF THE KINGDOM.—According to a return made to an order of the House of Commons last session, it appears that the total annual value of real property assessed to the poor rates in England is 59,685,412*l*., of which 30,448,991*l*. consisted of landed property, 22.991,472*l* of dwelling-houses, and 6,244,949*l*. of all other kinds of property.

Middlesex, although the smallest county but one, namely Rutland, comprising as it does the greater part of London, is, as might be expected the richest county of the kingdom, its total annual value of real property assessed amounting to no less than 7,293,369*l*. This sum is thus distributed: Landed property, 304,653*l*.; dwelling houses, 6,680,202*l*. all other kinds of property, 308,514*l*.

Yorkshire ranks next to Middlesex in point of wealth, its total annual value of assessed property, being 5,448,494*l*. distributed as follows:—Landed property, 3,055,496*l*.; dwelling-houses, 1,817,739*l*.; all other kinds of property, 575.259*l*.

Lancashire comes next. The total annual value of real property assessed in the county of Lancashire is 5,266,686*l* made up as follows:—Landed property, 1,402,208*l*.; dwelling-houses, 2,449,196*l*.; all other kinds of property 1,415,222*l*.

Rutland, as it is the smallest, so is it also the least wealthy county; its total annual value of real property being only 119,134*l* composed as follows:—Landed property, 106,119*l*.; dwelling-houses 9,104*l*.; all other kinds of property, 3,911*l*.

Westmoreland is the next least wealthy county, the total annual value of its real property assessed being 266.335*l*.; made up of real property, 221,054*l*.; dwelling-houses, 37,374*l*.; all other kinds of property 7,907*l*.

Huntingdon is next, the total annual value of its real property assessed being 317,718*l*; made up as follows:—Landed property, 236.633*l*.; dwelling-houses, 71,221*l*.; all other kinds of property, 9,864*l*.,

The sum levied for poor-rates in England for the year ending Lady-day, 1841, was 6,009,564*l*. The rate in the pound on the annual value of real property assessed in 1841 was, for the whole of England, 2s.

It is a circumstance worthy of notice, that the rates are highest in those parts of the country, which we are not accustomed to refer to as the most distressed. The highest rated county is Wilts, in which the rate amounts to 3s. in the pound. In Sussex the rate is only one penny in the pound less than in Wiltshire, namely, 2s. 11d. In Buckinghamshire, Suffolk, and Surrey, the rate is 2s. 9d. in the pound; in Essex, Dorset, Gloucester, and Southampton, it is 2s. 8d.; in Yorkshire, it is only 1s. 11d. and in Lan-[illegible] 9d.

[illegible] per head of annual value of real property is for the whole kingdom, 3*l*. 19s. 7d. The rate per head is highest in Hertfordshire, namely, 5*l*. 19s. 1d. and lowest in Cornwall, namely, 2*l*. 13s. 4d. The area of England in English statute acres is 31,770,615*l*. The average annual value per acre for the whole kingdom is 19s. 2d. Middlesex is the county in which the value reaches the highest point; the average value there is 1*l*. 14s. per acre. In Leicestershire the annual value per acre is 1*l*. 7d. and in Lancashire 1*l*. 5s. The county in which land is of the lowest value is Westmoreland, where the average annual value per acre is only 9s. 1d., in Northumberland it is 12s. 9d., and in Sussex it is 13s. 6d.

The total annual value of real property in Wales assessed to the poor-rates is 2,854,618*l*., of which 2,206,146*l*. consists of landed property; 394.929*l*. of dwelling-houses; and 253,543*l*. of all other kinds of property.

The total sum levied in Wales for poor-rates for the year ending Lady-day, 1841, was 342,264*l*. The average rate in the pound for the whole country is higher than in England, it being 2s. in the latter, and 2s. 5d. in Wales. The poor-rates are highest in Caernarvonshire, namely, 3s. 2d. in the pound, and lowest is in Brecon, 1s. 7d.

The area of Wales in English statute acres is 4,752,000*l*. The average annual value per acre for the whole country is 9s. 3d. Land is most valuable in Anglesea, where the average value is 19s.; and least valuable in Merionethshire, where the average value is 4s. 8d.—From a Country Paper.

LIGHTNING CONDUCTORS FOR THE ROYAL NAVY.—PORTSMOUTH, THURSDAY EVENING.—The Orestes, 18, Commander the Hon. S. J. Carnegie, was this morning removed from her moorings by the Topaz hulk, and hauled abreast, but not alongside, of the Dockyard, immediately opposite the Semaphore, for the purpose of practically testing the efficacy of her lightning conductors, by a series of experiments, by Snow Harris, Esq., F. R. S., upon whose plan the conductors have been fitted up. She was moored about 100 yards from the jetty, between which and the ship, about midway, a barge was placed, containing a carronade. A wire leading from the positive side of a powerful electrical battery in the Semaphore, was attached to a cup of gunpowder on her main truck; another wire leading from the negative side of the battery was attached to the gun in the boat. A short wire was placed on the touch-hole of the gun, and led over the gunwhale of the boat to the surface only of the water, on the side nearest the Orestes. There was no communication between the ship and the barge.

There was a numerous attendance of naval officers from every ship in the port, amongst whom were Admirals Sir E. Codrington and Hyde Parker, Captains Sir Thos. Hastings, Lord John Hay, W. Henderson, Codrington, Carnegie, Willis, Hallowes, the officers of the Austrian frigate Bellone, General Sir Hercules Pakenham, and a number of scientific individuals from all parts of the neighbourhood.

" Mr. Harris first briefly explained the artificial arrangement of the Leyden jar, by which all the results of lightning may be imitated, and performed several interesting experiments illustrative of the definite action and laws of electrical discharges.

The arrangement for illustrating the action of the conductors in the Orestes has already been described. The object was to show that immediately an electrical discharge reached the masthead it passed down to, and was dispersed in the water by means of the continuous line of conductors. This was proved thus—the electric battery in the Semaphore was discharged, the discharge passed along the copper wire from the metallic plate on the interior of the jar to the masthead. Its presence there was rendered apparent by the ignition of the gunpowder in the cup; it passed thence down the conductor on the mast into the hull of the ship, and along the conductor in the hull into the sea. That it arrived in the sea was proved by the ignition of the powder over the touchhole of the gun in the boat, and the consequent discharge of the gun, because the only means by which this gunpowder could be ignited was, the passage of the electricity up the short copper wire which connected the touchhole of the gun with the sea. So that not only must the electric fluid have arrived in the sea, but it must have passed through it to this short copper wire in the boat. It is almost needless to add, that so rapid is the passage of the electric fluid, that the report of the discharge of the battery, the ignition of the powder at the masthead and that over the touchhole of the gun, and the report of the gun itself, appeared simultaneous, notwithstanding the great distance traversed by the electricity—thus showing clearly and satisfactorily, that the instant the explosion arrived at the main truck, that same instant did the conductors clear it of the ship and transmit it to the water.

Several experiments were then made to prove that the principle held good in the case, when the topmasts and top-gallant masts were struck. These were very conclusive; the electric current followed the continuous line without at all diverging to those portions of the conductors which, by the striking of the masts, were placed in a position out of that line.

Wire rope conductors were then considered, and the several objections to them fairly and conclusively stated. The danger of a man being killed in the bight of such a rope, while striking the top or top-gallant mast during a thunder squall, was most clearly proved by a very neat experiment. Such a case was represented by gold leaf on paper, and when an electric shock was passed over the paper the gold was burnt up in the direction of the man, but remained untouched round the bight of the rope.

The last experiment performed was with a view to prove at once the complete protection afforded by the continuous conductor, and the apparent impossibility of the least action taking place on metallic bodies out of it, thus practically refuting the supposition of any lateral discharge taking place.

After Mr. Harris had concluded his experiments, the Admiral Sir E. Codrington said, that after what he had witnessed he thought it but right publicly to observe, that he felt perfectly convinced of the efficacy of the conductors upon Mr. Harris's plan, which, after the conclusive and satisfactory tests they had that day undergone, would no doubt be generally used throughout the navy. All the other officers present were equally gratified, and expressed their approbation of the plan.—Record.

THE SOMNATH GATES.—When we heard that Lord Ellenborough, after having ordered Dost Mahomed and the Affghan prisoners to appear before him at Ferozepore, and make their obeisance amidst the troops which had returned in triumph from Affghanistan, had reconsidered the matter, and permitted the prisoners to proceed to their desolated country without this humiliating ceremony, there appeared some hope that the procession of the Gates would also be reconsidered and abandoned. But the following proclamation announces his Lordship's determination to persist in this very obnoxious proceeding, and unless peremptory orders from home shall arrest their progress, there is every reason to fear that they will pursue their course to the defiled temple on the sea shore. But though the Home Authorities may not be disposed to provoke his Lordship to throw up the Government, by thwarting him at the top of his bent in this matter, it is very much to be questioned whether the good sense of the people, or of the Ministry, in England, will ever allow this act of folly to be consummated. It is scarcely to be supposed that the Court of Directors will permit Christian officers to be made instrumental in reconsecrating the temples, after the formula of the Hindoo ritual, and fixing the old rotten gates to a Heathen shrine. The act will assuredly never be completed; and it is by no means improbable that a year or two hence, these identical gates will be seen at the British Museum with the celebrated Proclamation, "To the Brothers and Friends of the Governor General," attached to them, as a record of the wisdom with which India was governed in the year 1842. If there be either public virtue or public spirit at home, the Gates will never be attached to the old temple.

It is with feelings of very deep regret that we allude again to this painful subject. Running cursorily over the transactions of former Governors General, which have attracted public censure, we can discover no event, which bears the most distant resemblance to this. The rulers of India have been charged with ambition, with venality, with arbitrary conduct, and even with tyranny; they have been censured for proceedings which excited hatred, and acts which were supposed to justify execration, but on no occasion with conduct calculated to bring Government into contempt. And of all the transactions of the present administration, however singular and objectionable they may appear, there is nothing to be compared with this unhallowed procession of the heathen gates from Ghuzni to Somnath.

It would be uncharitable to question the propriety of the intentions in which even this objectionable act may have originated. It is easy to suppose that his Lordship may have been persuaded by his own arguments, of the policy of endeavouring to efface the remembrance of those unexampled disasters, which we experienced at the hands of the Mahomedans, by some visible token of our triumph which should attract the eyes of all India to it. The procession was doubtless designed to produce an effect which might serve to consolidate our power. But his Lordship has been singularly mistaken in all his calculations. The restoration of the gates will exasperate the Mahomedan population without strengthening the attachment of the Hindoos; while throughout the European world, it is likely to be regarded with feelings of unmitigated scorn. In England, the effect will be anything but gratifying to his Lordship's feelings. When Parliament meets, it will be impossible for Sir Robert Peel, with all his tact, to frame any excuse for such a proceeding; and the Ministry will be happy to abandon it to the tender mercies of the opposition, to save themselves from being involved in the ridicule of the procedure. As it has not found a single defender in India, even in those Journals which are framing excuses for Affghan treachery, so neither in England will any Journal, which has a character to lose or to gain, undertake the defence of it. Among politicians, it will shake the confidence in an administration which can condescend to so puerile a proceeding, while the religious community will be exasperated by the deference thus paid to a degrading superstition, which the public authorities have resolved not to foster. The event will be deemed decisive of the character of the present Government, and tend to accelerate its termination. The [illegible] respecting the Sanger Committee, in which the measures of a former Governor General were for the first time held up to public censure; the notification of the 1st of October, in which the memory of the dead was assailed with ungenerous reflections; the [illegible] of the Police, which [illegible] our Government into one of [illegible]; and even the painting of the heads of the honoured elephants at Ferozepore, with the tete lee which is now the order of the day, will be forgotten, amidst those mingled feelings of contempt and indignation, with which this inauspicious procession of the gates will be viewed.

MAJOR POTTINGER.—The Hurkaru has some observations on the marked difference, in the reception by Lord Ellenborough, of Major Rawlinson and Major Pottinger. The former was immediately invited to the Governor General's table; the latter totally neglected. But [illegible] a sufficient reason may be found for his Lordship's conduct in the fact, that Major Pottinger has the ordeal of a Court Martial to pass, and cannot be received officially by [illegible] the Government, before he has satisfactorily explained the circumstances under which the troops, of which he had assumed the political direction on the murder of the Envoy, were exterminated. We believe every other officer who fell into the hands of the enemy, is on a similar footing in reference to the Governor General, until the sentence of acquittal has been pronounced by his peers. It is extremely painful to find that the few survivors of that army, after having so admirably sustained their own reputation, and that of their country in the field, under the most appalling difficulties, and after having suffered all the hardships of a long captivity, have been liberated from the hands of the enemy, only to pass into a state of arrest, and to be exposed to all the inconveniences of a public trial. Can they, who braved death in the midst of that horrible carnage, can find ample considerations to support their minds, in the distressing circumstances in which the chance of war has placed them among their own friends. They may indeed, with little reflection, even find matter for delight in contemplating an order of things, which enables them openly to vindicate their conduct, and to secure a triumphant acquittal.

We [illegible] the tribute of gratitude which the [illegible] have presented to Major Pottinger, the main instrument of their deliverance; and below it we have copied the appointment of the Court which has been appointed to try him for his conduct. It is among the most singular events to which the last campaign has given rise, that when the Governor General has proceeded to Ferozepore to greet the heroes returning from Affghanistan, Major Pottinger should, by any rule of etiquette, meet with a rebuff. The European reputation, which he acquired at the siege of Herat, was nobly sustained in every circumstance in which he was called to act, during the last disastrous campaign. The exertions which he so nobly made in Ko[illegible] against overwhelming numbers, and which were [illegible] by the annihilation of the Re[illegible] add not a little to his laurels. In the [illegible] in which he was placed at Cabul, after the [illegible] of Sir William Macnaghten, his conduct, as far as we have any report of it, was in every way [illegible] the fame he had acquired. He [illegible] to have [illegible] signing the capitulation [illegible] and to have invariably urged on [illegible] the propriety of cutting their way to [illegible]. We are aware how little credit there is in [illegible] after the event, but it is now certain that if his advice had been taken, and the troops had marched out within a day or two after the murder of the Envoy, one half their number would probably have been saved. But the transaction, which places his character in the most favourable light, and which will secure for him the admiration of his country, is the liberation of the captives from Bameean, when all human aid appeared hopeless. If there is one event more than another, in that most eventful campaign, on which the mind dwells with intense interest,— if possi[illegible], with even greater interest than that which is attached to the victory of the 7th of April, in which the Jellalabad garrison achieved their [illegible] liberation,—it is the successful effort made at Bameean for the deliverance of the party, in which, by common consent, Major Pottinger bore the chief share. The conciliation of the Hazareh chiefs; the effectual gaining over of Mahomed Saleh, which required the exercise of no ordinary [illegible]; the mustering of the little garrison consisting of [illegible]7 officers and 327 men, the sole remnant of [illegible] army of Cabul; the determination to defend the fort with this handful against all odds; the arrangements made to secure a supply of water, to repair the fortifications and to stand a siege, all betoken a mind of the first order, which always rises with the emergency into which it is thrown. These arrangements, made in circumstances which to other minds would have appeared desperate, bear the same stamp of genius with the efforts which for eight months defended Herat against the host of Persia. But for Major Pottinger's exertions and success at Bameean, how poor would have been Lord Ellenborough's triumphs at Ferozepore. Indeed there could have been no triumph at all; for either the troops would have been obliged to winter at Cabul, or they must have returned without the prisoners; and to have celebrated their return in such circumstances, with any demonstration of joy, would have been an insult to humanity. To Major Pottinger, therefore, does Lord Ellenborough owe pre-eminently the opportunity he has enjoyed for this grand display at Ferozepore; and we hope in a short time to hear, that the Court Martial has honourably acquitted him, and thus enabled the Governor General to give him that distinguished reception, which his services have so richly earned.

THE FIVE PER CENT. LOAN has closed almost as unexpectedly as it opened. The holders of the Four Per Cents. are in ecstacy. Their Notes, which were at one time depressed to fourteen per cent. discount, have already risen to their old standard of four per cent., and this closing of the Exchequer against farther receipts at five per cent. will be equivalent to putting nearly Eighty lakhs of Rupees into their pockets.

The war in Affghanistan is therefore definitively closed; the troops are retiring to the repose of their cantonments, to talk over their exploits; and the loan which was kept open to supply their necessities, has been sealed up. Of the amount of debt actually incurred by our campaigns beyond the Indus, we are not able to give any accurate statement, but we think five millions sterling will be found rather above than below the mark. Three years of good husbanding of the public resources will be amply sufficient to liquidate this sum; and at the end of that period, Government will probably be in possession of a surplus income of a million and a half, or two millions sterling a year, to be devoted either to the extinction of the new debt, or to internal improvements. What may yet await us in the course of Providence, it is not for short sighted mortals to predict. But unless very unforeseen combinations should arise out of European politics, to roll the tide of invasion from Central Asia upon these provinces, there is little probability of the occurrence of events between the Indus and the Irawaddy, which will call for any extraordinary military expenditure. It may be thought to coerce Scinde and the Punjab; but the wealth of those countries will afford us a sufficient indemnity. Nepal will scarcely prove refractory, after the "great moral lesson" we have read the Court of Pekin; and if we should ever be called to interfere in the affairs of Burmah, the war may be completed at a tenth of the outlay which the first war entailed on us, while the acquisition of its maritime provinces, and more especially of the Teak forests, will render such a war an eventual advantage to us, as it would undoubtedly be to the people.

There is nothing indeed, in the present aspect of circumstances, or in the state of the finances, which should prevent Government, even now, doing that which it has never yet done—devoting fifty lakhs of Rupees a year, or two and a half per cent. of its annual rent roll, to the improvement of the estate, in the construction of roads, bridges, and canals, and the establishment of Schools and a good police. This would still leave more than a crore of Rupees of surplus revenue a year, for the object of clearing off the incumbrance occasioned by the Affghan war. It would prolong the liquidation of the new debt, it is true, for two or three years, but it would give the country such an impulse, as it has never received since we assumed the administration.

Indeed judging from past experience, it would appear to be for the interest of the country that the period of a surplus revenue should be delayed rather than accelerated. India, has never yet reaped any benefit from a full exchequer. The generosity of Government seems to have been always contracted, in exact proportion as its treasury was replenished. Never have the Court of Directors had the heart to say, even in the most palmy state of the finances, 'a third of our surplus revenue shall be sacredly devoted to public objects.' The assurance that the vaults of the Treasury were choked up with coin they knew not what to do with, has always been more grateful than the assurance, that the superfluous revenue had been employed in augmenting the source from which it was derived. The coin which was thus hoarded with a miser's avarice has however soon disappeared. When Lord Hastings had bequeathed a full treasury to his successor, and Government refused to give back any portion of these funds for public objects, the Burmese war came and swallowed all the funds up. When Lord William Bentinck again had restored the public finances to a healthy state, the Affghan war came down on us and more than exhausted all our treasures. It was the possession of large unappropriated funds, which may be considered in both these instances, as having in some measure encouraged the war, by affording such eminent facilities for beginning it. Had the treasury been empty, it is probable that the propriety of hostilities might not have been quite so apparent, or that the difficulty of equipping an army for the field, from the absence of the sinews of war, might have enforced the necessity of looking to some other expedient for meeting the difficulties of the crisis.

THE MANCHESTER BANK.—The last Mail has brought intelligence of the failure of the Bank of Manchester, of which the Capital was 750,000*l.* This is the sixth bank, which has been closed in that town within the last six years, five of which were Joint Stock Banks. The subscribed capital of these banks amount to a sum rather above two millions and a half sterling; out of the wreck of which not more than 6, or at the farthest 700,000*l.* are likely to be realized. The annual returns of trade of the six banks amounted, six years ago, to at least Sixty millions sterling, which vast sum imparted life and vigor to the manufactures of the district. The stagnation of trade, which is now so severely felt, has been ascribed to the existence of the Corn-Laws and the consequent high price of Corn, as well as to the gradual sealing of markets on the Continents of Europe and America against us. That these events have contributed to produce the present distress, there can be no doubt; but to form a correct view of the cause of the difficulties in this district, we must bring to account the desolation occasioned by these repeated bankruptcies. Even under the most favorable circumstances, if the trade in corn was free, and the outlet for our productions unrestricted, such extensive failures could not fail to paralize the energies of the manufacturing community, and shake the confidence of the public at large. And it will doubtless be found that the destruction of commercial capital, occasioned by these failures, has been as influential in occasioning the distress under which the country labours, as the dearness of corn and the loss of our national customers.

The disclosures, which have been made in consequence of this failure, have been considered by those who are unfavourable to Joint Stock Banks, as illustrating the natural tendency of such institutions to abuse. There is some truth in their reasoning, mixed up perhaps with not a little prejudice. It is however a fact, that Chartered Banks have not been found to enjoy an unlimited lease of life, and that many of them have been carried away into the abyss of bankruptcy. Chartered Banks may likewise be mismanaged, and where there is mismanagement, the mere possession of a Charter is no obstacle to bankruptcy. The real question is, whether Chartered Banks or Joint Stock Banks are, from their constitution, most liable to that kind of misrule which is the shortest cut to the Insolvent Court. Judging from past experience, we should say, that Joint Stock Associations are exposed to rather greater danger than their chartered competitors. There is an inherent tendency in them to fall into the hands of a junto, who mystify the public every six months by incomprehensible accounts, and meanwhile work the funds and the credit of the Bank for their own advantage. There is a greater disposition in these associations to foster extravagant speculations, than to encourage honest industry. They may be considered high pressure-steam engines, always more liable to burst than the low pressure engines. They stand therefore in peculiar need of careful and jealous watching, while, at the same time, they naturally slide into a system of organization, which lulls public suspicion, and excludes public control. Hence they never seem to give any kind of intimation of their approaching fall; the canker worm is often found to be devouring their vitals at the time when their outward appearance is most blooming.

It is wise to learn from the misfortunes of our neighbours. This maxim, so useful in private life, is of peculiar importance in reference to Banking Associations, which, if managed with prudence and caution, will serve to stimulate industry throughout a whole district, but if conducted in a spirit of heedless extravagance, will involve in ruin all those who are unfortunately connected with them. Viewed in this light, the fall of the Manchester Bank is pregnant with instruction, which ought to be turned to public advantage.

The Bank possessed a paid up Capital of 750,000*l.* It was placed under the management of Mr. Burdekin and a Board of Managers, and for several years appeared to be in a very flourishing condition. After successively paying handsome dividends, there was a surplus of 150,000*l*. on the books. But the caution or the honesty of the Managers began to slacken. A Mr. I. H. Heron was actually permitted to remain in the Direction, after he had compromized his engagements with the Bank for ten shillings in the pound. Very heavy advances were made upon very inadequate security. The Circular to Bankers, of the 14th October last, remarks with great justness, that "Bankers in manufacturing districts work at a decided disadvantage compared with Bankers in purely mercantile places; because in the former case they must, in many instances, seek their security in pledges of mills, factories, mines, &c.; which, with a succession of years of adverse trade, become valueless and unsaleable; in the latter case they can take pledges of produce, which, with a fair margin, will always prove good securities." The Manchester Bank was, from the necessity of its position, and not from choice, obliged to take in pawn this very dangerous description of property, and, having once saddled itself with mills and factories, was eventually obliged, as the Manchester Observer remarks, to work them on its own account; which of course was not done except at a great loss, only less than that which would have been incurred by bringing them at once to the hammer. The Bank also came under heavy and unwarrantable advances to particular firms. Mr. Richard Roberts received assistance to the extent of 74.009*l*.; Messrs. Hilton and Co. of 120,000*l*, and Joseph Raleigh and Co. of 170,000*l*. Thus, one half its Capital was locked up in the speculations of other individuals. But the evil day of reckoning was put off by various delusions, of which some of the Managers were the authors, and others the victims. A year before the Bank stopped, it was admitted that the surplus fund had been reduced from 150,000*l*. to 19,321*l*.; yet the affairs of the Bank were still represented to be sound. At the meeting which was then held, namely in October 1841, when suspicions had begun to spread regarding its condition and prospects, some of the Managers declared with exultation, that not only was the subscribed Capital untouched, but that there was a surplus of 19,000*l*.; and a Mr. Alderman Chappel said, in his simplicity, that there wanted only "a cordial support among the proprietors, to make the Bank of Manchester stand No. 1, among the Joint Stock Banks of Manchester."

In less than a twelvemonth after this flourish of the trumpet, namely, on the 4th of October, Mr. Burdekin absconded to America, the Bank stopped payment, and it was discovered that the surplus fund of the past year and the profits of the present year, amounting to 43,000*l*., were gone,—that the whole of the subscribed Capital of 750,000*l*. had disappeared;—and that the liabilities of the Bank were 16,000*l*. beyond its estimated assets; which said sum of 16,000*l*. the shareholders, who are many of them men of property, will be called on to make good, as well as every loss which may arise from the depreciation of the estimated assets, and this in addition to the entire sacrifice of the whole value of their shares. Well may the paper we have quoted remark, that "Such a tissue of gross mismanagement of funds and reckless gambling with other people's money, as that disclosed by the annual meeting, stands without a parallel in the History of Banking."

ABOLITION OF IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT IN INDIA.—The Hurkaru has stated that the Law Commission, which is about to be abolished, proposes as the last act of its existence, to abolish imprisonment for debt in India. Apart from the intrinsic merits of this question, we are at a loss to perceive how such a measure can fall within the province of the Law Commission. Their duties, as defined in the Charter are to make enquiries, [illegible] [pr]opose a Code, which is to be laid upon [illegible] [fo]r) the table of the House of Commons. The current legislation of the country is committed to the Legislative Council, and not to the Commission; and we can only account for the present announcement, by reference to the fact, that the Commissioners have hitherto been employed in any and every duty, except that to which they were specifically appointed. For this the Commissioners are not to blame, for they have acted under orders they could not disobey or controvert.

It is very possible that the Legislative Council, weighed down as it has been with the burden of legislation since Lord Ellenborough's arrival, may have requested the Members of the Law Commission to draft a law for the abolition of imprisonment for debt, and that the Commissioners, considering this law as likely to be their last labour, may have undertaken the task; and a more important, if not difficult task they could scarcely have touched. The principle of imprisonment for debt is one of the most absurd, and at the same time the most iniquitous, which it is possible to conceive. It is absurd to lock a man up in jail, and thus deprive him of the means of exerting himself for the payment of his debts, in order to accelerate the liquidation of them. It is iniquitous to punish a man by incarceration, and to reduce his family to starvation, because he has contracted obligations, which, from some contingency he is unable to fulfil, and thus treat an unfortunate man with the severity of a criminal. It is part and parcel of the same bloody code of England, which consigned forty-eight thousand victims to death in the reign of Harry the Eighth, and which, so low down as the middle of the last century, adorned the approaches to the metropolis with gibbets. Christianity, humanity, and even common sense enforce on us the conviction that no man ought to be deprived of his liberty but for a crime. If a man is unwilling to pay his debts, transfer his property to his creditors. If he has been guilty of any fraud in his dealings with his fellow men, let him be tried as a criminal, and punished with imprisonment; but let not misfortune be aggravated by being regarded as a crime.

These are the principles which are now gaining ground in England; and every year tears away one fibre after another of our mistaken partiality for the sanguinary code of the dark ages of English legislation. Whether this country is as yet prepared for the adoption of this principle cannot be determined, except after much consideration. In this part of India every man is either a borrower or a lender; nine-tenths of the community are in debt to the remaining tenth. No man seems to have any horror of debt, or to feel any exultation when he can write himself a free man. Those who have money seem quite as eager to risk it, with inefficient security, on thirty-seven and a half per cent. interest, as those who have nothing are anxious to borrow it. Of course, the imprisonment of the debtor is the main security on which the creditor eventually depends for the payment of his debt. The abolition of this security would at first occasion much inconvenience and loss, but it would probably prove very beneficial in the end, by rendering the monied man less eager to endanger his money by lending it to those whom he cannot seize and impri[illegible] son. And whatever increases t[illegible] [illegible] of borrowing would be a real [illegible] country.

But the abolition of this practice [illegible] ly be safe unless it was accompa[illegible] complete organization of a system [illegible] [R]egistry. If Government intend to withdraw the hold a creditor has on the person of his debtor, and leave him no other security than that which his property may afford, it is indispensible that arrangements should be made to prevent the fictitious alienation of that property. We venture to affirm, that in no country under the sun, are fraudulent transfers of property so systematic and so general, as in India. Such transfers must be not only interdicted, but prevented, by making the registration of every transaction compulsory. If it be necessary, Government might even resort to the admirable plan adopted in Scotland, and make the validity of the deed commence from the day of its Registry, and not from that of its execution. No squeamish feelings of humanity should be allowed to interfere with the strict and stern exaction of Registry in every case. It is a false humanity which would foster those vicious propensities, in which this repugnance to registration originates. Every possible facility should be afforded for registration; but as soon as the system can be brought into operation, the indisposition of the natives to register should only be regarded as an additional reason for compelling them to do it. It will be a bright day for India, when every Civil Jail is pulled down, and a Central Registry office erected in its stead.

THE EGYPTIAN SOCIETY.—We have much pleasure in publishing the prospectus of a Society which has been for some time established in Egypt, to collect information regarding that ancient country, now rendered doubly interesting to the residents in India. It will be seen that one of the main objects of this association is to collect a library of reference, and to form an institution which may afford facilities for the researches of those, who take an interest in the antiquities of the land of the Pharaohs and the Ptolemies. This institution cannot fail to prove advantageous in an eminent degree to those, who may make some stay in Egypt in their voyage between India and Europe. Much previous time is now lost to enquirers, before they know how and where to begin their enquiries; while the absence of works to assist their researches too often induces them to neglect all enquiry. This association will furnish the traveller and the sojourner with the means of directing his attention to whatever has a prominent interest in the wonders of Egypt, and thus enable him to make the most of his time and double the value of his visit. We would earnestly recommend it to the patronage of every intellectual individual, who may take Egypt in his route from hence to his native land, and would advise him to encourage the institution, by a life subscription. He will thus not only reap a personal benefit from the advantages which it affords, but also enjoy the satisfaction of augmenting them for the benefit of others.

THE CHURCH MAGAZINE.—No periodical that we are acquainted with has experienced a renovation of its existence so often as that which has now assumed the above title. We shall be truly rejoiced to find it manifest a proportionate vitality. By its last change, from a Church of England, to a Church Magazine, it ceases to appear as the organ of a section of the Church [illegible]al; and consequently it takes a more li[illegible]ne, and claims a wider range of sympathy and support. Perhaps in this the risk is run of losing sight of passing events and practical matters, and so of failing in gaining the public ear. Indeed the subjoined address of the new Editor seems to say, that his grand object will be to awaken personal religion, and further a devout and contemplative spirit in his readers. And truly a more pure, a more Christian object could not be chosen. If he succeeds, he will have the happiness of accomplishing what of all things is at present most wanted in the Christian Church. For this very reason his success is the more uncertain. In the Church, as well as in the world, the present is an age of strife, noise and bustle: and any man of tolerable ability who will take a boisterous part on any side is sure of some attention; and in proportion to his violence he may expect to be favoured and applauded. Should he think the caresses of one party a compensation for the blows of another, he may attain a kind of stormy enjoyment. The present Editor of the Church Magazine has chosen another and a better part: and we shall take it as a token for good to the Church, if his hopes are realized. We need scarcely say that in his success we shall unfeignedly rejoice.

ADDRESS.

Our readers will perceive that this periodical is presented to them, this day, in an altered form. Its name has been slightly changed; and its size considerably enlarged, without any increase of price. Its principles are now sufficiently manifested by the motto we have selected from Chillingworth, and its management has been transferred to other hands.

Our objects in carrying on this "labour of love," will be, we trust in simplicity and godly sincerity, "Glory to God in the highest, and on Earth peace, good-will towards men." We therefore desire to proceed in humble dependence on the Divine blessing, and in the spirit of fervent prayer. We desire herein, also, the co-operation of our friends, that they, with us, may supplicate the giver of every good and every perfect gift, for some fruit to His glory from this publication. Our hearts' desire is to promote the edification of the Lord's beloved people; and the extension of the Redeemer's kingdom, by calling those who are yet ignorant of the infinite glory of the Saviour's love, to a knowledge of His Great Salvation. And, if but one wandering sheep be brought through the means of our labours into the fold of the Good Shepherd, we shall rejoice unspeakably, in being thus highly honored as the chosen instruments of so mighty and blessed a change.

We very earnestly request assistance and communications, from all who sympathize with us in our anxious hope, that this Magazine may henceforth be used as the means of exalting the Saviour, and making known to this perishing world His unsearchable riches. To Him we now humbly commend the undertaking, and on Him alone do we rely. "The beauty of the Lord our God be upon us, and establish thou the work of our hands upon us; yea, the work of our hands establish thou it." Psalm xc. 17.—The Church Magazine.

WEEKLY EPITOME OF NEWS.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 5.

— The Star of this morning mentions, that the Committee of the Ryan Testimonial Fund, have just published their accounts, among which is the novel and objectionable item of 400 Rs. as Commission to the Secretary. We do not remember a single instance, in which a poundage has been allowed to the Secretary of these voluntary funds. His office is always considered honorary; his labor is one of love not profit; at least so it is understood by those who acquiesce in his taking on him those duties. It will be necessary for the public to open its eyes, which are too often shut within the ditch —when another matter of a subscription is on the tapis.

— Major Abbott, has been duly installed in charge of the Gun carriage agency. The Hurkaru says the late Agent was not minded to vacate immediately; but Major Lumsdaine had signified his intention to retire, and the Governor General would not allow him to change his mind. Our contemporary says, that his Lordship would have made room for Major Broadfoot in an equally summary way, but Mr. Blundell would not take the hint and wrote what the Hurkaru calls a very spirited letter. It remains to be seen whether Lord Ellenborough will force the Resident at Moulmein to resign. The Resident had last year applied for leave to go home, which was refused. The question therefore is whether a Government which will not allow an officer to go home when he will,—has a right—it has always the power—to make him go home when he would not.

— We copy from the Hurkaru an account of Lord Ellenborough's festivities at Ferozepore.

— Mr. Montague continues his lectures on Political Economy at the Mechanics' Institute. In his last lecture, he dissected the Zemindarry system, and demonstrated that it was vitally inimical to the interests of the Agricultural classes. We are not informed how many were present on this occasion. We hope the learned lecturer will be induced to publish this lecture; the Landholder's Association will of course be at the expense of the impression.

—Letters from Ferozepore state, that it is the Governor General's intention to erect a fort at that station—where it is not needed—to be called Fort Ellenborough, in which two columns are to be erected as memorials of the Affghan campaigns, the one inscribed with all the battles fought and won, and the other with the names of all the officers who fell. This report smells incredible. It is utterly impossible that, a Nobleman who found fault publicly with the extravagance of his predecessor can intend to outdo him in expense. It it incredible that while a Finance Committee is sitting to save the shillings and pence, by curtailing allowances and abolishing offices, the Governor General can dream of an expensive fort, which will absorb half a million sterling.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 6.

— We have much pleasure in publishing the Address presented to Col. Low, late Resident at Lucknow, by the European officers of the station, on the occasion of his quitting office to return to Europe. Col. Low's public services have received, as they deserved, the meed of praise from his public employers; the present address is a tribute of respect and esteem from those who have witnessed his private liberality, both pecuniary and social. His departure will be a great loss to the society at the station, and will not be easily made up by his successor though decorated with the title of Envoy.

— Accounts from the scene of hostilities in Bundlekund, dated the 24th December, appear in this morning's Englishman, from which we learn that Reports of the ex-Raja and his insurgents being in the neighbourhood of the encampment had been spread abroad repeatedly; but though parties had been sent out, not the soul, or a body of rebel was to be seen. The country appears perfectly quiet, and the cultivators are looking after their fields, totally unconscious of the rebellion, which is supposed to exist in the province.

— The Englishman says there was a good rehearsal of the battle of Moscow on the 2[illegible]th of December, by the army assembled at Ferozepore. He also says, of course on the authority of a letter, that Shere Singh was expected on the 24th—to keep Christmas with Lord Ellenborough doubtless—but Shere Singh will not cross the Sutledge if for no other reason, at least because there is no bridge over it. The Hurkaru seems better informed of these matters. He says, it is thought that the bridge of boats, which was swept away the day after General Nott had crossed, disappeared by design rather than by accident; and that the absence of the bridge was advantageous, in saving Lord Ellenborough from the necessity of executing some threat which in his wrath he had uttered against Shere Singh.

— The unfortunate Shahpoor, whom General Pollock left on the throne of Cabul, is now a fugitive at Peshawur. Mahomed Akbar is supreme at Cabul. Zeman Khan is Governor of Jellalabad, Shumsooddeen of Ghuzni; and Sultan Jan of Candahar. Every thing is reverting to the old state of things as it was before we entered the country.

— The Five Per Cent. Loan is closed; and the four per cent. loan is opened again, to which no body will subscribe.

— We are happy to learn that the Parental Academy has got rid of all its debts, and will begin the year, as the Hurkaru tells us, with the sure prospect of improvement. It is pleasing to find that there are any sure prospects for the year 1843. But it is satisfactory to hear that Dr. Duff and Dewan Ram Komul Sen have undertaken the task of remodelling the Institution, so as to accommodate it to the circumstances of the country.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 7.

— It is now stated that Col. Shelton's Court Martial will take place at Loodiana, as the Governor General was to leave Ferozepore on the 2d or 3d of January. The information elicited on his trial and that of Major Pottinger, will go far to elucidate the hitherto mysterious history of the events which transpired at Cabul, between the 2d of Nov. and the 7th January.

— The relief of the Army, which has been looked for with much anxiety, is at length made public.

— The Army assembled at Ferozepore, which enacted the battle of Moscow on the 20th, was set to rehearse the battle of Salamanca on the 20th, which battle it was to fight over again on the 31st.

— Sir George Arthur has given a grand fete at Bombay, in honour of the victories in Affghanistan and the peace in China. In the course of his speech, he eulogised Lord Ellenborough's conduct in reference to the expedition to China; for doubts having arisen as to the interpretation of a certain despatch from England, and which would have caused much delay by a reference to the Home Authorities, Lord Ellenborough took on himself to interpret it, and said, now if you succeed, the glory will be yours; but if you fail, the responsibility shall be mine. In another part of his speech Sir Arthur is somewhat ambiguous. He said, "Every gentleman present was aware of the difficulties in which India had been placed, at the period of the arrival of the present Governor General. They all know its present situation, and how much was due to the Noble Lord who had taken such special care to equip the troops under General Pollock for an advance." If the Governor alludes to Lord Auckland, he is perfectly right; if to the present Governor General, his assertion will require to be qualified in no small degree. We have yet to learn what efforts were made to equip General Pollock for the march, and why, if they were made, they were so unsuccessful, that five months after Lord Ellenborough's arrival, the General was obliged to advance to Cabul in a state of unexampled destitution of almost every thing.

— We learn from the Hurkaru that the Honourable the Governor has fixed on Saturday the 14th at 11 o'clock to preside at the distribution of the prizes at the Hooghly College, which were earned at the last half year's examination.

— We copy from the Bombay Times the Proclamation issued fifteen years ago by Sir Lionel Smith at Poona, so remarkable for its straight forward soldier-like style. The Proclamation has been called into memory by way of comparison with the Proclamations of the Governor General and Sir Charles Napier; which are equally singular, without being altogether quite so racy.

MONDAY, JANUARY 9.

— The Editor of the Delhi Gazette, in the last number of the past year, returns thanks to his subscribers for the encouragement they have afforded his labours, and states his circulation at 1100. We have therefore four, and possibly five papers in India, with a circulation of more than a thousand. Much of this increase is to be attributed doubtless to the excitement which the events of the past year have occasioned, but there can be no question that the reading public has been greatly increased within the last seven or eight years, since the Editor of the Hurkaru, speaking upon an experience of more than ten years then affirmed that the reading community was stationary, and that the subscribers gained by one paper were abstracted from its contemporaries.

— The effect of the closing of the Five Per Cent. Loan on the Government Securities has been immediate and decisive; the four per cents, have rallied and now stand at a discount of only 4 or per cent. The Five per cents, are already at a premium of from three and a half to four per cent.

— James Kiernan, who has been found guilty of cutting and wounding the Police with intent to do some grievous bodily harm, has been sentenced to transportation to Van Dieman's land for fourteen years.

— The last number of the Christian Advocate states, that a scientific Mission, consisting of more than thirty individuals, eminent in different branches of science and literature, was about to be despatched to India by the King of Prussia. The celebrated Sungskrit scholar, Professor Bopp, is at the head of the mission, the members of which are to remain five years in India.

— The first Criminal Sessions of the year, under the new arrangement, commenced on Saturday last. Sir John Grant charged the Grand Jury and congratulated them on the lightness of the Calender.

— Of all the shows at Ferozepore, by far the most interesting was a dinner given to the men of Her Majesty's 13th by the Sepoys of the 35th N. I. These two distinguished corps "have kept together in their chivalry," they have fought side by side in the engagements of the past year; they stood together in the dangers and privations of the siege of Jellalabad; and are now about to be seperated from each other. They regard one another as brothers; and so strong is the feeling of attachment, which has grown up between them, that the sepoys, laying aside their prejudices, have given an entertainment in the European style to their comrades, in which sixty dozen of beer, it is said, were expended.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 10.

— The latest account from Ferozepore is that the Army begun to disperse on the 2d of January, that no body has heard any thing certain of the grand boon to the army, which it was understood Lord Ellenborough was about to grant; and that it is even probable that he has after all no boon whatever to give.

— The Hurkaru states, that the reply of the Court of Directors to the Ten propositions, which were submitted by the Management of the Military Orphan Society to them, has been received. The Court, so far as the pockets of others are concerned, have no objection to make the increased rate of subscription compulsory on the army, but as far as their own interests are involved, they are more chary. They are willing therefore to grant interest at four per cent. on deposit! and to allow the Society to remit through them at 1s. 11d. the Rupee!!

— The Bombay Times, received in Calcutta yesterday, has letters from Sukkur to the 10th of December, which reveal more of the political secrets of Government than appears consonant with the secrecy which has been enjoined on the Political authorities. Lord Ellenborough is demanding a cession of territory, on the banks of the Indus to which we have no political right whatsoever, we mean no more right than we had to enter and possess ourselves of Cabul, or of Delhi, or of Calcutta. The Ameers of Scinde are unwilling to yield the point; but they are utterly powerless, and will be compelled to submit like the rest of India, to the law of the strongest. It is therefore more probable that every thing will be settled most amicably, that there will be neither gunpowder used nor prize money gained.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 11.

— The Englishman's information from Ferozepore is that Lord Ellenborough had arranged to leave on the 4th Instant.

— From the Hurkaru we learn that the son of Shere Singh had come to Ferozepore, accompanied by his Father's Prime Minister, Dhian Singh, with General Court and a fine body of troops, both Cavalry and Infantry, and a grand military show had been got up for their entertainment. A movement to Lahore was talked of in Camp; but nothing is known for certain about it.

CONTEMPORARY SELECTIONS.

THE REV. R. B. BOSWELL.

In consequence of the intended departure of the Rev. R. B. Boswell, the principal Members of his congregation convened in the Library of St. James' Church, for the purpose of presenting him with an address. Mr. Tucker, of the Civil Service, kindly undertook to read the address, a copy of which we have unfortunately not been able to procure, but we can assure our readers that the sentiments conveyed the most heartfelt regret for the loss they are about to sustain, and the most sincere good wishes for his future welfare, both temporal and spiritual. Mr. Tucker then in behalf of the congregation begged Mr. Boswell's acceptance of a handsomely bound copy of the Holy Scriptures. Mr. Boswell returned thanks in a most affectionate and warm-hearted speech, in which he declared that the spiritual interest of his flock had always been his chief study: and he hoped by the blessing of God, he may be able once more to "return to his dear little flock at St. James'." There was hardly a dry eye in the room.—Eng. Jan. 9.

FORT WILLIAM,
SECRET DEPARTMENT, 3D JANUARY, 1843.
NOTIFICATION
BY THE RIGHT HONOURABLE THE GOVERNOR GENERAL OF INDIA.

Camp Ferozepore, 23d December, 1842.

This day Major General Nott passed the Sutlej at the head of his victorious force.

The Major General was received at the foot of the bridge by the Governor General and His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, attended by their respective staffs and escorts.

The Governor General was accompanied by Jye Sing Rao Ghatkee, by the Rajah of Jheend and other chiefs of Sirhind.

The troops and followers of the Rajah of Jheend and of the other chiefs, were formed in two lines, beyond the escorts of the Governor General and Commander-in-Chief.

The gates of the Temple of Somnauth passed the bridge under the escort directed to be formed by the Governor General's order, the escort of infantry being composed of volunteers from the 2d regiment of grenadiers.

The following are the Officers selected by Major General Nott, to accompany the [illegible]

Major Leech, Pol. Agent,
Captain R. N. MacLean, [illegible]
Lieutenant J. Travers, [illegible] Infantry,
Asst.-Surgeon M. A. B. Gerrard, and the same are appointed accordingly.

The Governor General delivered to the [illegible] Jemadar of the escort of the infantry, a flag of the 3 colors of the Military Ribbon of India [illegible] inscribed thereon "Ghuznee," in English, Persian and Hindee, and informed Captain MacLean, Commandant of the escort, that on their return to their regiment, the flag was to be retained by the 2d grenadiers, as a third color, in commemoration of their distinguished services.

Major General Nott, appointed Resident at the Court of Lucknow, will bear the title of Envoy to the King of Oude, and that of "Excellency" in all communications with His Majesty.

By order of the Right Hon'ble the Governor General of India. T. H. MADDOCK.
Secy. to the Government of India, with the Governor General.

FEROZEPORE.

"Lord Ellenborough's hospitable and sumptuous reception of us poor civils who had been stationed, and also serving for the last year or two, has been denounced by some of your correspondents as wrong. All I know is that, whether or not it be wrong, it is wondrous pleasant.

"I dined with him last night, as one of a few of our rather large party, who were invited to meet our gallant General. Nothing could surpass the splendour of the scene. Nothing that I have seen has so nearly realized my earlier impressions of Eastern pomp. Three tents of an enormous size had been united, and the centre one, in which we dined, was as brilliantly lighted as it is possible for any tent to be; and over the table, which formed three sides of a square, hung silken banners, of the colours (in horizontal layers) of the military ribbon of India. On these were inscribed the names of the several actions in Affghanistan, in which our troops have 'gathered laurels'—the names were written (finely worked in gold thread) in the upper stripe in Persian, in the centre one in Old English, and in the lower one in Sanscrit characters.

"The dinner of course was superb 'magnifique,' and when the delicious champagne had begun to exhilarate us, the noble host proposed the health of the Sovereign. Need I say that this was drunk with all loyalty and lots of 'hips more?'

"The Governor-General next proposed the health of General Pollock, which he prefaced with one of the happiest speeches that ever I have been doomed to [illegible]; and surely the occasion was an auspicious one. I believe I could give you a pretty accurate idea of the harangue in question —but time and space alike fail me for such a purpose. Besides, as they had the speeches, it might be only fair to give your readers their share of the Champagne and Burgundy—to wash them down, withal, even though they were not (as sure they were not) dry.

"The third toast was the Commander-in-Chief, and his Excellency's return speech was (in its way) perhaps as good as any that were made that night.

"The fourth toast proposed by his Lordship was General Nott's health, and the European portion of the Army of Affghanistan, and the fifth and last was the health of Brigadier Monteath on the occasion of his accession to the honour, now just conferred on an Officer of the Company's service of being Aide-de-Camp to Her Majesty.

"The party broke up at about half past eleven, and we left the table unanimous in the opinion that in Lord Ellenborough the Army possesses a sincere friend—a friend in deeds as well as words.—Hurkaru.

Our letters from Ferozepore diminish in number and in interest. The following paragraph from one of them dated the 28th ultimo, embraces all that is worth giving to the reader:—

"As you have a regular correspondent here, and so I need not attempt to tell you of our doings, though, after all, we have done and are doing very little out of the common. The best thing that has come off, was a dinner given by the 35th N. I. to the 13th Light Infantry, for which Jack provided, as I am told, 60 dozens of beer beside wines, and all sorts of edibles, but beef and the unclean beast,

The story goes that the 35th, fully expecting the whole of the 13th to be hors de combat, volunteered to take all their duties, for two days after the feast, and procured, or tried to procure, every dooly in camp to carry home their disabled guests! The 13th return the compliment with a nautch, and present the 35th, also with a handsome uttur and pawndan, which is being made up at Delhi. There is more to gratify in these too little affairs, than in all the rest of the tom-foolery and humbug, put together; however, there has been very little of the two latter after all. Shere Sing is not coming over; but deputed Dhyan Sing to pay his respects. The force were out on the 26th, and again this morning, rehearsing for the grand Review of the 31st. I do not know the number under arms, but guess there could not have been less than 28 or 30,000. Altogether, there are some 36 or 37,000 on the green. Weather delightful, and the rain now falling will keep down the dust, I hope till the break-up next week. The parade this morning was at 10 o'clock. The people who write to the papers anticipating starvation and such like stuff, are noodles. The bazars have been so abundantly supplied (as one of the commissariat officers told me) that grain of all kinds is still cheaper than at Kurnaul or Meerut, notwithstanding that there are about two lakhs of people here, with teeth and venters! Small articles for officers use, such as fowls, eggs, and so forth, are scarce and dear, and odd indeed would it be if they were not. Bhoosee, grass and firewood form a case of ditto; but though dear, they are still procurable."—Eng. Jan. 9.

ADDRESS OF THE PRISONERS TO MAJOR POTTINGER.

It is with sincere pleasure we give publicity to the subjoined correspondence between the released prisoners and Major Eldred Pottinger, C. B. If there is any thing to alloy that pleasure it may arise from the circumstance of the testimony not being so unanimous as we feel sure it ought to have been. The omission of two names gives a color to certain reports which we had fully hoped to have seen without foundation:—

Ferozepore, 19th December, 1842.

My dear Sir,—Your exertions at Bameean for our release from captivity have elicited the warmest feelings of gratitude and admiration. The chief praise is due to you of making the Huzareh Sirdars friendly towards us, of binding Mahomed Saleh Khan firmly to our interests, and of perfecting the whole plan successfully. The cheerfulness and determination with which you entered on the difficult task imposed upon you must be ever gratefully remembered by us, and in token of our esteem and regard, we beg your acceptance of a piece of plate, which will be forwarded to you as soon as completed. Wishing you every success in your future career, we remain, my dear Sir,

Your obliged and sincere friends,

(Signed by direction of the Committee for the undermentioned by)

(Major Pottinger's reply.)

Ferozepore, 20th December, 1842.

My dear Ladies and Gentlemen,—It is with real and heartfelt gratification that I acknowledge Lieut. Webb's letter of yesterday, conveying your sentiments on my humble endeavours towards our release, and I shall always consider your unsought testimony to my exertions in liberating so many of my country women, their children and my comrades as the proudest reward I could receive; I therefore beg you will accept my warmest thanks, and believe me that I should prize any memorial of your esteem and regard as above all price. It would be unbecoming in me to underrate the credit you have in so kind a manner borne witness to, but permit me to say I also am under deep obligation to you all for the courage displayed by you and the trust you placed in me, which, joined with the cordial co-operation of my co-adjutors, Captains G. St. P. Lawrence, of the 11th Light Cavalry, and Johnson, of the 20th N. I., gave me the confidence necessary to take advantage of the favourable opening which a merciful Providence had vouchsafed to us when it was apparent to all that human aid was nearly hopeless, and trusting that the same Providence may prolong your lives in happiness and shield you from a recurrence of the sad scenes we have lately undergone.

I remain, my dear Ladies and Gentlemen,
Your obliged and faithful friend.
ELDRED POTTINGER.

To Lady Macnaghten, Lady Sale, &c. &c. Major Griffiths, Captain Johnson, &c. &c.—Delhi Gazette, December 31.

The following is our latest intelligence from Head Quarters:—

"Camp Ferozepore, Dec. 28, 1842.—I understand the Governor-General has appointed His Excellency George Clerk, Esq., Envoy to the Maharajah Shere Sing; Major General Lumley, Adjutant-General of the Army; Major General Smith, Adjutant-General H. M. Forces; Brigadier Monteath, C. B., and Brigadier Wymer, to be a Court of enquiry into the conduct of Major Pottinger, subsequently to the death of Sir Wm. Macnaghten, until he became a prisoner of the Affghans.

"The Court to have the power of sending for persons, papers, and records, and to appoint its own secretary, and any writers who may be required.

"The Secretary to the Government of India will place before the Court, on its assembling, all the papers which are now in the office, apparently bearing upon the matters to be subjected to enquiry.

"All evidence taken is to be recorded and reported.

"The Court was to assemble on the day subsequent to the date of this order, (27th Dec., 1842.) at the tent of His Excellency the Envoy to Maharajah Shere Sing, who will act as President of the Court.—Hurkaru, January 9.

SIR LIONEL SMITH'S POONAH GENERAL ORDER.

Having in our last, in noticing Sir C. NAPIER'S Sukkur general order, referred to some of those of SIR LIONEL SMITH, a friend has kindly favoured us with one of the most racy. It was issued in 1827, but has, so far as we know, never yet appeared in print; and we think we cannot do better than give it for the edification of our readers. We believe that everything else having failed, this was found thoroughly effectual for the object proposed to be answered:—

"Orders, remonstrances, entreaties, have equally failed in preventing the Cadets or acting Ensigns, attached to Regiments, from riding or driving furiously on the Military Roads to the great terror of delicate Ladies and grave gentlemen,

"The Major-General is determined to keep down this nuisance.

"Commanding officers having Cadets attached to their regiments, will so arrange their drill instructions, that they may be dressed and accoutred on their private parades every evening from half past 5 to half past 6 o'clock, either with the sword, musket, or fuzee, as most required. They are on no account to be dismissed before half past six.

"The Major General is aware that some of these young officers are of a mild and gentlemanly deportment to guarantee their correct conduct in any situation, and these may be excused at the discretion of Commanding officers, if this hour of drill is inconvenient, but the far greater number are as refractory as the tatoos they ride. With them this course of drill is to be strictly carried on for the next ten days at least. If by that time they are made sensible of the impropriety of their conduct, they may be released on signing the following promise:—

"'I have been made aware of the orders against furious riding and driving on the Military Road, and I do promise, on my honour, to avoid offending against these orders in time to come."

"Commanding Officers then become responsible for the obedience of the officers,—failing in which they are to be placed in arrest.

"Yesterday evening two Cadets were galloping on the highways, apparently for a wager, and in white jackets and forage caps. This is another disobedience of orders.

"Worse than all where European and Native Soldiers pass these gentlemen and salute, they take not the least notice of the compliment. It is a crime in a Soldier not to salute an officer, but it is a great deal more criminal in the officer and gentleman not to return it.

"Commanding officers will be so good as to explain this, and to instruct these young gentlemen who they are to give this salute to themselves.

"If the Cadets must race let them go to the brigade ground, or race-course; and the Major General would willingly join in getting up a good sweepstakes for them,—but they shall not set orders at defiance, and put women and children and old gentlemen in bodily fear, when quietly engaged in their evening exercise."—Bombay Times, December 28.

The above curious Table is taken from a stone slab found erected at the gate of a fort in the ancient Capital of Arracan. It is inscribed on the stone in Burman characters. A close inspection of this table brings to view many peculiarities.— 1, The sum of the numbers in any line whether taken perpendicularly, horizontally or diagonally (through the centre) is 81. 2, The sum of three numbers in any line whether taken perpendicularly, horizontally or diagonally in any of the 9 smaller squares is the same. The sums of such 3 numbers in different smaller squares however differ from each other. The sums of three numbers in a row in the several smaller squares are as follow, viz:—In the left hand and top square the sum is $18=3\times6$. In the right hand and top square it is $24=4\times6$. In the left hand and bottom it is $30=5\times6$. In the right hand and bottom it is $36=6\times6$. In the middle and bottom square it is $15=5\times3$. In the middle and right hand one it is $21=7\times3$. In the middle one it is $27=9\times3$ or the cube of 3. In the middle and left hand one it is $33=11\times3$. In the middle and top it is $39=13\times3$.

3, In the whole, if we count the number of times which each number occurs, we shall perceive that the number of times agrees with the number itself in every instance till we reach the number 9, above which the numbers of times diminish in the same manner as they have increased till we arrive at 17 which occurs but once.
4, From what has just been stated it appears that all the numbers less than 9 are symmetrical with those above 9 in regard to the number of times which they occur;—they are so also with respect to their location and distance from the centre of the whole square. An ingenious mind will not fail to discover other peculiarities, but the above-named are sufficient to shew that this production had not its origin in an untaught mind.

ADDRESS TO COL. LOW.

TO LIEUTENANT COLONEL J. LOW, C. B.
Resident at Lucknow.

DEAR SIR,—In whatever manner we may endeavour to express our regret at parting with you, we shall convey but a faint impression of our feelings at losing a deservedly dear and estimable friend; one who in all the relations of society, has gained the good opinion of every one whose happy fortune it has been to be associated with him in public or private life—but however unequal to the labour which is certainly one of love, we have a higher aim than the mere expression of our feelings, we wish to show that we are capable of appreciating those admirable qualities, which have enabled you to pass through a long and arduous career, with the greatest credit to yourself and advantage to your country.

The Governor General of India has expressed in orders his opinion of the services which you have rendered to the state, more especially those performed under his personal direction, and we are fully aware that nothing we could say could add to that testimony as regards your public character, we can only express our conviction that it was well merited. In the name of all those who have benefited by the exercise of those virtues for which you are distinguished as a man, we beg to offer you our heartfelt thanks for the manner in which you have acted as the head of our society.

The extreme liberality of your contributions to all objects of public utility and Charity; and the ready and effective assistance you have given in promoting all measures tending to keep up a good and proper feeling in society, are generally known; but none but those who have benefited by them are aware of the extent of your private charities, and if the one amongst us best acquainted with them were to mention but a small portion of them, you would be the first to deprecate such a display, and therefore we avoid alluding to them further than to say (what in justice to yourself we are bound to do.) that no one ever applied to you in vain, and that in all cases which were appealed to you, you gave the most liberal assistance—and according to the circumstances either gave advice as a friend or afforded relief as a Prince.

If we were to attempt to say all that our esteem and regard for you dictate, we could not say more than you amply deserve, but we feel that ours is comparatively a humble duty: we have, in the first intance, to regret your loss to our society; next, to thank you for the many acts of kindness which you have conferred on us; and to express our earnest hope that wherever you and your inestimable family may fix your abode, you and Mrs. Low may enjoy in the society of those dearest to you the utmost extent of happiness which could fall to the lot of man—and that in returning to your Native country, you may not only enjoy perfect health, but that surrounded by your family and happy tenants you may command the admiration, esteem, respect and attachment of those associated with you as completely as you do of those friends whom you leave in India.

We are much obliged by your having acceded to the wishes of the society conveyed through us, in allowing us to retain a full length Picture of you, taken by Mr. Beechey to be kept in the Banqueting room, where you have for so many years presided, not only for the purpose of keeping up a recollection of you, but that all who look upon it may hear from those friends, who will be most happy to tell the tale, how Colonel Low during a long and honourable career in India, maintained by his conduct as a soldier, and a statesman the honour and dignity of his country, and, as a Man, conciliated the good opinion of all. How richly he merited the respect, esteem and love, universally accorded to him by the society of which he was the "decus et presidium" the ornament and chief: and how in him were united those excellent qualities of heart and mind which cannot fail to secure honour and distinction in public life: to add to the happiness of society; and hallow the joys of the domestic circle.

We cannot conclude this address without once more in the name of the European and Christian Community at Lucknow, assuring you how earnestly we desire that your health may be completely restored and that in the Society of those dearest to you, you may pass many years happily and usefully at home.

We remain, Dear Sir,
Yours faithfully and sincerely,

COL. LOW'S REPLY.

To LIEUT. COL. T. OLIVER, MAJOR K. DICK, CAPT. G. E. HOLLINGS, DR. J. S. LOGIN, AND CAPT. C. E. BARLOW, President and Members of a Committee.
Lucknow, 1st Dec. 1842.

MY DEAR FRIENDS,—In acknowledging the receipt of the affectionate address which you this morning presented to me in the name of the Christian Community at Lucknow, I must in the first place assure you that I find it utterly impossible to express how deeply I feel the great kindness you have evinced towards me, not only on the present occasion, but throughout the whole period of my residence among you.

When I was requested by you on the 16th ultimo to sit to our Friend Mr. Beechey for my Portrait, I told you that I considered the kind intention of the Society here in regard to that Portrait, to be one of the most flattering compliments that could be paid to any man, but your present letter has infinitely added to the honour conferred upon me, and the gratification also, I feel assured, of those dearest to me, by placing in my possession, a document which will be preserved, and most highly valued by my children in my Native Land.

I could have wished indeed that you had been less lavish in your praises of my conduct, because in sober truth, I feel distinctly that the generous kindness of your hearts has led you very greatly to over-rate any merits that I could justly claim. In fact (as I mentioned to you verbally this morning) I am really conscious that the cordial support in the performance of my duties which I have received from those among you whose positions enabled them to give me such aid,—and the friendly feelings uniformly manifested towards me at this place by all grades of the Christian community, have laid me under greater obligations, than any that I have had the power to confer upon them.

I am not however presuming to object to any part of your generous proceedings towards me—and I now beg to offer to you my cordial thanks for the great honour you have done me by this address, and to request that you will do me the favour to convey those thanks to the whole of the kind Friends by whom you were deputed to present it to me. The favourable opinion of honourable minds, and the friendly regard of generous hearts, are the most substantial honours that any man can possess in this life, and I prize beyond measure the sentiments you have expressed in the name of the Society here, as well as the highly flattering proof they have given of their esteem, in resolving to have my Portrait preserved at a place where I have resided so many years, and enjoyed so much happiness.

It has given me much satisfaction to learn from you that the uncovenanted public Servants lately under my orders have joined you in doing me this honour; I am under many obligations to them for their zeal and efficiency in the performance of their duties, and I have reason to be highly satisfied with their conduct both as official assistants, and as Members of the community; you mentioned also as Subscribers—the names of other Indo-Britons employed in different Public Institutions in this city; whose useful exertions for the Public good, and general respectability of character are well known to me, and hence I feel equally gratified at finding that such men have joined you on the present occasion.

But I perceive that if I were to endeavour to describe all that I feel towards the Society at this place, I should not only trespass too long upon your patience, but I should after all fail in the attempt. I shall therefore now conclude this reply, trusting that although I have not been able to express my feelings in adequate terms, you will rest assured that I duly appreciate your great kindness, and that I shall never forget it, as long as I shall have the power of remembering any thing in this world.

I must now take my leave of you, and I conscientiously say that I do so with great regret: I do not doubt indeed that with the blessing of God, your kind wishes for the happiness of Mrs. Low and myself in Europe may be realized, as far as any one can reasonably expect; but when I consider all the uncertainties of this transitor[illegible] I cannot anticipate that I shall ever be [illegible] any where than I have been here nor e[illegible] I find in any country more kind or more estimab[illegible] than those whose society I have had the [illegible]tune to enjoy at Lucknow.

Once more I request you to accept my h[illegible] thanks for your great kindness: I shall [illegible] the hope that I may yet have the pleasure [illegible]ciating with many of you in Europe, or in [illegible] I trust under all circumstances, that I may often hear of the welfare of the community at Lucknow, and in the mean time I beg you to assure them all of my most cordial wishes for their prosperity and happiness.

I remain,
My dear Friends,
Yours much obliged and most sincerely,
(Signed) J. LOW,
Lieut. Colonel.

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.

STEAM COMMUNICATION.

To the Editor of the Friend of India.

DEAR SIR,—A monthly communication by Steam between Calcutta and Suez being now about to commence by the despatch of the Hindoostan in this month, the India in February, and the Tenasserim in March, under circumstances which will allow of Passengers from this side of India passing leisurely through Egypt; I hope you will allow me to bring to the notice of the public generally, and particularly of parties intending to make the Overland journey, the existence of a Society which has been for some time established in Egypt under the denomination of the "Egyptian Society;" the objects of which are as follows:—

1. "To form a rendezvous for Travellers, with the view of associating literary and scientific men, who may from time to time visit Egypt.

2. "To collect and record information relative to Egypt, and to those parts of Africa and Asia which are connected with, or tributary to, this country.

3. "To facilitate research, by enabling travellers to avail themselves of such information as it may be in the power of the Society to obtain, and by offering them the advantage of a Library of reference containing the most valuable works on the East" and the rights and privileges of Members are:—

1. "Every Member, having duly paid his first year's subscription and admission fee, shall have the right of admission to the rooms of the Society at such hours as shall be regulated by the Council.

2. "He shall have the right of attending, and voting at, all general and special meetings of the Society."

3. "He shall have the privilege not only of reading books within the Library room, but of taking them to his own house, subject only to such regulations as shall from time to time be established by the Council."

The business of the Society is conducted by a President, Vice President, and Council, with a Treasurer and Secretary—all Honorary and annually chosen on the 25th March. The lists of Honorary Officers, and of Honorary and Ordinary Members exhibit an union of individuals of different nations, including travellers and others of rank and talent, jointly engaged in the promotion of an object interesting not merely to the local resident or traveller, but to the world in general; for certainly there are few enquiries more generally interesting than one devoted to the acquisition of "information relative to Egypt."

The annual report for 1842 observe.

"Having at its foundation pledged itself to em-"ploy the funds as far as possible in the formation of a Library, the Society has hitherto devoted its [illegible] and its means almost exclusively to this object, which it considered at first, and still considers, of paramount importance. A "collection of Standard Works, selected principally with a view to reference on Egyptian subjects, is the result of this steady adherence to "the principle laid down; and the outlay for the "Library will in future be as much to protect and "preserve the costly volumes which have been already collected, as to fill up gradually the list [of] works that may be considered necessary to complete a Library of the extent and nature "originally proposed. With this view of protecting and preserving the collection which has "been acquired, it has been found necessary to "engage a stipended Librarian, and to make regulations, which whilst they give sufficient freedom for the admission of strangers during their "ordinary stay, in Cairo, will, it is hoped, induce "those who prolong their residence, in Egypt to "contribute, more than they have hitherto done, "to the permanent interests of the association.

"Looking at what the Society originally proposed, and to what it has accomplished, it may "be stated without presumption that its principal object, have been attained. Its rooms have "been an agreeable rendezvous for travellers, and "Literary and Scientific men visiting Egypt have "there met and associated. A Library of reference has been formed, and though it cannot be "considered as complete, still it does contain "many of the most valuable works on the East."

The subscription is £2-2 on admission and £1-1 annually, or £5-5 for life if not usually resident in Egypt; if usually resident £10-10.

Believing that there are in India many persons, as well those who purpose to pass through Egypt as others, who, from a general desire to aid so interesting an object may be desirous of joining the Society, I shall be happy to be the medium of effecting the object. At present it requires Co.'s Rs. 55-6 to place £5-5 at Cairo.

The following were the Honorary Officers for the year 1841-42.

PRESIDENT—MONSIEUR LINANT.
VICE-PRESIDENT—DR. PRUNER.
TREASURER—JOHN GLIDDON, Esq.
HONORARY SECRETARY—STEPHEN PAGE, Esq.
CORRESPONDING SECRETARIES.
FRENCH, DR. PERROW—GERMAN, REV. W. KRUSE

BUNSEN, Mr. Le Baron.
HAMILTON, W. Esq.
JOMARD, Monsieur.
LANE, E. W. Esq.
LABORDE, Mons. A. G.
PRUDHOE, Lord.
ROSELLINI, Prof. Ipp.
TATTAM, Rev. Dr. Henry.
TAYLOR, Mons. Le Baron.
WILKINSON, Sir J. Gardner.

The Subscription List consists of 115 individuals, including nine British noblemen, with other names known to science.

I am, dear Sir, very faithfully yours,
C. B. GREENLAW.

ON OUR DISPOSITION TO COERCIVE GOVERNMENT.

To the Editor of the Friend of India.

SIR,—I think that there cannot be a more unstatesman-like and vulgar idea of Government than that the soldiery is to be its consolidating principle. It may be that on first assuming a Government this must be the case; but, after the lapse of about a century, it is time to enquire how far the Indian Government has divested itself of its military character, and initiated tendencies of an opposite kind—tendencies to give the people a due participation in and a consequent love of the institutions by which they are governed.

Such enquiry is concisely answered by Sir C. Metcalfe, who says, "Tranquillity did not exist when our force was smaller, and would not continue long if our army were much reduced,"* and in an immediately preceding sentence he says, "We are here by conquest not by the affection of our subjects."

The above may by some be dismissed as mere assertion: but it seems to me that there are for those who would judge for themselves indications of a military propensity which, though they be slight are not the less certain to those who seek to know the direction of the current:—Our continued disposition to war is alone almost a proof of such tendency: for although many may deny such disposition and make out a plausible cause in favour of any single war we have engaged in—yet the general tendency seems undeniable—nor can it be denied that no Ruler was ever highly honoured or created an Earl for averting a war; though some such honour will of a certainty be conferred on him who wages a war and then with finely officered and disciplined troops gains a few nearly certain victories against an undisciplined enemy. Surely the disposition of such a Government cannot be doubted, although the bias may be so deeply seated in its constitution as to be self-unconscious. The truth is, that a military power too often over looks all means but military means of effecting its objects. More attention to international commerce—the great antidote to war—might have effected more than all our diplomatic cat's cradle, and our subsidiary forces to prostrate people under the feet of their Rulers.

But it is military tendencies in internal administration of which I think we should be most jealous. I therefore regret to observe that a semi-military character is recommended for the Rural Police:—that whereas it is already so strong as to be an oppression to the people—the only remedy adopted is to mount the Police on horses—as if overtaking robbers were the only object. I regret also, as another symptom, that on every possible occasion, compatible with the charter, military officers are selected for purposes of Civil administration, and this as in Mysore with unappealable power and semi-military law tending to a coerced smoothness which is mistaken for good administration, and which has already led persons of influence to declare that such administration is best, and promises more of such semi-military administration—a promise which the military composition of the Court of Directors (itself another military symptom) and the frequent appointment* of military Governors (another symptom) are likely to realize. I observe also that in a District (Tanjore) wherein the system of taxation is with or without reason particularly obnoxious, the Talooks are guarded by Sepoys. This cannot but exercise, however indirect or unintended, an influence in the realization of revenue; and is another indication of our tendencies—conscious or unconscious—to a Government of Sentry boxes.

I think that we cannot too much mark the distinction between strong Government and good Government. For external action, the Strong Government is well enough: but for internal purposes its coercive power is ever so near at hand, that the mere knowledge of this suffices to carry through a bad law, an oppressive tax and in short whatever is bad with as little trouble and disturbance to Government as what is good would occasion to the same Government—which therefore, does not feel the evil till it has pressed the people beyond endurance, till the cure comes too late, and the evil which is not cured is to be put down; and I may here say that the aptitude of the Strong Government is much greater for keeping its subjects down than for keeping them happy.

Moreover; no Government is so costly as that of which the soldiery is the consolidating principle; for it involves an ever increasing necessity of propitiating the soldiery, and is continually exhausting the resources of its own strength, the Government which trusts over much to its military strength instead of trusting to the opposite alternative of incorporating the people with their interests, influences and affection, is the administration acts like the Athlete, who favours his sinews and muscles at the expense of his constitutional health and stamina. A prolonged war would put to proof what constitutional stamina and elasticity of resource the facilities of coercion enjoyed—even though not put forward by a Strong Government—had left to the country.

But it may be said that the "Good intentions" of the Indian Government being notorious, it may be trusted with those unlimited facilities of coercion which in other hands would be dangerous.

But the "good intentions" of the Indian Government have never proved hearty and effectual enough to prevail against the class interests of its exclusively class administration, by whom and through whom alone all effectual representations are made, and on the propitiation of whom the fame of a Ruler must depend.

To resist the wishes of this class brings odium and unrest: but no unrest attends the neglect of the nation whose influences are not included in administration, whose mode of petitioning is unsystemized, and who cannot in any way give disturbance to a Strong Government. Perhaps no Ruler acts deliberately on such considerations as the above; but still, a Ruler will sometimes, insensibly or not—adapt himself to the element of circumstances in which he is placed, and if he does not he may be over-ruled by those who do. Thus Lord William Bentinck had "good intentions," towards the race whose influences are excluded from administration; but admits that he allowed the Legislative provision for the official advancement of that race to remain "a dead letter," in his hands; and it is thus and not by gross and palpable acts that a class administration and a Strong Government can quietly compromise and hardly absorb the rights and resources of a people; and, as a more direct instance of its unconsciously over-exhausting its resources, I quote the case of an acknowledged over-assessment of at least 20 per cent. which was continued for more than 12 years in the Ceded Districts (a tract of country as large as Scotland), before it was recognized as excessive by the Government—which being a Strong Government carried on the excessive tax with as little disturbance and difficulty as they would a light assessment.*

I do not mean that in this or in other cases, where the Government has unconsciously eaten into the core of a Province, it has exercised military coercion: for the knowledge that such force is at hand prevents the occasion for its actual exercise; and it is precisely in this manner that the Government of unlimited powers of coercion undermines his own strength; thus it maintains an enforced smoothness, and may cause the utmost injustice with the utmost decorum. It may thus, as Sir C. Metcalfe well says, live otherwise than by "the affection of the people"—the only consolidating principle of Government being the soldiery instead of that love of institutions which a participation in institutions would give.

I trust however that notwithstanding the seeming tendencies to military or semi-military absolutism and class partiality—future honours will be bestowed on Rulers who condescend to measures of General and Vulgar utility for the people—even if they do not add to the coerciveness† of the Government or get up what the gentlemen of the "United Service" might call "a d——d good War."

Yours,
CASSANDRA.

* Quoted from page 330 of Shore's Notes, vol. I.

* The union of Madras Governor and Commander-in-Chief in one person is another military symptom; and I may mention the alleged intention of promoting that personage to Governor of India.

* It is fair to add that the Government generously reduces the assessment; but what amount of misery had it meanwhile inflicted?

† The salutary jealousy, with which the Citizen of a "free state should ever regard a soldier—that dangerous machine in every possible service to which capricious power may apply it."

EUROPE.

RELIGIOUS.

PUSEYISM IN MISSIONS.—We have no doubt the attention of our readers at large must have been strongly and painfully arrested by the letter which appeared in our last number from Calcutta. We repeat, it is written by a gentleman of the first name and reputation in that city, and consequently that the representations which it contains (they indeed too much speak for themselves) are entitled to every credit and consideration.

Can any man really acquainted with the Gospel of Christ fail to mourn with the deepest lamentation over such a working, as is there exposed, of the Tractarian leaven! Apparently, the only missionaries those of the Society for Propagating the Gospel can labour with in India, are those of idolatrous Rome, while they teach the converts of all other denominations of Christians that they are being deluded, as by Hindoo and Mahomedan, so by those who have nominally, but falsely, converted them to the faith of Christ!! What true Christian does not loathe this accursed spirit of Tractarianism, and hate even the least leaven of it? Where admitted at all, its sure tendency is to leaven the whole lump.

The Puseyism among the officers and labourers of the Society for Propagating the Gospel abroad must have had some source from which they sprung at home. And in this connexion, we particularly call the attention of our readers to the following letter. They must judge for themselves whether the fountain at home and the streams abroad are not of the same quality and flavour; and to what length the men at home are likely to proceed in private, when in PUBLIC they proceed in the style disclosed in the Rev. Mr. La Trobe's letter, it is perhaps not very difficult to imagine. The Rev. Gentleman says:—

TO THE EDITOR OF THE RECORD.

Sir,—At a Meeting lately held for the purpose of forming an Association in aid of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts in this town, the names of the town clergy were placed on the Committee. I made no objection, for my own part, as I should be happy in any way to assist the cause of missions. Certain papers have in consequence been forwarded to me, with the request that I would distribute them amongst my people. On looking over them, I found a tract entitled Dialogues on Church Missions, which I read, without suspecting that I should meet with anything but what a consistent member of the Church of England could sanction. I was much surprised and grieved, therefore, to find as many of the errors of the Tractarian school introduced, as scope allowed in a dialogue, where two old women and a village schoolmaster of no great sapience formed the dramatis personæ. The question is asked: "What are missionaries?" And the answer is: "Clergymen sent out by the Church to preach the Gospel in foreign lands," (1 Dial., p. 11,) thereby implying a denial of that honoured title to many of the most eminent of God's servants, who have laboured, with manifest tokens of Divine blessing, in the Missionary field, but who had not been sent out by the Church.* Again, in 1 Dial., p. 8, "right sort of ministers" are defined to be "clergymen ordained by the bishops;" implying, that all who have not been Episcopally ordained are wrong sort of ministers, and that, if so ordained, whatever may be their disqualifications in other respects, they are "right sort of ministers." These "right sort of ministers" again, seem to be sent out to reverse the order of the Divine commission, to preach the Gospel and Baptize. (Matt. xxviii. 19.) They go to baptize and teach.—2 Dial., p. 7.

Nothing is said of the nature of human depravity, of the necessity of a spiritual reception of the Gospel, of the true character of a change of heart, and of the fruits of the Spirit, which evince the reality of that change. It would appear as if all depended upon being baptized and made Christians, (1 Dial., p. 9,) and thus the peculiar happiness of Englishmen is stated to be, their being "born in a land where we have good clergymen, and where we can enjoy all the great benefits of the Church."—2 Dial, p. 7.

I might adduce other examples of the tendency of the teaching of this tract, but so much may serve. Having ascertained from one of the Secretaries of the Parent Society that the Dialogues were put forth for distribution with the sanction of the Society, I thought it a duty to draw the attention, especially of my clerical brethren, to the character of the publication. Not being myself prepared to further views and sentiments subversive alike of Scripture truth and the principles of the Reformation, thankful at the same time that there is a Church Missionary Society, with which the clergy may co-operate without mingling in the extravagances of the Tractarian school, I sent to beg the withdrawal of my name from the Committee. Most happy shall I be at any future time to assist the Society when it shall have recovered itself out of, what must be considered, a snare of the devil, to paralyze its efforts in the Christian cause.

If the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel be formed merely "to baptize and make Christians,"—"if to be Episcopally ordained is all that is needed to constitute its ministers "right sort of ministers,"—and if for the furtherance of its work "all it wants is money," (1 Dial., p. 10.)—what is it better than its sister Society of the same name in the Romish Church? Money may be obtained—priests may be made—multitudes may be baptized and made Christians—a nominal Church may spring up with the external ordinances of a Church, but the Spirit will be wanting. Not by such means, or by such agents, will the wilderness bloom and blossom like the rose. And while, with all the pomp and circumstance of a Church, there will be nothing but barrenness, many a spot where some humble follower of Jesus is toiling in his Master's spirit, and with his Master's commission, though disowned by some reasoners as "no right sort of minister."—many such a spot will be discerned by its fruits to be a field which the Lord hath blessed.

JOHN A. LA TROBE,
Incumbent of St. Thomas's, Kendal.

Kendal, Sept. 28, 1842.

* Throughout the tract, the term, the Church, as respects this country, seems confined to the Church of England.

THE ARCHBISHOP OF YORK.—On Sunday last. His Grace preached in the chapel at Bishopthorpe, to a numerous congregation, the chapel being full, as it was understood to be the last sermon the Archbishop intended to preach, in consequence of his very advanced age, having, on Monday last, completed his 85th year. The text was most appropriate: "The night cometh, when no man can work;" from which the venerable Bishop delivered a most impressive and truly eloquent discourse, in a clear, distinct, and forcible manner; which was listened to most attentively, and cannot fail to be long remembered by all who had the gratification of being present.—Yorkshireman.

STRANGE MOVEMENT.—The New York Observer states, that one of the Roman Catholic parishes in New Orleans has recently rebelled against the appointment of a Curate made by the Bishop, and that a correspondence has been opened, from which interesting results may be expected. The letter of the Churchwardens breathes a spirit of determined resistance to the Pope.—Pat.

CATHOLIC MISSIONS.—The Abbe Jean Marie de Lamennais, (says the same journal) has just arrived at Brest, with six (lay) brethren of the Christian doctrine, who are to embark in that harbour for the French West India Islands. Two others are shortly to leave for Cayenne. The number of these modest teachers, who are now slowly preparing the way for the emancipation of the slaves in our colonies, is about forty.—Record.

MISCELLANEOUS.

SIR ROBERT PEEL, backed by a considerable section of the free-trade part of his Cabinet, has resolved on proposing for its consideration, and, if he can, its adoption, the principle of a fixed duty; and, in order not only to pillage Lord John Russell, but to undersell him in the market of national popularity, to fix that duty at less, by two shillings a quarter, than was proposed by his Liberal predecessor—in other words, Sir Robert Peel means to propose a six-shilling fixed duty on wheat!—Hants Independent.

LEGAL CHARGES.—It is rumoured in legal circles, that, in consequence of the declining state of his health, the veteran Lord Lyndhurst will shortly retire from the woolsack, which his brilliant talents have so pre-eminently adorned, and that he will be succeeded pro tem. by Lord Abinger, now Lord Chief Baron, who will shortly afterwards retire in favour of Sir William Follett. These changes will involve the elevation of the present Attorney-General to the dignity of Chief Baron, and, in all probability, the promotion of Mr. Fitzroy Kelly and Mr. Cresswell Cresswell.—Herald.

EXTRAORDINARY SIGHT IN THE CITY.—On Thursday afternoon the citizens of London were somewhat amused by the procession of Mr. Hylton's vans of trained animals passing through Fleet-street, St Paul's Churchyard, and Cheapside, on their way from Windsor to Newmarket, one of the vans being drawn by a large Ceylon elephant, Mr. Hylton himself walking by the elephant's head. The elephant was harnessed with a huge collar and traces, after the manner horses are usually harnessed. It was singular to see the stupendous beast thrusting his trunk first on one side and then on the other, in search of, and receiving fruit from the crowd that accompanied him, while he was pursuing his way apparently wholly unconscious of the burden he was drawing.—Pat.

TRADE LOTTERIES, like that of the London Friendly Union, are multiplying all over the Metropolis. One of these "distributions," as they are modestly termed, has just taken place in the heart of the City. The nominal value of the goods "distributed," was 1,250*l*; the number of tickets 9,000 at 2s. 6d. each; the prizes—1 of 15*l*. value, 3 of 10*l*., 8 of 5*l*, 12 of 4*l*., 20 of 3*l*., 100 of 1*l*., 150 of 10s., 1,000 of 5s. 2.000 of 3s., 5,681 of 1s. The articles, Sheffield and Birmingham ware, of which the prizes consisted, are stated to have been of the most inferior kind, probably not worth one-third of the value affixed to them; and assuming, therefore, that the lottery was fairly drawn (a very questionable point) [illegible] to the projectors must have been about [illegible] least 8,000 of the tickets must have bee[n] [illegible] the dupes by whom they have been purc[hased] [illegible] shape of sixpenny or fourpenny articles, [illegible] The civic authorities apparently do not [illegible] matters within their province; but the G[illegible] does possess the means, and ought to posse[ss] [illegible] nation, to check practices which injure [illegible] tradesman, encourage a vicious spirit of ga[mbl]ing in the weak and thoughtless, and enrich the designing knave. A correspondent who has requested that public attention may be again directed to this subject, says, that four other such lotteries are now in progress in different parts of the City.—Times.

LORD FFRENCH, a Roman Catholic Peer, has avowed himself a Repealer. He is, we believe, the only Member of the Peerage who has done so.—Globe.

LORD MORPETH was one of the passengers brought over from New York by the Great Western, which arrived at Bristol on Wednesday. We are happy to state that his Lordship is in the enjoyment of excellent health and spirits. On landing, he immediately set off for Chatsworth, where a select family circle was to be assembled to give his Lordship a hearty welcome home.—Pat.

REPORT FROM THE POOR-LAW COMMISSIONERS.—ON THE SANATORY CONDITION OF THE LABOURING POPULATION OF GREAT BRITAIN.—The following are the conclusions drawn from the evidence presented to the Poor-law Commissioners, as given in Mr. Chadwick's Report, and which are deserving of especial regard:—

After as careful an examination of the above evidence collected as I have been enabled to make, I beg leave to recapitulate the chief conclusions which that evidence appears to me to establish.

First, as to the extent and operation of the evils which are the subject of the inquiry.

That the various forms of epidemic, endemic, and other disease caused, or aggravated, or propagated chiefly amongst the labouring classes by atmospheric impurities, produced by decomposing animal and vegetable substances, by damp and filth, and close and over crowded dwellings, prevail amongst the population in every part of the kingdom, whether dwelling in separate houses, in rural villages, in small towns, in the larger towns—as they have been found to prevail in the lowest districts of the Metropolis.

That such disease, wherever its attacks are frequent, is always found in connexion with the physical circumstances above specified, and that where those circumstances are removed by drainage, proper cleansing, better ventilation, and other means of diminishing atmospheric impurity, the frequency and intensity of such disease are abated; and where the removal of the noxious agencies appears to be complete, such disease almost entirely disappears.

That high prosperity in respect of employment and wages, and various and abundant food, have afforded to the labouring classes no exemptions from attacks of epidemic diseases, which have been as frequent and as fatal in periods of commercial and manufacturing prosperity as in any others.

That the formation of all habits of cleanliness is obstructed by defective supplies of water.

That the annual loss of life from filth and bad ventilation is greater that the loss from death and wounds in any wars in which the country has been engaged in modern times.

That of the 43,000 cases of widowhood, and 112,000 cases of destitute orphans relieved from the poor's-rates in England and Wales alone, it appears that the greatest proportion of deaths of the heads of families occurred from the above specified and other removable causes; that their ages were under 45 years, that is to say, 13 years below the natural probabilities of life, as shown by the experience of the whole population of Sweden.

That the public loss from the premature deaths of the heads of families is greater than can be represented by any enumeration of the pecuniary burdens consequent upon their sickness and death.

That, measuring the loss of working ability amongst large classes by the instances of gain, even from incomplete arrangements for the removal of noxious influences from places of works or from abodes, that this loss cannot be less than eight or ten years.

That the ravages of epidemics and other diseases do not diminish, but tend to increase the pressure of population.

That in the districts where the mortality is the greatest, the births are not only sufficient to replace the numbers removed by death, but to add to the population.

That the younger population, bred up under noxious physical agencies, is inferior in physical organization and general health to a population preserved from the presence of such agencies.

That the population so exposed is less susceptible of moral influences, and the effects of education are more transient than with a healthy population.

That these adverse circumstances tend to produce an adult population short-lived, improvident, reckless, and intemperate, and with habitual avidity for sensual gratifications.

That these habits lead to the abandonment of all the conveniences and decencies of life, and especially lead to the overcrowding of their homes, which is destructive to the morality as well as the health of large classes of both sexes.

That defective town-cleansing fosters habits of the most abject degradation, and tends to the demoralisation of large numbers of human beings, who subsist by means of what they find amidst the noxious filth accumulated in neglected streets and by-places.

That the expenses of local public works are in general unequally and unfairly assessed, oppressively and uneconomically collected by separate collections wastefully expended in separate and inefficient operations, by unskilled and practically irresponsible officers.

That the existing law for the protection of the public health and the consitutional machinery for reclaiming its execution, such as the courts leet, have fallen into desuetude, and are in the state indicated by the prevalence of the evils they were intended to prevent.

Secondly. As to the means by which the present sanitary condition of the labouring classes may be improved;—

The primary and most important measures, and at the same time the most practicable, and within the recognised province of public administration, are drainage, the removal of all refuse of habitations, streets, and roads, and the improvement of the supplies of water.

That the chief obstacles to the immediate removal of decomposing refuse of towns and habitations have been the expense and annoyance of the hand labour and cartage requisite to the purpose.

That this expense may be reduced to one-twentieth or to one-thirtieth, or rendered inconsiderable by the use of water and self-acting means of removal by improved and cheaper sewers and drains.

That refuse, when thus held in suspension in water, may be most cheaply and innoxiously conveyed to any distance out of towns, and also in the best forms for productive use, and that the loss and injury by the pollution of natural streams may be avoided.

That for all these purposes, as well as for domestic use, better supplies of water are absolutely necessary.

That for successful and economical drainage, the adoption of geological areas as the basis of operations is requisite.

That appropriate scientific arrangements for public drainage would afford important facilities for private land drainage, which is important for the health as well as sustenance of the labouring classes.

That the expense of public drainage, of supplies of water laid on in houses, and of means of improved cleansing, would by a pecuniary gain, by diminishing the existing charges attendant on sickness and premature mortality.

That for the protection of the labouring classes and of the rate-payers against the inefficiency and waste in all new structural arrangements for the protection of the public health, and to ensure public confidence that the expenditure will be beneficial, securities should be taken that all new local public works are devised and conducted by responsible officers qualified by the possession of the science and skill of civil engineers.

That the oppressiveness and injustice of levies for the whole immediate outlay on such works upon persons who have only short interests in the benefits, may be avoided by care in spreading the expense over periods coincident with the benefits.

That, by appropriate arrangements, ten or fifteen per cent. on the ordinary outlay for drainage might be saved which on an estimate of the expense of the necessary structural alterations of one-third only of the existing tenements, would be a saving of one million and a half sterling, besides the reduction of the future expenses of management.

That for the prevention of the disease occasioned by defective ventilation, and other causes of impurity in places of work and other places where large numbers are assembled, and for the general promotion of the means necessary to prevent disease, it would be good economy to appoint a district medical officer independent of private practice, and with the securities of special qualifications and responsibilities to initiate sanitary measures, and reclaim the execution of law.

That, by the combination of all these arrangements, it is probable that the full ensurable period of life indicated by the Swedish tables; that is, an increase of thirteen years at least, may be extended to the whole of the labouring classes.

That the attainment of these and the other collateral advantages of reducing existing charges and expenditure, are within the power of the Legislature, and are dependent mainly on the securities taken for the application of practical science, skill, and economy in the direction of local public works.

And that the removal of noxious physical circumstances, and the promotion of civic, household, and personal cleanliness, are necessary to the improvement of the moral condition of the population: for that sound morality and refinement in manners and health are not long found co-existent with filthy habits amongst any class of the community.—Pat.

FRANCE.—In the Paris Papers, the letter of Lord Aberdeen to the Lords of the Admiralty, on the right of search, as practised by our cruisers on the coast of Africa, is the principal matter referred to. The National regards it as "a piece of hypocrisy, thrown out for the purpose of wheedling the French Government into acquiescence in the right of search." The Courrier Francais says, that on Lord Aberdeen's own showing, Great Britain is bound by every law, human and divine, to make restitution to all who had, by the exercise of that right, suffered in their property. The Commerce says, that, when asked to concur in the renewal of the Treaty which gave to England that right, M. De St. Aulaire may now boldly present himself to Lord Aberdeen, and, with His Lordship's letter in his hand, demand the abrogation of the Treaties of 1831 and 1833.

In their campaign against M. Guizot, and their clamours against England, the French Journals have found, we must say, every assistance from Lord Aberdeen, Lord Ashburton, and Tory diplomatists in general. The abandonment of all care for obtaining the right of search from the Americans, by Lord Ashburton, gave the foes of M. Guizot such increased force, that he, it seems, abandons all idea of facing the storm, and observing Treaties; and now comes before the public an official letter of Lord Aberdeen's, accusing the Admiralty of having sent out unwarranted instructions, and having directed the zeal of naval officers for putting down the Slave-trade in a course of illegality and violence.

According to a letter written by M. Shœlcher to the Paris Siècle, on the subject of the protection of the Slave-trade by Lord Stanley and the Tory Ministers, Lord Ashburton has but followed up Lord Stanley's views and spirit, especially in giving France the handle she so much desires, of resuscitating the Slave-trade. —Pat.

According to a return of the elections of 1839 and 1842, the Chamber of Deputies is thus composed—86 administrators, 70 judges or magistrates, 65 lawyers or ministerial officers, 61 officers of the army and navy, 53 mayors, 36 merchants and manufacturers, 24 literary men, artists, or savans, and physicians.—Pat.

FRANCE.—PARIS, OCT. 13.—GREAT and important news! The Bishop of Algiers has left his capital accompanied by three priests. On his arrival at Toulon he was joined by two other ecclesiastics, and all proceeded in the same carriage drawn by six horses to Pavia in Italy. On returning to Toulon they will find a Government vessel awaiting their orders. Now can you conceive what is the purpose of all these costs and of this great mission? Why, the Bishop of Algiers comes from Africa to Europe, and a carriage and a ship are placed at his disposal to convey a bone of one of the Fathers of the Church—St. Augustine! Now this may be all very well understood, so far as the Bishop is concerned, because it is a part of his creed or his business, but what has the French Government to do with it? How can such an expense be justified? Will it be by the Catholic, apostolic, and Roman faith of those who rule over us? Alas! not; for they have just placed at the disposal of Mussulmen another vessel to proceed from Algiers to Mecca. It is then nothing more than one of those acts of attention which it is considered right to show to the particular religion which sways each country. But then it does not appear to be perceived that these attentions alike towards all religious denominations, prove that those who give them do not partake of the faith of either, and are thereby setting the example of unbelief, which, coming from those in power, is doubly pernicious; for where the lower orders of society see the great treat religion with such indifference, they in turn imitate them, and leave matters of faith to children.

Our Government is seriously occupied, but without show or noise, about the colonization of Algeria, and the way in which it proceeds will show that it endeavours to act in this matter without awakening the attention of the journals or of foreign Powers. It is now about a year since that a Commission was appointed to draw up a plan for colonizing that country. Within the last few months their labours were known to be nearly completed, and yet nothing was published. And it might be supposed that there were hardly any thoughts entertained about obtaining the sanction of the Chambers. In fact, one of the Opposition papers, known to be always on the look out for Ministerial blunders, remarked that the Commission had not publicly made known that it had come to any conclusion, and yet steps were taking in Algeria to create several very important establishments. This called forth an answer from a Ministerial paper, which is tantamount to an avowal. It justifies the silence observed by the Commission by the impossibility which it found to hold a final meeting, and explains the haste of the Government to act owing to the urgency there is to forward affairs which are suffering in that colony. I think it would have been more exact to say, that a publicity was dreaded which would have called forth the interminable polemic of the French journals, and have roused the jealous attention of England. Be that as it may, an ordinance of the most important and significant character hitherto promulgated, relating to our possessions in the north of Africa, has just appeared.

Until now justice had been administered there by tribunals nearly independent of those of France, and of a kind almost exceptionable. Therefore a good deal was left to military authority; a certain toleration caused the French to shut their eyes to the proceedings of the Jewish and Mussulman authorities, who, as far as they could, retained the forms and traditions of the past. Indeed a large space in the French courts of justice was left for the Mussulman judges when any of their co-religionists were tried. But the new ordinance has greatly changed or limited all this. It withdraws all authority from the rabbies, and they can no longer go beyond the narrow circle of ecclesiastical discipline, and will be incompetent to decide the most trivial offences, coming within the jurisdiction of the French tribunals. The ordinance is also but little favourable to the Mussulman; it leaves to the Cadis to decide questions between persons of their own nation; but one in which a Frenchman is concerned must be brought before the French tribunals. Formerly, as I have already informed you, an equal number of Mussulman judges to that of the French was allowed, even in criminal cases, but now they are wholly excluded, no exception being made if the criminal be a native. A Mussulman judge can only assist in affairs of simple interest; for instance, in the commercial court, and there even only one is admitted, and he has merely a consulting voice allowed him. You see, then, that a shadow of the past is alone left, and the object is to efface slowly but entirely all traces of it.

On the other hand, the independence of the French tribunals in Algeria are restrained by the same ordinance. I do not now enter into any details, but it will suffice for you to know that new ties are established with the judicial authority in the interior of France; and this is another sign of the assimilation which it is proposed to attain of the colony to the mother country.

What precedes leads me naturally to speak of the general returns of committals for criminal and other offences, which has just been published for the year 1840. If dependence can be placed on statistical results, this return is very lamentable. It shows a sensible increase in the number of crimes beyond those of the preceding year. If this increase had only happened during that year, 1840, it might have been thought to be accidental, and to be accounted for by some particular and passing cause. But such is not the case; this increase during the abovementioned year is but a link of a chain of crimes always becoming heavier for several years past, the reason therefore must be looked for in the actual state of things, and perhaps this state is the effect of the Revolution of 1830. I am a sincere admirer of that Revolution, and of the dynasty which it placed on the throne of France, but I cannot help drawing a conclusion which has in its favour every appearance of truth. It is not, however, to the fact itself I wish to call your attention, but rather to the manner in which it is appreciated by our most distinguished public writers.

Under the Restoration, which favoured the Roman clergy, who in turn encouraged ignorance, the cry from every part of the Liberal camp was, that the source of all the evils of society arose from this very ignorance, and the extensive statistical work of M. Dupin on the intellectual state of France met then with the highest encomiums. Now, when crimes increase in number and enormity, it is pretended that it does not proceed from ignorance, but from the knowledge spread among the people since 1830. It is also asserted that crime has kept pace with the increase of schools!! And, further, these assertions are made by the very men who under the Restoration, maintained the contrary. Yes, among others, Dupin himself, the author of the statistical publication on behalf of science, is now writing against the diffusion of knowledge, and calls for what he formerly held in little esteem, namely, the assistance of religion to moralize the people. You see it is always the same system, religion is wanted for others, for every one indeed but self.

Undoubtedly religion is the sovereign remedy for this evil as well as for every other, but religion is not the clergy, true and efficacious religion is not that which improves by means of the bones of St. Augustine, and yet this is what we are offered to regenerate France! I have lately myself seen marvellous effects produced on prisoners by a very different faith,—need I add, Evangelical faith,—and all the efforts of those who had the direction of the prison tended to stifle its blessed effects! But I will reserve this subject for another letter, and after the general sad tenour of my present communication, I hope in my next to rejoice you in regard to one little point at least.—From the Correspondent of the Record.

ALGIERS.—In regard to the colonization of Algeria, a morning contemporary has the following remarks:—

"Paris journals have been crying out to Marshal Soult and M. Guizot why they do not colonise Algeria. They might have replied, that the French are too fond of towns, and in general too comfortable at home, to go and drain the marshes of Algeria, under the fire of the Arabs. The French have now possessed Algeria twelve years; there are 40,000 French souls in the colony, and these demand 80,000 soldiers and eighty millions of francs each year to protect and feed them. The object of the emigrants thither is to get their share of the eighty millions, as contractors, suttlers, brokers, and venders. The 40,000 French are the followers of a camp, not colonizers of a country. Despairing of French colonists, the Ministry had turned its views to Switzerland, and hoped to entice some settlers from that hardy and agricultural, and at the same time wealthy peasantry; but the project failed. Now, however, Marshal Soult has hit upon a plan for satisfying the partisans of African colonization. He is going to locate the monks of La Trappe in Algeria. The poor Trappists have been so clamoured against in France, that they quitted it; but now are to have remuneration in Algeria. The Parisian Globe informs us that the Superior of the order went to General Bugeaud, and the General said to him "Rev. Sir, the sword first, and the cross after." We fear that this conversion of a war of razzias or ghazzias, as the General calls them, into a crusade, will rather exasperate the Arabs than reconcile them to submission. For our part we have compassion both for the Arab and the Trappist, equally the victims of the French thirst of what they call colonization. Marshal Soult, indeed, we acquit. The old soldier no doubt considered the shipment of the Trappists to Africa as an excellent joke. If he could but send Carlists, and Republicans, and newspaper writers there at the same time, and thus get rid of all the pests of the empire at once, he no doubt would consider it as a magnificent achievement."—Record.

HOLLAND.—The King of Holland opened the session of the States-General at the Hague on Monday. His speech gives on the whole as favourable a picture of the state of the Dutch people as could be drawn of any other in Europe at the present time. Nevertheless, the revenue has fallen off, and an increase in the duties on inheritance and stamps is proposed to make up the deficiency. Economy is promised. Education is said to be advancing satisfactorily. A new poor-law and a new Tariff are in contemplation.—Pat. 24th October.

DENMARK.—A letter from Copenhagen states, that a peasant of Boeslund, in the island of Zealand, whilst ploughing, discovered two gold urns, filled with ashes, chased with foliage and fruits, and bearing on the top of the cover a figure of Odin, the Jupiter of the Scandinavians. This figure is represented standing, bearing on one shoulder the two crows Hunin (Thought) and Munin (Memory); and at its feet two wolves, symbols of his power. These urns are exactly alike, in good preservation, and admirably wrought. The gold is exceedingly thin, except at the edges. They are about six inches in diameter and nine inches in height, comprising the cover but not the figure, and their weight is little more than 2lbs. The peasant has delivered them to the Government, which paid him the value of the gold, and ordered them to be deposited in the Museum of Copenhagen. They are supposed to belong to the fifth century.—Record.

EGYPT.—We find in the Semaphore Marseilles of the 25th inst. an important notice from the Chamber of Commerce of that city, informing the merchants that, on the invitation of the Consul-General of France at Alexandria, the Viceroy, of Egypt had ordered that all cases of goods forwarded in transitu between Suez and Alexandria would, without distinction of country, be allowed to pass freely on the mere declaration of their contents, accompanied by an invoice. The duty to be levied on those goods was fixed at one half per cent. ad valorem. This decision of Mehemet Ali was communicated to the Chamber of Commerce by the Minister of Commerce and Agriculture in a letter of the 17th inst.—Pat.

AMERICA.—An Expedition, it was stated, was fitting out at Vera Cruz, the destination of which was Galveston, Texas. Troops were collecting in the neighbourhood to form the military part of the Expedition. The iron war-steamer the Guadaloupe was at Vera Cruz, preparing to sail for Galveston, for the purpose of reconnoitring the island and capturing any Texian vessels she might fall in with, previous to the sailing of the Expedition for the invasion of Texas by sea. Meanwhile, a Mexican force of 1,300 men, under the command of General Wall, had invaded Texas by land. On the 11th ult. they completely surprised San Antonio. 53 of the principal citizens were taken. The Circuit Court was in Session, and the Judge and officers of the Court were made prisoners.

The President of Texas had revoked the blockade of the ports of Mexico, in order to allow a more favourable opportunity for the mediation of England and the United States.

The operation of the new tariff had quite crippled the trade with England at New York. Large quantities of goods being daily transhipped to this country on account of its provisions. Business was unusually dull. As in England so in America, discussions in the press on the advantages or otherwise of free trade as opposed to "protection" to native industry, were of daily occurrence.—Pat. 31st Oct.

Camp Ferozepore, the 18th December, 1842.

This day Major General Pollock, C. B., passed the Sutlej at the head of the artillery and cavalry, and of the 2d Brigade of infantry of the army under his command.

The Major General was received at the foot of the bridge by the Governor General.

The 26th regiment of native infantry attached to the 2d Brigade, was, at the desire of the Governor General, formed into a hollow square, and the Governor General entering the square with Major General Pollock, informed Major Huish, commanding the regiment, that Major General Pollock having, in an especial manner, expressed his obligations to the 26th regiment, and represented their exemplary conduct on all occasions as meriting a particular mark of the approbation of the Government, he had great gratification in bestowing upon them, on their return to India, the honour of being henceforward a regiment of light infantry.

Secret Department; Camp Ferozepore, 20th Dec. 1842.

Camp Loolianuee, 18th Dec. 1842.

SIR,—I find that in my despatch of the 31st of August last, detailing the battle of Ghoin, I unfortunately omitted the name of Captain Ripley of the 1st European regiment, late Fort Adjutant at Candahar. Although his name was inserted in the duplicate of that despatch, I fear this omission cannot now be rectified, which I am sorry for, as Captain Ripley is a very zealous Officer, and I have frequently derived benefit from his public services. In the battle now referred to, he attended me in the field, and received my thanks for his conduct.

I am, &c.

ADVERTISEMENT.

AS the members of the present Christian Community at Lucknow form but a small portion of Colonel Low's friends, and there are many in different parts of India who would gladly avail themselves of any opportunity of showing the estimation in which he is held by them, the Committee appointed by the subscribers at Lucknow beg to circulate for their information the proposal which was generally approved of by the Lucknow Community, and to assure those who may wish to subscribe, that they will have much pleasure in receiving their contribution to the Portrait.

"To the Community at Lucknow.

As Lieut. Colonel Low, C.B. Resident at Lucknow is about to leave India, it is proposed that a subscription should be opened for the purpose of obtaining a Portrait of him to be executed by George Beechey, Esq. and kept in the Banquetting Rooms at Lucknow, in order to perpetuate the recollection of the many virtues which have adorned his public and private character, that have caused him to be universally esteemed and respected, and have enabled him to conciliate the good opinion of every one who has had the happiness of knowing him.

Persons desirous of subscribing are requested to put down their names with the amount of their subscriptions, and to vote for a Committee who will prepare and present an Address to Colonel Low, C. B. previous to his departure."

In accordance with the above proposal a Committee was formed at Lucknow, and an Address presented—and although before Col. Low's departure it was impossible to ascertain the probable amount of subscriptions, Mr. Beechey very handsomely undertook to paint the picture.

By order of the Committee,

J. SPENCER LOGIN,

Lucknow, 28th Dec. 1842. Secretary.

EUROPEAN AND ORIENTAL AGENCY.

MR. PARKE PITTAR

HAVING arranged the formation of an Agency, the particular object of which will be the transaction of affairs, connected with this country and Europe, begs to offer his services to the community of India, in any way they can be rendered available.

A peculiar and important feature in the Agency now established, will consist in the annual return of Mr. P. Pittar to India. Taking advantage of the Peninsular and Oriental Company's Steam Vessels, he purposes re-visiting Calcutta about the latter end of every October, and returning to Europe about the middle of the following February, thus affording to persons entrusting the management of their affairs to his care, the opportunity of a personal conference and explanation of their views and intentions,—an advantage in the transaction of affairs of a complicated delicate or family nature, the greatness of which need not be commented upon.

A long residence in India, combined with an intimate knowledge of almost every description of manufactured article, and its various manufacturers, rendering him peculiarly fitted for the office of Agent to persons procuring their supplies or other articles, such as Table Equipages, Philosophical and Optical Instruments, Books, Maps, Sporting Apparatus, Musical Instruments, Military Equipments, Wines, &c., &c., direct from England or the Continent, he offers them his services with every confidence that his selections will give the most perfect satisfaction, whether as regarding quality, cheapness, or adaptation to the climate; but in the execution of these commissions, a previous remittance for their full amount, or reference for payment, will invariably be required.

Every article purchased through this Agency will be most minutely examined previous to its being packed and the same care under every circumstance, taken, as if persons were themselves individually present and superintending. Packages of a large size will, as usual, be shipped by fast-vessels to their destined port; but those of smaller dimensions, will, (unless otherwise instructed,) be sent through the Peninsular and Oriental Company's Office, Overland: thus enabling persons in most instances to receive their orders fully executed within four months from the date of the transmission of their instructions.

In transactions of a private and confidential nature a fair remuneration, according to circumstances, will be expected; in those of the ordinary nature of Agency Business, the Commission will be regulated by the customary rates; and for the selection, purchase and shipment of goods, a Commission of 5 per cent. on the gross amount will be charged.

Mr. P. Pittar has taken his passage in the India Steamer, to sail on the 10th February, for Suez and, therefore, requests for the present, that all letters intended for him may be directed to his residence, No. 36, Dhurrumtollah, Calcutta; but after her departure, to the address of MR. PARKE PITTAR, EUROPEAN AND ORIENTAL AGENCY OFFICE, LONDON, where they will meet with the most prompt attention.

The Decay of the Teeth and Gums arises from various causes; but, principally, it may be attributed to early neglect, ill health and the use of Tooth Powders containing mineral and other deleterious acids, which give a momentary whiteness to the teeth, while they corrode the enamel!—The extreme prevalence of this last cause is too well known to need comment. To this fact, indeed, is principally to be attributed the long Botanical Research, which was happily terminated by the most felicitous discovery ever given to the world for the PRESERVATION of the TEETH, GUMS, and BREATH, viz.—ROWLAND'S ODONTO, or PEARL DENTIFRICE; this Powder now occupies a distinguished place at the Toilets of the Sovereigns and the Nobility throughout Europe, while the general demand for it at once announces the favour in which it is held by the public at large.

China.—The intelligence which has just been received from China, extending to the 6th of December, is highly important. Sir Henry Pottinger has ascertained, that no fewer than two hundred and eighty-three of the unfortunate individuals, chiefly natives of India, who were on board the Nerbudda and the Ann, when they were wrecked on the island of Formosa, have been put to death in cold blood by the Chinese authorities. They had falsely represented to the Emperor, that both the vessels had gone to the island with hostile intentions, and that the prisoners were captured in battle; and they allege that these flagitious murders were perpetrated in obedience to the Imperial commands. Sir Henry Pottinger, in his Proclamation, declares his intention respectfully, but firmly, to represent the real facts of the case to the Emperor, and to demand that the local authorities on the Island shall be degraded, and brought to condign punishment, and that their property shall be confiscated, and paid over to the officers of the British Government, for the relief of the families of the innocent men who have thus been put to death. The Plenipotentiary further declares, that without this atonement, he is not prepared to say that this event will not occasion a serious misunderstanding, or that it may not even lead to a renewal of hostilities, between the two countries.

It is most gratifying to find the Plenipotentiary at once assume so firm a tone on this occasion; and there can be no doubt that his representations to the Cabinet of Pekin will procure immediate and ample redress. The threat of a renewal of hostilities, the first result of which would be to level the capital of Formosa with the ground, may be expected to produce an almost magical effect on the fears of the Emperor, and to elicit an Imperial Edict for the condign punishment of the guilty, which shall be conveyed at the rate of 600 lee a day. Sir Henry Pottinger has we think acted wisely in stating so distinctly that the authorities on the island had deceived His Majesty; for although the capture of the men in open warfare would have afforded no excuse for the truculent order of the Emperor, the deception which has been practised will afford him an opportunity of making the most ample atonement, without any apparent sacrifice of dignity. This decisive conduct of the Plenipotentiary will be found to exert the most happy influence on our future intercourse with the Chinese. The punishment of the offenders will tend to give general security to all Europeans, who may visit any part of the coast, or who may be thrown upon it by accident. The prompt and energetic representation now sent to Pekin, will convince the Emperor and his Ministers, that no injustice or violence towards the subjects of the British Crown will be suffered with impunity, and that if redress is not obtained when respectfully demanded, it will be exacted at the cannon's mouth.

Sir Henry Pottinger, who arrived at Hong Kong in the beginning of December, intended to return immediately to the North, to demand redress for the murder of these unfortunate victims. The Chinese will thus perceive that he is in earnest and not to be trifled with. The Imperial Commissioners, who were on their way to Canton to open commercial negotiations, will discover on their arrival, that the British Minister is resolved not to enter on these discussions till full reparation has been obtained for the massacre, and that he is already at Chusan, demanding the condign punishment of the offenders. The effect of this promptitude and decision, on the minds of those high officers of the Empire and the great body of the people, will be most salutary. They will thus be made to feel that while the English are ready and even anxious to enter into the largest commercial transactions, they have now a political character to support, and warlike resources at their command, and will allow no insult or injury to pass unpunished.

The papers now received contain two publications of the Imperial Will; the one, dated the 8th of September, gives the various items concerning the "settlement of affairs" with the barbarians, which have received the "affix of the Imperial seal." It appears that the High Commissioners have very patriotically requested, that the gravest punishment may be inflicted on them for their concessions to the English, and that the Emperor has graciously acquitted them of all guilt. The indemnity of twenty-one millions, the Emperor declares to be a vast amount, and asks with great naiveté where such a sum is to come from. But the matter is settled at once, by making the Minister Ye King alone responsible for arranging the matter, and registering the places which are to furnish it. The peace however is evidently a subject of gratification with his Majesty, and he declares that as it has now been concluded, "the people of both nations are to be regarded as one mutual whole." He is evidently anxious that the pacification should not be disturbed. Ye King is therefore directed to give "the closest attention to the minutest particulars, that the treaty may be drawn up in the most clear and intelligible terms, to prevent all difficulties and confusion of affairs." Relative to the claims on the Hong Merchants, the proclamation of the 8th Sept. states, that as to the old debts, the foreigners will not dare to seek the interference of the officers of Government. In a subsequent proclamation, however, dated the 30th of September, it appears that the Imperial Government has acknowledged these claims, evidently in addition to the sum which was stipulated to be paid by the treaty of Nankin; for the first article states, that "the Chinese Government will at present be responsible for the Hong Merchants paying to their English creditors debts to the amount of Two Millions of dollars. Hereafter Hong Merchants and all other classes of natives are to be alone responsible for their own debts, the Mandarins affording only their official aid."

Cooly Emigration.—The despatch of Coolies to the Mauritius has commenced under the operation of the Act, and it is reported that arrangements are in progress for sending six or seven thousand thither before the close of the present monsoon. The nature of these arrangements has not been recorded by any of our contemporaries, and the public is therefore without the means of comparing the new system of emigration, with that which was put down by law, or of determining how far it is likely to be effectual in permanently checking the growth of abuses. It was generally understood, that the system proposed by the Ministry at home provided that the Emigration Agent of the Mauritius in Calcutta and the other ports should engage and despatch laborers for the Island, who should be at liberty on their arrival to hire themselves to the planters; that the treasury of the Island should be charged with their passage-money; and that the Government of India, should appoint Protectors at the different ports, to watch over the emigration, and prevent the violation of the laws. We now learn that the coolies are engaged, as they were under the old system, by mercantile firms in Calcutta and that the vessels employed in transporting the laborers are chartered by them. It is desirable to know what motives could induce Houses of business in Calcutta, to give up their time to the gratuitous promotion of the system. If they are to be remunerated for their labour, it is desirable that the amount and the mode of that remuneration should be known. If they are to be paid so much a head by the Government of the Mauritius for every Cooly they land, the nature of the speculation is easily understood. If they are acting as Agents for particular planters on the Island, the question naturally occurs how are those planters to be repaid, when they can possess no claim on the labor of the emigrants after their arrival?

One of the first vessels employed in conveying laborers has been detected in a nefarious attempt to violate the law, and to embark a greater number than the Act permits. It is somewhat singular that a procedure, which fixes so deep a moral stigma on all who were engaged in it, should not have been repudiated by the Commander of the vessel, or the House of Agency by which the vessel was chartered. If the attempt to smuggle these additional laborers was made without the cognizance of the Captain and the consignees of the vessel, a sense of honor should have led them to explain a circumstance so discreditable. If the attempt was made,—which we can scarcely credit,—with their knowledge, we have clear evidence of the kind of morality which this system is calculated to foster. There can be little doubt that the attempt will be repeated. Indeed, we find from the Englishman, that an effort has been made, and perhaps with success, to take a greater number of Coolies than the proportion allowed by law, under the promise that they are to occupy the Cabins of the ship. If there could be any security that they would not be turned out to herd with the 'tween-deck Coolies, as soon as the Pilot had left the ship, the objection to this course would be mitigated; but where abuses cannot be prevented, the only plan of safety is to adhere to the strict letter of the law. The attempt thus made in one instance to evade, and in the other to violate the law, establishes the necessity of extraordinary exertions on the part of those who are appointed to watch over the execution of it. There is little reason to hope that the vigilance of the Pilot and the Preventive officer will be able effectually to cope with the ingenuity of the Commander, if he has resolved to take more Coolies than the law allows. Both these officers are from the nature of their duties obliged to remain on deck during the day, and can enjoy no opportunity of knowing what may be passing below. When the coolies are mustered before them, they can feel no certainty that others are not concealed in various parts of the ship, and their certificate can bear testimony only to the number exhibited before them. The only guarantee against the surreptitious embarkation of Coolies, lies in the fidelity and vigilance of the Protector at the Isle of France, and there is reason to fear, from the specimen exhibited by the Northumberland, that effectual means will be adopted to lull suspicion, and evade the provisions of the law at Port Louis.

THE HARDSHIP OF EUROPEANS HAVING THEIR SUITS DECIDED BY NATIVE JUDGES.—The Hurkaru of Thursday last reverts to this subject, in reference to a particular case reported in the Englishman, and affirms that the remarks we offered on the subject were wide of the mark. We have diligently compared the observations of our contemporary with the enactments which have been successively passed on this very important question, but must confess that we are unable to discover any reason for altering the opinion we originally formed on the application of the law to the suit under consideration.

The Law which gave Principal Sudder Ameens cognizance of all suits above 5,000 Rupees was passed on the 2d of October, 1837. On the 23d of February, 1838, the Sudder communicated their first orders to the Judges with reference to this Act, and directed them immediately to transfer all suits above that amount to the Principal Sudder Ameens, but granted them permission to retain any such suits on their own files, provided they saw sufficient cause for so doing. At the same time they were distinctly forbidden to refer to Native Judges, ignorant of the English language, any suits in which the documentary evidence was in that tongue. On the 18th of October 1839, this latter injunction was qualified; and it was ordered that the mere recital, in the initial petition, of the existence of an English document in support of a claim, was not to constitute a necessary ground for the retention of a suit on the Judge's file. The intent of this Order was evidently, that if there happened to be among the "exhibits" an English document, which might be readily translated into Bengalee, and understood without any acquaintance with English, the suit might still be referred to the Principal Sudder Ameen. The Order is worded with much care. Paragraph 2, alludes to the existence of an English Document, Par 3. says that upon the party tendering an English document, &c. Par. 4. orders the Judge, with due advertence to the English writing, to exercise his own discretion, and if it (the English writing) should appear likely to involve such complicated questions as would make a knowledge of English indispensible to a correct adjudication of the case, to recal it to his own file; but if the English writing should be a simple account, bill or similar document, to leave the adjudication of the suit to the Native Judge.

The spirit of this Order is so evident and so equitable, that we scarcely need to lay any stress on the marked and repeated use of the singular number. We will concede to our contemporary, that 'an English document,' and 'the English writing,' may mean two documents and two writings; but we must re-affirm that when the initial petition recited the existence of sixty or seventy English legal documents, which could not be translated into Oordoo with sufficient accuracy, it was the duty of the Judge, "to have seen fit" at once to retain the suit on his own file; and that such a suit could not, by any fair and equitable construction, be brought within the circle of those cases, in which the Judge was to decide upon the Court in which the case was to be adjudicated, after the documents had been translated. The rule appears to us to remain unaltered—that no suits, in which the documentary evidence may be in English, shall be referred in the first or second instance to a Judge ignorant of that language. The exception refers only to cases in which there may be "an English document," in which case the original and a translation of it were to be laid before the Judge, that he might determine, from the simplicity or the complexity of its character, whether to adjudicate the case himself, or to refer it to the Native Judge. In the case under review, the documentary evidence was in English, in untranslatable English, and it came clearly within the scope of the rule, and not of the exception; and the cognizance of it belonged from the beginning to the Judge's Court according to law, to reason and to equity.

We cannot see that the Order of 1839 makes it obligatory on parties, in every instance, to file translations of every document, before the Judge decides whether any case shall be tried in his own tribunal, or in the lower Court. If the Judge were to refrain from putting the parties to the expense of such a proceeding, and at once retain any particular case on his own file, he would act in accordance with the strict letter of the law, and, what is more, in accordance with its equitable intentions. It could never have been the intention of Government to subject suitors to so great and gratuitous a hardship, as that which would be inflicted on them, if the interpretation of our contemporary is to hold good. This would have been indeed to abrogate the 4th Paragraph of the equitable Order of 1838, whereas the Order of 1839, which is said to support this interpretation, is declared to be only a modification of it.

So much for the necessity of translating documents, drawn up in the most approved English legal phraseology, before the Judge is to decide whether those translations shall be necessary, or not, to the adjudication of the suit. But after the translations had been made, and it became clear that the documents were not "simple accounts, bills or similar documents," but "involved such complicated questions" as would make "a knowledge of English indispensible to the correct adjudication of the case," it appears to have been the undoubted duty of the Judge to retain it on his own file. The Hurkaru says, that "the subsequent petition of the parties to have the case retained on the Judge's file on the ground of those documents, was ineffective, because it was not filed at the proper stage of the case." But what need was there of any petition at all? If there be any meaning in words, it is evidently made incumbent on the Judge, without any application from the parties, as soon as he perceives that the case cannot be "correctly adjudged" without a knowledge of English, which knowledge the Moosulman Judge does not possess, to sit down to the examination of it himself.

Our contemporary cites an instance in which Prusunnu-coomar Tagore was a party to a suit, in which several deeds, drawn up by lawyers in Calcutta, formed part of the evidence, and states that a special reference was made to the Sudder Court, and by the Sudder to Government, of the expense and inconvenience occasioned by the Circular; but that neither the Court nor Government directed the suit to be tried by the European Judge, which they would have done, had our interpretation of the Order been correct. We must however see the particulars of this case, and the correspondence which passed on the occasion, before we admit it to be conclusive against us. We find it impossible to admit that Government ever intended that suits should be adjudicated by Judges, who, from whatever cause, were unable to comprehend the documentary evidence on which they were based. We cannot bring ourselves to admit that it was ever contemplated by Government, that in suits which must be decided by the European Judge, the parties should be put to the unnecessary expense, trouble and delay of procuring translations of sixty or seventy documents. We believe that a principle of justice would preserve Government from perpetrating the anomaly first named, and that the dictates of common sense would keep them from the second. Government is too well aware of the grievance which is occasioned by the necessity of confiding suits to the cognizance of Civilians who are imperfectly acquainted with the languages of the country, to multiply the evil by committing suits, which cannot be comprehended without a knowledge of English, to Native Judges who are entirely ignorant of it.

THE BAPTIST ASSOCIATION.—The Ministers and Missionaries of the Baptist Denomination have been assembled in Serampore during the past week, for the purpose of forming an Association of their respective Churches, in imitation of the economy generally pursued by the denomination in Europe and America. The following Ministers, together with other friends, were present; the Rev. Dr. Yates, W. Robinson, W. Carey, A. Leslie, C. C. Aratoon, J. Williamson, G. Pearce, J. C. Fink, J. Mack, J. Wenger, W. W. Evans and G. Small. The greatest possible harmony and cordiality prevailed; and all the services both in Bengalee and English were truly delightful and profitable. Some of the Ministers were absent from unavoidable causes.

An Association was formed, and designated the ASSOCIATION OF BAPTIST CHURCHES IN BENGAL; the Rev. W. Robinson, of Dacca, was elected Moderator for the present year, and the Rev. J. Mack and the Rev. W. W. Evans were requested to discharge the duties of Secretaries to the Association.

It was agreed, that the next Meeting of the Association should be held in Calcutta, during the second week of January, 1844; and the Rev. Dr. Yates was appointed to preach the Sermon in English, and the Rev. J. Wenger, that in Bengalee.

Much of the beneficial influence to be expected from such an Institution as has now been formed, it would be difficult to make apparent by any statement. It is connected with the exhilaration of fraternal intercourse, when the disappointed and the successful, the faint and the confident meet together, and commune of their peculiar and their common interests and expectations. Benefit of this kind, beyond the hope of the most sanguine, has been realized even in the infancy of the Association; and much more may be anticipated, when attention ceases to be required for its mere organization, and the whole time devoted to its assemblies can be given to their proper objects. Hereafter the Association will be the means of concentrating for the Baptist Mission, the most important information respecting the spiritual wants of the various districts of Bengal, the openings which may occur in them for the communication of the Gospel, and the resources which may be developed in the country. It will also lead to the proposal of undertakings of general and extensive usefulness, for the execution of which every thing requisite will be found within the Association itself. A beginning of such things has been realized already. Besides that two very interesting calls for the assistance of Native Preachers have been happily met, the Association has obtained the promise of several of its members to prepare, under its sanction, books of Christian instruction for the Native Converts, both suited to the exigencies of the times, and calculated for constant use: and there will immediately appear, we believe, a Monthly Magazine, in English and Bengalee, for the diffusion of interesting religious intelligence, and sound Christian doctrine, and the promotion of true piety amongst the Native Churches. The charge will be very moderate; but, even then, it can scarcely be expected that a subscription list should be obtained, sufficient for maintaining the Magazine, amongst the Native converts. The help of the Christian community generally will therefore be solicited; and while each subscriber, it is hoped, will find in the English side of the work a fair return for his subscription, he will have the satisfaction also of knowing, that he is contributing to place the means of spiritual edification and enjoyment within the reach of his less privileged brethren, the Native members of our Churches.

Fifty years ago, the Baptist Mission was formed by a mere handful of Christian men, and with resources which, except to the eye of faith, must have appeared ridiculous in connection with the object to be pursued. The result has been any thing but ridiculous. It satisfies even the imagination. Should the influence of the Association now formed, grow after a like fashion during the next fifty years, and be accompanied by a similar contemporaneous vigor in other Evangelical denominations in what a position will Christianity stand in Bengal, when our next Jubilee is held!

ABOLITION OF SLAVERY IN INDIA.—The Act, of which the draft was given in the last number of the official Gazette, is unquestionably the most important which has been published by this Government, since the celebrated abolition of Suttee. In thirty short lines, slavery is extinguished throughout the whole empire of British India. The enactment has all the grace of a spontaneous concession. Other grievances have been the theme of incessant agitation at home, and the removal of them has been forced on the Government by the pressure from without. But though the subject of Indian Slavery has not failed to engage the attention of benevolent minds in England, and efforts have not been wanting to procure its abolition, yet, it has never occupied so prominent a place among public objects, nor has the abolition of slavery been demanded with such stern and incessant importunity, as to force it irresistibly on the attention of the Government of India. While the emancipation of the slaves in the West Indies is to be traced distinctly to an uncontrolable burst of national indignation, the public ardor on the subject of East India Slavery has alternately waxed and waned, and Government has been left to abolish it at its own leisure. The great Charter of emancipation has now been promulgated.

The injustice, not of Eight, but of Twenty-eight centuries is at length redressed. Since the period when the Hindoos first crossed the Indus, and reduced this country to subjection, and introduced the iniquitous law that a "state of servitude was natural to men of the servile class," and established fifteen different sorts of slaves, through every change of circumstance or government or dynasty, man has not ceased to hold his fellow man in a state of slavery. From the time when the Institutes of Munoo were compiled, to the present time, the institution of slavery has never ceased to disturb the happiness of the community; and we may safely affirm that 1843 is the first year, since the tenth century before Christ, in which it could be said, with any truth, that "Slaves cannot breathe in India."

It is gratifying to trace in this law the gradual progress of sound and benevolent principle in the administration of India. Under the Hindoo and Mahomedan dynasties, we are not surprized to find the existence of slavery authorized by law, and enforced by the Courts. But on this particular point our first rulers do not seem to have been an inch in advance of their half civilized predecessors. When for the first time we took the public administration into our own hands in 1772, not only was no effort made to mitigate the slavery which existed, but it was enacted by British statesmen that "the family of the criminals, who were convicted of highway robbery, should become the slaves of the state, and be disposed of for the general benefit and convenience of the people." It was also ordained that "every convicted murderer and felon, not condemned to death by the sentence of the Court, should be sold for a slave, or transported as such to the penal settlement on the Coast of Sumatra!" Such were the principles introduced into the first code of laws promulgated by British authority in India. The glorious contrast, which the present Act presents after the lapse of seventy years, to the Act of 1772 cannot fail to impart the highest gratification to every benevolent mind, not merely as it affords a mitigation of present misery, but as it holds out the prospect of still farther improvement in the administration of this country.

The present Act does not, it is true, propose formally to abolish slavery in India, but it renders the existence of Slavery impossible, by forbidding the Courts to uphold it in any form, by giving every man a right in whatever property he may acquire by his own labour or by inheritance, and by attaching the same penalty to every act done against a man deemed a slave, with which the act would be visited, if done against a free man. When every slave is permitted thus to appeal to the Courts for the establishment or enjoyment of his liberty, slavery becomes virtually extinct. It cannot exist except through the support of the Courts. A slave, who chooses to forego his appeal for freedom to the Courts, is legally a free man, though voluntarily a slave. The Act therefore, although cautiously penned, and prudently entitled, "An Act for declaring and amending the law regarding the condition of slavery," is to all intents and purposes a Law for the abolition of slavery throughout the Company's territories.

The ease with which the state of slavery has been thus abolished, among a hundred millions of people, with a single stroke of the pen, ought not to be overlooked. The instruction it affords us is most salutary. It gives us another proof, that the obstacles to improvement in India arise quite as much from the lethargy or prejudices of its government as from the nature of circumstances. Those difficulties vanish the moment they have summoned resolution enough to encounter them. Thus it was with Suttees; thus it was with the connection of Government with the shrines of idolatry, and with many other questions involving the welfare of the country, which were annually postponed, nominally, from regard to the obstacles said to lie in the way, but really for want of little virtuous pluck at the Council Chamber. And those other victories, which yet remain to be achieved, to render our Government a blessing to India, will depend almost entirely upon the courage with which the members of the administration are enabled to overcome their own fears and prejudices.

The following is the Draft of the Act:—

An Act for declaring and amending the law regarding the condition of Slavery within the Territories of the East India Company.

I. It is hereby enacted and declared, that no public Officer shall in execution of any decree or order of Court, or for the enforcement of any demand of Rent or Revenue sell or cause to be sold any person or the right to the compulsory labour or services of any person on the ground that such person is in a state of slavery.

II. And it is hereby declared and enacted, that no rights arising out of an alleged property in the person and services of another as a slave shall be enforced by any Civil or Criminal Court or Magistrate within the Territories of the East India Company.

III. And it is hereby declared and enacted, that no person who may have acquired property by his own industry or by the exercise of any art, calling or profession, or by inheritance, assignment, gift or bequest shall be dispossessed of such property or prevented from taking possession thereof on the ground that such person or that the person from whom the property may have been derived was a slave.

IV. And it is hereby enacted, that any Act which would be a penal offence if done to a free man, shall be equally an offence if done to any person on the pretext of his being in a condition of slavery.

THE HURKARU AND THE GATES.—Mrs. Hannah Moore, in a preface to one of her works, dwells much on the difficulty of knowing when to stop. We have endeavoured to profit by her experience, and have thought it prudent to limit our own remarks upon any particular subject to three consecutive notices. But we are now obliged to break through this rule, from courtesy to the Hurkaru, and again to return to the Gates. Our "esteemed" contemporary, in his issue of last Friday says, it is our "mad subject;" that we have gone a little out of our mind, and that we are likely to gratify our readers with a weekly article on the inauspicious procession, till it has been strangled in embryo, or has died a natural death. A sage philosopher has somewhere remarked that no man condemns a vice in another, to which he has not a natural propensity himself. We have sometimes been disposed to cavil at this maxim, and a feeling of self love has even questioned the accuracy of it, but the instance now presented by our worthy contemporary goes far to show, that there is some solid foundation for it. The monomania, which he lays at our door, has been no where more conspicuous than in his own columns, since the Insurrection at Cabul drove him a good deal out of his mind. Since that unhappy event, he has dwelt week after week on the iniquity of the Affghan invasion and the crimes of Lord Auckland, with a degree of pertinacity almost without example. With the exception of our still more esteemed Contemporary, the Bombay Times, the Press of India has never furnished a clearer exhibition of this feeling. So constantly indeed has the subject been intruded on his readers as to lead to the suspicion, that the Editor had a distinct contributor on his establishment, who was under an engagement to furnish a denunciation of the Affghan campaign, at the least once a week, and oftener if need be. Yet he now turns upon us for having in three articles dwelt upon the inauspicious procession of the old Gates!

We have been accustomed to account for these reiterated remarks in the Hurkaru on Lord Auckland's delinquency, by a reference to the difficulty our contemporary has experienced in his attempt to demonstrate it. Had the transgression been so palpable, there would have been no occasion for a hundred essays to prove it. Though he may be satisfied, that in the circumstances in which Lord Auckland found himself placed, war in Affghanistan was not inevitable, he is aware that many men of equal discernment with himself, may and have come to a very different conclusion. The laboured attempts which he is constantly making to enlist them on his own side, while they have shewn the weakness of his cause, have also been calculated rather to defeat than to promote his object. The spirit moreover, in which the articles have been composed, has generally furnished a satisfactory antidote to the arguments they contained. Our contemporary appears quite sensible that the temper in which he writes, is likely to be considered vindictive, and he endeavours to remove this impression; but the perseverance with which he pursues our late Governor General, and the occasional virulence of his expressions, too clearly disclose the spring of his opposition. No man, whose sole object is to promote the "interests of humanity," would talk of hunting down his game.

In the case we have taken up, we have the suffrage of the whole Press of India on our side. None of our brethren have ventured to express a single doubt of the absurdity of the "procession" of the Gates to Sumnath. And we trust that our motives will bear the closest inspection. When this proceeding was first announced, we united our voice with that of the other public journalists of India, in the hope that Lord Ellenborough might be induced to throw up the project. When we found that arrangements had actually been made for carrying it into effect, we recurred to the subject in the hope of drawing public attention to it at home, in time to prevent its consummation. Nothing could have been more remote from our intention than to draw off popular opinion, as our contemporary expresses it, "from the true scent; a scent which if followed, the game must be run down." It did not appear to us that the folly of the Gates might be used as a set off to the policy of the Affghan war; but since the Hurkaru has suggested the idea, we have weighed it with much attention, and feel satisfied that his worst fears are likely to be realized. The scent will assuredly be drawn off the game. The enormity of the Affghan policy will be lost sight of in the more palpable absurdity of the Gates. Our recent triumph will throw our previous reverses into the shade, and produce a conviction that they are to be traced to a military origin, and might equally have occurred if our cause had been as just as it is represented to be unjust. The mind, relieved from the horrors of the insurrection by our victories on the same soil, will be at liberty to discuss the policy of the war with calm and unprejudiced feelings, and to judge how far it is to be justified by the only justification of war—the apparent necessity of the case. Lord Ellenborough's proceeding will, on the other hand, form the newest object of public animadversion, and so entirely occupy the attention of men as to leave them no leisure for other delinquencies. The outcry against Lord Auckland has had its day, and passed the zenith of its strength. It can scarcely be revived. John Bull is a good hater, but he cannot hate two objects with equal intensity at the same time. Whenever he is roused, he concentrates his fury on a single object, and becomes comparatively indifferent to others. We may therefore take up the language of our contemporary, and with perfect safety reverse its arrangement and affirm, "Clamor as we may about the unprovoked invasion of Affghanistan, and the wicked negligence by which our troops were left in the face of repeated warnings to be massacred, yet the impiety of this ridiculous procession of the old rotten gates will stand out in all its native deformity, mowing and gibbering before the public."

The Agricultural Society.—At the Meeting of the Agricultural Society held on Wednesday the 11th Instant, the long agitated question of the Secretaryship was at length decided, to the disappointment of nearly all the candidates for that office. It was resolved, that there should be no paid Secretary for the present. A Committee had previously been appointed to examine the state of the funds, when it was discovered that the sum in hand at the close of the year was only Seven hundred Rupees; and that the current expenditure was barely covered by the income. The recent order of Government, on the subject of postage, will throw an additional expense of more than a thousand Rupees a year upon a fund which has been reduced within the last month to the same annual extent, by the withdrawal of more than thirty members. Under these circumstances, it became the dictate of prudence, to avoid incurring an additional outlay of nearly five thousand Rupees a year, which to all appearance would have involved the Society in embarrassments that might have affected its stability.

The question regarding the proxies of members residing at a distance from Calcutta, which has shaken the Society to its foundation, was ordered to be taken anew into consideration at the next Meeting. It is greatly to be regretted, that the question was ever mooted at all. The Society has grown to its present state of prosperity under an arrangement which left the management of its concerns in the hands of resident members; and it is to be feared, that the necessity of taking the votes of members scattered over a thousand miles of land, on every question of importance, will very materially impede its operations. But as the subject has been agitated, and made a party question, the right must apparently be conceded; or the Society will lose the support of those whose co-operation is essential to its success.

These squabbles regarding the Secretaryship have seriously injured the Society. They have drawn off the attention of its members from the public objects for which the Association was formed, and introduced a spirit of contention which it will not be easy to allay. It is to be hoped, however, that all who are interested in its progress, will bury in oblivion the feelings which this contest has excited, and give their hearty and undivided attention to the real business of the Society; and thus restore it to public confidence. We hope the members who have seceded will be induced to return; and that those who are wavering about their withdrawal will exhibit the magnanimity of their character, by continuing to co-operate with a body which, with all its imperfections—and they are inseparable from every institution—has done great good to the country, and possesses the means of doing still more good.

WEEKLY EPITOME OF NEWS.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 12.

— The great question of the Secretaryship of the Agricultural Society, on which the community within the Ditch has been in a state of agitation for three months, was decided yesterday. There was an assemblage of not fewer than One Hundred and Twenty members, the largest on the records of the Society, larger even than the gathering to discuss the best cabbages and cauliflowers of the season at the annual dinner. Like the Army of Reserve the meeting ended in nothing. It was determined that there should be no paid Secretary at all; but that the Assistant Secretary should do all the work and an Honorary Secretary have the credit of it.

— The New Tariff—or New Custom Duties, as the Advertisement says—is now ready for delivery at the Star Press, to which the Printer says he has added the Old Duties, and also the Corn Duties—as though the New Duties were not quite enough of themselves!

—Col. Palmer's trial for the surrender of Ghuzni commenced at Ferozepore on the 27th of December. There can scarcely be the shadow of a doubt that it will end in his honourable acquittal. The fortitude with which the noble little band of the 27th Native Infantry held that fortress against the most fearful odds through the sharpest privations, for more than three months, will be fully established by this Court Martial, and it is to be hoped that the acquittal of Palmer and his brave companions will be followed by the bestowal of the honours they so richly earned.

— The orders for the Court Martial of Col. Shelton were issued at Ferozepore on the 30th of last month. The Court will meet on the 20th of the present month at Loodiana, and will be composed of Major General Dick, as President and thirteen Majors General, together with Brigadiers Roberts and Paul, and Lieut. Col. Rich.

— The report that Captains Anderson, Boyd, Eyre and others, who went over to Akbar Khan by the orders of their own commanding officer, had been released from arrest is premature. They remain under arrest till their trial is over.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 13.

— The Prince Royal of the Punjab, Pertab Singh, the eldest son of Rajah Shere Singh, arrived in the Governor General's Camp on the 30th of last month, accompanied by Rajah Dhyan Singh, General Court, and a very splendid escort of infantry, cavalry and six guns, on a visit to the Governor General. The young prince is about ten years old. On the 1st of January there was an official meeting between the Seikh Deputation and Lord Ellenborough, after which the whole party proceeded to the field and viewed the rehearsal of the battle of Salamanca, by the whole army of General Nott, and General Pollock, and the Army of Reserve, consisting of 25 Regiments of Infantry, 12 Regiments of Cavalry and 108 pieces of ordnance. It was a grand and gallant sight, and it is said—very naturally—that Lord Ellenborough was very much gratified.

— We are happy to find that our remarks, regarding the necessity of appointing a permanent Sheriff, and one who shall receive an adequate salary and devote his time to the office, have been so ably supported by a correspondent of the Hurkaru. The present system of appointing an amateur Sheriff every year, who has no time whatever to devote to the office, and whose brief tenure effectually checks all reform of abuses, is abundantly ridiculous. So it appears to the public now; so it will appear to Government as soon as it is abolished. There is a time for all things; a time for a sheriff who will do nothing, and a time for a sheriff who will do something; only this latter time has not arrived.

—The Hindoostan Steamer, which starts to-morrow morning, takes home Dr. Thomas Smith, late first member of the Medical Board, a man whose genuine benevolence of character, and unostentatious liberality, dispensed on the true Christian principle of not allowing the left hand to know what the right hand does, has endeared him to all who were acquainted with him.

— Government has very judiciously ordered three of their Steamers in Calcutta to get up their steam and proceed to Arracan, to bring up the 68th Regiment from thence to Barrackpore.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 14.

— Mr. Maddock left the Camp at Ferozepore on the 2d January, on a complimentary Mission to the Court of Lahore, escorted by two horse Artillery Guns, a squadron of the 16th Lancers and of the 3d Light Cavalry, and two Companies of the 9th Native Infantry, commanded by Major Skinner of H. M's. 31st. He was expected to return by the 13th or 14th. It is generally understood that Mr. Thomason, who has accepted the office held by him, will be at Delhi to receive Lord Ellenborough on the 1st of February, when Mr. Maddock will come down to Calcutta, and reach it in time to succeed Mr. H. T. Prinsep in Council, on his departure for England on the Tenasserim Steamer early in March.

— Mr. Engledue, the Superintendent and Agent of the Peninsular Navigation Company, has advertized, that the Hindoostan Steamer will leave Calcutta again on the 14th April, the 6th July, and the 14th October, and that the Mediterranean vessels of the Company will accommodate the passengers who may proceed on the India Steamer in February, and the Tenasserim in March.

— The first instance of the prosecution of a Native Newspaper for Libel comes on this day in the Supreme Court. Raja Kishennath Roy has prosecuted the Editor of the Rusoraj, the most sprightly as well as the vilest paper in Calcutta, for a libel, which is described as the grossest and most obscene which could be imagined, charging upon the young Raja and his wife crimes of the most revolting character.

— The latest intelligence from Scinde extends to the 19th of December, when it is said the Ameers were resolved on fighting. It was reported that 7000 men were assembled at Khyrpoor, and 10,000 at Lurkanu. But so completely have our successes in Affghanistan re-established our character, that the refractory conduct of the chiefs, which twelve months ago might have appeared wise, now appears to all, an act of madness. Even the Seiks, who, being nearest to Cabul, saw most of our humiliation, can attribute the conduct of the Ameers in bearding the British Lion now recovered from its stumble, to nothing short of insanity.

— The Editor of the Rusoraj, a native paper, was on Saturday found guilty of a libel on Rajah Kishennath Roy. A more infamous libel, has never stained the pages of a Native Journal. It is calculated to throw no little discredit on the Native Press, that this paper, which has been pre-eminently for its filthy attacks on character, should be published under the same editorial responsibility as the Bhaskur, which is remarkable for its talent. It is no credit to Native society that four hundred copies of this Rusoraj should find purchasers in it. The present will be a severe and we hope a salutary lesson to the Editor.

— The Englishman states, that the last examination of Moonsiff's has been quashed, because it was undeniably clear, that the candidates had surreptitiously obtained copies of the Questions. Our contemporary very aptly alludes to the recent determination of Government to admit no candidates, but those who were men of respectable character, and he asks whether these are the men who have been elected for their respectability? Will our contemporary find ten men in India, who would not purchase a copy of the Questions if it was placed within his reach? It has been remarked that those who will offer bribes, will not scruple to receive them — The Englishman has a correspondent at Bombay, who sends strange intelligence, but whose identity is said to defy research. We hope his statements are not as true as the fact of his having been able to keep up the mystery of his name. In the issue of our contemporary of this day, the correspondent states that Sir George Arthur had quarrelled with his predecessor about the pay of a single day. The day on which a new Governor takes office belongs by prescription to the individual he dethrones. Sir George Arthur claims it as his own; and this grave matter, it is said, has been referred to the consideration of the Court of Directors. The Correspondent also states that Sir George has called upon the Reverend Mr. Pigott to refund to the tune of 8000 Rs., the salary he had received for more than three years as Harbour Chaplain. The Times will tell us whether the charge is true or not.

— The Queen, the sister ship of the Prince of Wales, as the sailors term it, has at length made her appearance, having left Portsmouth on the 18th of September.

— The case of Hadjee Mahommed versus Aga Kerboolaee, which was tried during the Sessions before the last, has been re-tried, because on the former occasion one of the Jurymen was understood to be biassed in favour of the prosecution. In the first trial, the defendants were convicted; in the last they were acquitted.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 17.

— Intelligence has been received from China to the 6th Instant. Sir Hugh Gough had arrived at Hong Kong and intended to embark, in a short time for Calcutta. Previous to his departure from Chusan, the Plenipotentiary and the Naval and Military Commanders-in-Chief had visited the Chinese authorities at Ningpo, where they were received with much courtesy and even cordiality. It was remarked with surprize how rapidly the city of Ningpo had recovered its prosperity. A twelvemonth ago it was deserted. On the visit now paid it was found that the houses which had been burnt for firewood had been re-built, the bridge of boats re-established, the shops stored with every variety of the richest merchandize, and the city itself filled with a busy population. There appears an elasticity in the Chinese character, which no other nation in Asia exhibits.—The Herculaneum transport had been wrecked on the island of Formosa, but the crew was treated with great kindness by the public authorities.

— The Bombay Times states, that the December Mail was not expected to reach Bombay before the 10th or 11th of the present month. We can therefore scarcely expect the express before the end of this week, and as it seems to have a particular partiality for Sundays, it is possible that it may not arrive before the 22d.

— Yesterday, being a Civil Court day, Sir John Peter Grant postponed passing sentence on the Editor of the Bhaskur, for the foul libel, of which he was found guilty. It will be pronounced this day.

— The progress of the Hindoostan Steamer down the the river appears to have been as slow as her passage up was remarkable for its speed. Thus we are informed that the vessel passed Moyapore half an hour after noon on Saturday; that she passed Diamond Harbour at half past two on Sunday and anchored off Kedgeree at 1 P. M. on Monday.

— The latest intelligence from Scinde is more pacific. It is true that Sir Charles Napier, on hearing of the murder of a dawk runner and the rifling of his wallet, had told the Ameers that if it had been done with their concurrence it was tantamount to a declaration of war; if without their concurrence, they were manifestly unequal to the Government of the country and that we would relieve them of it. But the Ameers wont fight; they will yield to necessity. They will say as the Emperor of China did in his "lucid" mandate. "There is no other way, and what is requested must be granted."

CONTEMPORARY SELECTIONS.

MISSIONARY PROTEST AGAINST THE PROCLAMATION OF THE GATES.

We, the undersigned Missionary Ministers, resident in Calcutta and its vicinity, abstaining as we do, on principle, from all interference with measures of government and questions of general politics—deeming it to be our duty to be the first ourselves "to honor the king, to obey Magistrates, to be ready to every good word and work," and to inculcate upon all others the same peaceable and orderly demeanour,—yet feel ourselves urgently called upon to express, in a becoming manner, our honest conviction and feelings, as subjects and as Christian Ministers, in reference to a late proclamation of the Right Honourable the Governor General of India.

The gates, once of the idol temple of Somnath, after eight centuries of almost forgotten continuance far remote from their original location, having fallen into the hands of our victorious army in the North West, have been held up in that proclamation to all India and the world as one of the most signal trophies acquired to our arms in the late Affghan war, now so happily terminated; and the resolution is declared to have been adopted by the Government of India, to convey them back to the spot from which, [illegible] ages, they were [illegible] and to replace them [illegible] original position. An escort of [illegible] and of [illegible] has been ordered to accompany these singular trophies, with marked honour and consideration, through the various intervening Provinces; the native rulers and princes of Hindoo and Mahomedan states have been invited, in imposing terms and under gracious designations as friends and brothers, to observe and accept the zeal of the Governor General of India in so singular a cause; a zeal the more remarkable as following close, in its expression, upon a proclamation and an official order altogether of a different character; the former, in language the most reverent and forcible, recognising the Great God whom we adore as the sole giver of victory, the arbiter of the destinies of nations, the only supreme ruler in the affairs of men; and recording humble and grateful acknowledgments of our national obligation to His gracious interference in our behalf, in the late contests with the Affghan nations; the latter calling upon all Ministers of religion in the service of the Government to offer up thanksgivings accordingly to our merciful God, Preserver and Benefactor.

In proportion as our joy and thankfulness were deep and sincere, that a proclamation and orders manifesting such a spirit should have issued from the supreme authority in this portion of the empire, was our sorrow profound and our humiliation extreme that they should have been succeeded by measures and a proclamation of so different a tenor and complexion—[illegible] which, in our deliberate judgment, the honour of our sovereign, the credit of our national name, and the consistency of our common profession as a Christian people, have been painfully compromised.

It is not simply that an ancient gate is to be restored to those from whom it was once taken by an invading army—if such a measure could, after this long lapse of ages, be either a [illegible] in a power not the original depredator, or healing to the wounded feelings of those whose distant ancestors alone were originally aggrieved—but it is that a Christian nation, professing a belief in, and reverent subjection to, the authority of one sole supreme God, and at the very time when offering up to Him public and solemn thanksgivings as the Preserver of our dominion, the Giver of victory to our arms, should yet pour unwonted and gratuitous insult upon his divine Majesty, by proclaiming in the face of day and of the nations, that we held the recovery by a Christian army of the gates of an idol temple, once removed by a Mahomedan invader, as a signal mark of his special favour towards us as a people—and in testimony of our gratitude, were resolved to conduct them back, with distinguished expressions of respect and honour, to their ancient location.

Missionaries, teachers and propagators of that blessed religion which we believe to be the only true one, we yet repudiate from our hearts, as we reject in our practice, all use of force or authority in matters of faith and conscience: perfect toleration, in the largest interpretation of the term, is what we desire for the professors of all creeds. But we feel it a solemn duty to protest, with all respect but with earnestness, against a measure which goes beyond toleration; which makes a Christian ruler and a Christian people parties to, Christian officers and Christian functionaries the agents in, a procedure that can only be viewed by all parties as identifying us with that abominable thing which the Great God hates, IDOLATRY—and whose operation must be to support and give credit to that which above all things else dishonours the great Creator and insults his Government; while above all things else it degrades [illegible], perverts the will, [illegible] the affections, and destroys at once the virtue and the happiness of men his creatures.

We feel humiliated by what has been done in this matter: its inevitable tendency is to sink and degrade the character of our nation, to compromise the honor of our Sovereign, to wound the consciences of all true-hearted Christians, without one [illegible] redeeming result whatever. [illegible] the feelings of the Mahommedans of all India, within and [illegible] our empire, are gratuitously wounded herein, Hindus will be utterly [illegible] to believe in the sincerity of expressions with which so many of our proceedings in India hitherto have been wholly at variance; nor if they could, would they respect an offering to their own religious prejudices which they know can only be yielded at the expense of religious truthfulness, consistency and professed duty in us, and by a violation of the letter and spirit of that word of God by which we are guided. Thus feeling, we have deemed it a duty from which no consideration absolved us, candidly and honestly to express our sentiments on the Governor General's procedure, [illegible] intentions; and having so done, we shall rest satisfied that we have at least [illegible] ourselves and all who feel with us—including not only all true Christians, but it is to be hoped [illegible] [illegible] our [illegible] India [illegible] to a [illegible] act of sinful insult to our God and Saviour; and we only further earnestly hope and pray that the eminent individual on whose proclamation we have thus respectfully, we trust, but freely animadverted—as loyal subjects of the crown exercising our unquestioned right to speak out our mind, whilst as sincere Christians and Christian ministers we have been concerned to uphold the honour, credit, and influence of our divine faith—may yet be induced, by the many expressions of British and Christian feeling in this painful matter which have appeared or may yet appear, to recede from so gratuitous and unhallowed, so unwonted and unchristian a design: a hope which we the more readily indulge as his Lordship, it is very possible, may not have viewed the reprobated measure in the light in which it has presented itself to our minds, but may have regarded it simply in its apparent political aspect: and that the idol gates of Somnath will [illegible] a worthier escort than British troops, a fitter proclaimer of their recovery and restoration than the Governor General of British India. And may that gracious Being who has [illegible] so signally favoured us, so turned our mourning into joy, our shame to honour, our defeat to victory, continue to shield our Sovereign [illegible], and to bless the British power in India to the progressive enlightenment, elevation and [illegible] of the nations its inhabitants!

THE HOOGHLY COLLEGE.

The Deputy Governor of Bengal, attended by several members of the Council of Education, visited the Hooghly College, on Saturday morning, to distribute scholarships and prizes to the alumni of that excellent institution. Among the gentlemen present at the College Hall, were Mr. George Thompson, Mr. Millett, Dr. Egerton, Mr. Bushby, Mr. Davidson, Mr. J. C. Sutherland, Mr. Bayley, with a considerable gathering of native gentry. After visiting the Branch School at Hooghly, with the state of which the utmost satisfaction was expressed, the visitors repaired to the College of Chinsurah; the report was read by the Secretary to the Council, the prize essay, the historical papers, &c. by the successful candidates, and the scholarships and prizes distributed by the Deputy Governor. After this his Honour addressed the officers and students of the institution, thanking Mr. James Sutherland, the Principal, Mr. Clint, the Professor of mathematics, and the other masters of both departments, for their praiseworthy and successful exertions, expressing himself well satisfied with the progress of the institution, considering the difficulties with which it had had to contend, and regretting, that he should never again be able to preside at a similar meeting. The exhibition was altogether a most gratifying one.—Bengal Hurkaru, Jan. 16.

A NEW CONVEYANCE.

"We last week noticed a new conveyance for travellers, built by Mr. Cameron of Durrumtollah: we have since had intelligence of a part of the progress it has made, in conveying a gentleman to Mirzapore: the rate of its going, up to Burdwan, over a tract of notoriously bad road, has been upwards of four miles an hour, that of the dak runners being at that part, we believe, a shade under three, and we are assured it passed every thing it came up with, including two dak travellers. The bearers too seemed well pleased with the change from bearing the pole to pushing the palankeen, and appear to be desirous of having it more extensively carried out. Mr. Cameron has one or two of these new vehicles now under preparation, and we recommend all who are interested in accelerating the progress, and increasing the comfort of the traveller to go and see them."—Planter's Journal, Jan. 11.

JESSORE NATIVE HOSPITAL.

The Second Half-yearly Meeting of the Jessore Native Hospital was held at the Hospital Dispensary on Thursday, the 5th January, 1843.

E. Bentall, Esq. in the chair.

The Report having been read by Mr. H. J. Banber, the Secretary, it was proposed by Geo. Cockburn, Esq. and seconded by Baboo Bydenath Sein, and resolved unanimously:

1st. That the report now read be adopted and published in the Calcutta papers and circulated in the district.

Proposed by J. H. Reily, Esq. and seconded by Geo. Scott, Esq. and resolved unanimously:

2d. That a copy of the Report be forwarded to the Deputy Governor of Bengal, praying for Government support to the Institution.

Proposed by Moulovee Abdoollah, and seconded by Ramcoomar Chowdry, and resolved unanimously:

3rd. That the Trust Estate of Syedpore being an extensive Zemindary, the managers be requested to afford substantial support to the Institution from the Surplus Funds.

Proposed by A. J. Smith, Esq. and seconded by Geo. Cockburn, Esq. and resolved unanimously:

That Rajah Burdacant Roy, Baboos Dwarkanath Tagore, Boykuntnath Roy, Ramrutun Roy, Groodoss Roy, Prawnath Chowdry, Issurchunder Paul Chowdry, Nilcomul Paul Chowdry, Collypersunno Mookerjee, Doorgapersad Roy Chowdry, Tarapersad Roy Chowdry, Radharomun Ghose, Ruttecant Roy and Kallypersad Poddar, holding large Zemindaries, be requested to become Honorary Members of the Committee and promote the Interest of the Institution.

Proposed by Geo. Scott, Esq. and seconded by E. Bentall, Esq. and resolved unanimously:

That the thanks of the Meeting be given to Dr. James Anderson for his zealous and constant attention to the sick, and to the Secretary and Treasurer for their constant watchfulness over the Interests of the Institution.

Proposed by Geo. Cockburn, Esq. and seconded by the Reverend Mr. Parry, and resolved unanimously:

That the thanks of the Meeting be given to Mr. Bentall for his kindly presiding in the chair.

H. J. BANBER, Secretary.

The Second Half-yearly Report of the Jessore Native Hospital.

The Committee of the Jessore Native Hospital have the pleasure of meeting the friends and supporters of the Institution, to lay before them their Report on the success of the Hospital, during the six months it has been affording relief to the sick in the District.

It was opened in the commencement of July for general relief, and in six months 922 persons were admitted, out of which 853 were discharged cured, the details of the several diseases have been kindly supplied by Dr. Anderson, and are now before the Meeting.

The Verandah, which it was proposed to build at the last General Meeting, has been completed, and the Committee trust, that the accommodation which it affords will be gratifying to the kind supporters of this useful Institution.

Hitherto the funds of the Institution have been sufficient to defray its expenses and leave a balance in hand of Rs. 417-8-7 out of which Rs. 124-14-3 have to be paid for a fresh indent of medicines which arrived yesterday morning, leaving a small balance of Rs. 292-10-4 available.

The monthly expenses of the Hospital including Dieting Establishment, Contingencies and Rent averages 40 Rs. and medicines at cost price 35, being a monthly expense of 75 Rs. whilst the receipts average only 65 Rupees.

The Committee feel it their duty to state that upon the present small receipts, it is impossible for the Institution to be so widely useful as it might be if more generally and liberally supported.

Hitherto the Institution has been altogether medically attended by Dr. Anderson, to whom our best thanks are due for the success of our endeavours, but at times the number of patients are so many that the duties become arduous and assistance necessary.

The disbursements have already been stated to be more than the receipts; the Committee have therefore to request the meeting to consider whether it be not necessary that the Bengal Government be solicited to take under their immediate Patronage so excellent an Institution and to grant an assistant to Dr. Anderson from the Medical College with medicines gratuitously supplied from the Company's Dispensary, and that the Meeting individually use every endeavour amongst their friends for increased support to the Institution.

The Committee at one of their Meetings elected Rajah Burdacant Roy, an Honorary Member of their Committee, until a General Meeting could be held, and they have therefore to recommend him together with Baboos Ramruttun Roy, Rutteecaunt Roy, Kallyperssa Poddar, as Honorary Members of the Committee, should it meet the views of the Meeting.

B, and brigadier Wymer; to be a court of enquiry into the conduct of major Pottinger, subsequently to the death of sir William Macnaghten, until he became a prisoner to the Afghans.

The court to have the power of sending for persons, papers and records, and to appoint its own secretary, and any writers who may be required.

The Secretary to the Government of India will place before the court, on its assembling, all the papers which are now in the office, apparently bearing upon the matters to be subjected to enquiry.

All evidence taken is to be recorded and reported.

The court will communicate its opinion upon the question whether the conduct of major Pottinger, from the death of sir William Macnaghten until he became a prisoner, was under the existing circumstances best calculated to secure the safety of the British army at Cabool, and to maintain the honor of the British arms.

The court will also report their opinion upon the question, whether the bills drawn by major Pottinger upon the British government, within the period above mentioned, were drawn by him in the exercise of legitimate authority and [illegible] discretion; and whether the circumstances [illegible] which, and any conditions upon which they may have been drawn and made payable, were truly made known to the several persons to whom they were delivered or by whom they were negotiated.

The court will assemble on the day subsequent to the date of this order, at the tent of his excellency the envoy to Maharajah Shere Singh, who will act as president of the court.

It was proposed and carried unanimously:

1. That a Committee be appointed to draw up an address to Dr. Wilson expressive of the great respect for his character and of the high estimation in which the services which he has rendered the Society during the time he has filled the Office of President, are held, and of its great regret at the cause by which it is deprived of a continuance of his able and valuable services.

2. That the Committee for the above purpose consist of Colonel Dickinson, Dr. Kennedy, J. L. Phillips, Esq., C. Morehead, Esq. M. D. and the Secretary.

3. It was further resolved that to mark the sense of the Society of the valuable services rendered by Dr. Wilson in the cause of Oriental Literature, he be requested to accept the office of Honorary President of the Bombay Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society.

4. With reference to that part of Dr. Wilson's letter referring to the copies of the Yasna and Visparad in his possession, that he be solicited to present them to be lithographed at the Society's expense.

5. That Dr. Wilson's letter, read at the Meeting be printed.

MY DEAR SIR,—I have the pleasure of forwarding to you for the Bombay Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society, a copy of a work by myself which has just issued from the press entitled "The Parsi Religion, as contained in the Zand-Avasta, and propounded and defended by the Zoroastrians of India and Persia, unfolded, refuted, and contrasted with Christianity."—This work I have taken the liberty of inscribing to the Office bearers and Members of the Society, in token of my gratitude for the kindness and indulgence extended to me while very imperfectly discharging the duties, and supporting the honours, of their Chair, and for the warm interest which many of them individually have taken in my labours to disseminate useful, but more especially divine, knowledge among the Natives of this great country whose present social and moral condition, as well as past history, it is one of the principal objects of the Society to investigate and unfold. Though the volume is in some degree controversial in its form it is fully expository of the principles of the Zoroastrian creed, as set forth in the recognized standards, the interpretations and commentaries of its past and present votaries, and the notices and allusions of classical record and oriental tradition. It contains also several tolerably close translations from the Zand and other Iranian languages, which may, in some degree, facilitate their study in the case of those who may not hitherto have directed to them their attention. I could wish that it were more worthy your acceptance; but, such as it is, it has cost me a degree of labour and research which nothing but a warm and sincere regard to the highest interests of the interesting and enterprizing class of Natives whom it more immediately respects, could have originated and supported.

I am the more gratified in being able at present to send to our Society this token of my personal regard, because my unavoidable departure for Europe renders it necessary for me,—as I now do,—to tender to the Society my resignation of the honourable office which I have held, through its favour, for upwards of seven years.

In taking leave of the Society, I cannot but express the great gratification and satisfaction which I have enjoyed in its fellowship since the day I was enrolled as one of its Members. The objects which it seeks to accomplish are highly important, whether they be considered as referring to the diffusion of literary and general information, and the cherishing of a literary sympathy among the members of our own body during their Indian exile,—or the investigation of the languages, customs, religions, antiquities, history, and present state of the interesting land in which we sojourn, and the other countries of the East which are contiguous to it and the study of the diversified forms of the works of God by which we are surrounded. The foundation by it of the best and most extensive library in Asia, the establishment of a general museum, which, though long overlooked, now enjoys, in your own concern for its prosperity, the highest scientific superintendence; and the varied and numerous contributions which its members have made to oriental literature and to science, are unequivocal proofs that it neither has been inactive, nor unsuccessful in the pursuit of these objects. When I was first called to occupy its chair, I took the liberty of briefly reviewing its past proceedings, and glancing at the field of its present inquiry. I could now willingly advert to its intermediate proceedings, and those of its resident and non-resident members which have been conducted independent of its auspicies; but I have not leisure, at this hour, to do them the justice even of a distinct mention. Major General Vans Kennedy has with singular ability and acuteness, clearly expounded the peculiarities of the six Indian philosophical schools; and ingeniously compared them with the systems of the West. The merits of Mr. Wathen have been next to those of James Prinsep in the discovery of the cave character of India, and the decipherment and translation of ancient inscriptions the most satisfactory historical authorities of the east. Dr. Bird is most zealously continuing research in the same department, and will soon favour us with a curious and interesting volume. The late Mr. Dickinson furnished us with what we fondly hoped were merely the first fruits of his high attainments, and historical research, and correct and classical taste, in his critical remarks on the Arabic language, and his inquiries into the destiny of the tribes of Israel, and the history of Armenia. Stevenson has opened up a very curious subject of investigation in his interesting and learned papers on the Anti-Brahmanical worship of the Dekhan; and he has unsealed some of the greatest mysteries of Hinduism by an actual translation of the most distinctive portion of the Sama Vedaic. Colonel Sykes at a distance, has laboriously collected and philosophically analyzed numerous notices of the state of society in India during the period of the supremacy of the Buddhas, as well as interspersed them with theories, which, established or rejected, must awaken inquiry as well as aid the arrangement and distribution of facts and circumstances which have been already noticed. In the papers of Capt. LeGrand Jacob of Kattiawar, we have had proofs of that exemplary diligence and ability, which, if generally imitated and evinced, would soon make us familiar with the antiquities and peculiarities of the different provinces with which we are more particularly connected—Along the line of march of our army to and from Affghanistan, we have been conducted by a most observant guide, Dr. Kennedy, whose pages bear the impressions of much that the lively fancy, and the play of wit and good humour, by which they are distinguished—I dare scarcely allude to the last work of the late Sir Alexander Burnes, the most enterprizing of our modern British travellers, and in whose death our country suffered its greatest loss amid late catastrophies. The Hon. M. St. Elphinstone, formerly President of the Society, has given to the world the calmest and most judicious digest of the History of India which has yet appeared, and interspersed it with the result of his own correct observations of the present state of Native society. We have lately been joined by several promising members; and our quarterly Journal, so ably conducted by yourself, will, I doubt not, greatly quicken and facilitate their researches. Mr. Westwick, to whom we have already been indebted for a translation of the Zartusht-Namah in the volumes which I send to you, will I hope, give us versions of all the most curious legends of the Zorastrians to be found in the Persian language. Captain Ramsay and Mr. Glasgow, have furnished us with the legends of the Kathis, one of the most conspicuous tribes in the peninsula of Gujarat: and they may very profitably continue their collections and translations. The Royal Asiatic Society of Great Britain and Ireland, in noticing in their annual report, my own paper on the Jungle Tribes of the Northern Konkan, have strongly expressed their wish to be put in possession of the articles of a similar nature connected with the several districts of India. The illumination, conversion, and social elevation of the natives, I need scarcely observe, are most intimately connected with our discovery and consideration of their actual state.

I am happy to be able to inform you that the lithographing from my own M. S. of twenty-five copies of the Vandidad, in the Zand language, but Guzratee character, with a Gujaratee translation, paraphrase, and comment by Aspandiarjee Framjee assisted by Mullr Firuz and other learned Dasturs of the Kedmi sect, as proposed by Dr. Buist and Mr. Pigott and readily acquiesced in by the Society, is now completed. The work forms two neat octavo volumes, and will prove an acquisition very acceptable to the Orientalist desirous of studying the sacred books of the Parsis. It contains their doctrinal standards, with many of the traditions from the Pahlivi, and Sanscrit which are supposed to illustrate it. It is put forth exactly according to the copy which came into my possession. I instructed the native who corrected the proofs, to tolerate no departure from the original manuscript even when it might be thought to be somewhat erroneous. It is a mere help to a critical rendering and interpretation of the Vandidad, and as such only should it be viewed. The copies should be judiciously disposed of if not sold at cost. There has scarcely been time to receive any orders for any of them from Europe. One however, has come to my hands. It is from the Chief Librarian of the University of Edinburgh, the Rev. Dr. Brunton. I should like soon to know what the Society intends to do in reference to lithographing the Yaçna and Visparad, which, interspersed with the Vandidad complete the larger Zoroastrian Liturgy. Translations into Gujarati of the Khurdah Avasta, or Minor Liturgy have been published by the Parsis themselves.

I beg to present to the Society two Cupic inscriptions from the South of Arabia. I have kept them by me for some time. In the fruitless hope of being able to forward with them translations. If fac-similes of all the unpublished inscriptions in the museum, were from time to time given in the Journal, no difficulty I think, would occur in procuring versions. I also present to the Society a copy of the Zartustit-Namah in Persian lately lithographed on my own account; and a copy in three volumes folio, of the best Edition of the Greek Lexicon of Suidas.

It is not without emotion I sever the link which has bound me to office with the Society and I beg to assure the members that I shall ever remember with gratitude the kindness which I have experienced at their hands. As opportunities are presented, I shall continue to prosecute the objects which they have in view, and seek an early opportunity of disposing of in some form or other, the fragmentary collections which I have made in connexion with late investigations. If I can be of the slightest use to the Society in Europe, or in my contemplated journey in Egypt, Arabia, Syria, and other parts, I beg them to command my services.

I am, my dear Sir,
Yours very respectfully,
JOHN WILSON.

CHINA.

On the 2nd day of the 8th Moon (Sept. 6th, 1842) the imperial will was received as follows;

1. Ke Ying has sent up a dispatch concerning the settlement of affairs with the barbarians, the establishment of Peace, and the affix of the Imperial Seal.

2. The various items of the Treaty entered into, have also been submitted to the Imperial glance, having been assented to by the said Commissioner.

3. In this dispatch was likewise stated the confirmed desire of the English to have Trade at Foo-chow-foo, to erect factories, and to dwell there with their families, to all which the Imperial assent was given, on the 28th day of the 7th moon, (Aug. 3rd, 1842.) 4. Our High Commissioners themselves, requested gravest punishment (for their concessions to the English) but we acquit them of all guilt on the subject. 5. As to the old debts of the Hong Merchants, the Foreigners will not dare to seek the interference of the Officers of Government. 6. The English are to have nothing to say against the erection of our Forts and Citadels.—To these two last items the English have given their respectful assent. Each of the different points were drawn out in form, and I the Emperor having given them thorough perusal adjudged them worthy of negotiation, but demanding the utmost care and the most judicious deliberation.

7. At the various Ports where the Barbarians are to Trade they are allowed to carry on their dealings indiscriminately with whomsoever of our Merchants they please, and all debts contracted between them to be paid by the respective parties without official interference 8. The money (the 21 millions,) is to be paid by annual instalments. It is a vast amount, and where is such a sum to come from to be given away? Let Ke Ying alone be held responsible hereafter for arranging the matter and registering before hand the places which are to supply their respective quota of the funds, and memorialize the court accordingly. 9. In the present despatch it is stated that on the 15th day 6th moon 21st year*, the said English nation had received money at the various cities. As to these cities where such money has been received, with the definite amount, and also the amount to be deducted, let clear investigations be instituted and representations made to the Court in accordance therewith. 10. The Prisoners of each country to be unconditionally delivered up, that extraordinary benevolence may be manifested. 11. The natives of the Middle kingdom who have been in attendance upon the Officers of the said English nation are to be considered free from guilt for so doing; and as peace has now been declared, the people of both nations are to be regarded as one mutual whole, no one again daring to proceed to bloodshed. 12. Should any of our people in other matters offend against the laws, our nation alone is to take the managemet of their cases without the interference of the English nation. 13. Hereafter there will be fixed duties at the Five Ports, and as to the Custom House arrangements, the said Barbarians have lived so long at Canton how is it that they are not fully aware of them? 14. The Merchants of the Middle kingdom who carry on Trade from the interior and pass through the Custom Houses, are to pay the usual dues. 15. Our assent is given for the occupation of Tinghae and Koo-lang-soo for a time until the money be paid; and let each of the Five Custom Houses be thrown open, let the ships pass out and let it be also understood that Military occupation of the above places will not be allowed for a great length of time 16. Let each of the above items be definitely arranged by Ke Ying and colleagues with the Barbarians, giving closest attention to the minutest particulars, that the Treaty may be drawn up in the most clear and intelligible terms, preventing all after difficulties, and confusion of affairs. As the Barbarians cannot understand us let the services of Interpreters be employed that they may be satisfied. 17. The whole of the Barbarian vessels are to leave the great River about the 10th of the 8th moon, (Sept. 14th.;) and let the matter be adjusted with the speediest dispatch that quiet may be restored to the Imperial bosom, and let these our commands be sent by the most rapid express, and cause them to be made known.

"RESPECT THIS."

* August 1st, 1842.

In a long document,* their Excellencies KE-YING and NEW-KEEN publish the following, as the settled results of their negotiations with the British Plenipotentiary while at Nanking.

1. The Chinese Government will at present be responsible for the Hong merchants paying to their English creditors, debts to the amount of two millions of dollars.—Hereafter Hong merchants and all other classes of natives, are to be alone responsible for their own debts; the Mandarins only affording their official aid.

2. None but merchant ships are to come and go to the FIVE PORTS, no ships of war being allowed to visit them. Not even merchant ships are to visit any other than the FIVE PORTS.

3. The English fully agree to the rebuilding of all the Fortresses, and the putting of them in the same state of defence as formerly.

4. Although peace is declared, all places in the Empire may not be fully aware of it, and should the officers in those uninformed places cause trouble to the English; no fighting is to take place, as all will soon be fully informed by Proclamation of the establishment of amity and good will.

5. As soon as this year's instalment of the money is paid, the English ships of war are to withdraw from the Long River and return to their own country.

6. The English Plenipotentiary agrees to place under immediate arrest, every British officer who may be found levying duties upon Chinese shipping.

7. In all difficulties between the natives of China and the natives of England, which may arise from their intercourse at the FIVE PORTS, the Chinese are to be handed over to the Chinese Authorities of the place, and the English to the English Authorities for trial, &c. &c.

8. The English agree, that if any Chinese criminals take refuge on board an English Merchant ship or man of war, or take up their residence at Hongkong, to give them up, upon requisition from the Chinese Authorities. China enters into a like agreement touching English criminals. —The Friend of China, November 24th.

PROCLAMATION.

Sir Henry Pottinger, bart. her Britannic Majesty's plenipotentiary in China, has, on his arrival at Amoy, learned with extreme horror and astonishment, that many more than a hundred subjects of her Britannic Majesty, who were wrecked in the ships Nerbudda and Ann, in the months of September 1841, and March 1842, on the coast of the Island of Formosa, have been recently put to death by the Chinese authorities on that Island, who allege, that they perpetrated this cold-blooded act in obedience to the imperial commands.

Had the unhappy people who have suffered on this occasion even been prisoners of war, taken whilst fighting with arms in their hands, their massacre (which is aggravated by a lapse of time of nearly a year) would have been a most flagrant violation of the acknowledged and well-understood rules and feelings which distinguish warfare amongst civilized nations, and contrasts it with the sanguinary and inhuman practices and ideas of mere savages; but, when Her Majesty's plenipotentiary calls to mind that the unfortunate individuals, on whom this foul deed has been committed, were inoffensive camp-followers and seamen, who neither were armed, nor had any means of defending themselves or of molesting others, and were especially entitled, as distressed and shipwrecked men, both by the laws and usages of China, to kindness and protection, the plenipotentiary has no language by which he can sufficiently proclaim the sentiments of abhorrence and detestation with which he views this lamentable affair, the recollection of which will remain as a stain and disgrace in the annals of the Chinese empire.

Her Britannic Majesty's plenipotentiary has already obtained positive official proof, that the commands issued by the emperor for putting to death her Britannic Majesty's subjects were drawn from his imperial majesty by the gross and merciless misrepresentations of the local authorities on Formosa, who, with the object of personal aggrandizement, basely and falsely reported to the cabinet at Peking, that both the ship Nerbudda, and subsequently the brig Ann, had gone to that Island with hostile intentions, an assertion not more lying and false, than manifestly absurd, since neither of those vessels were ships of war, or had, when wrecked, any troops or other fighting men on board of them.

Her Britannic Majesty's plenipotentiary now intends to respectfully, though firmly, submit the real facts of this dreadful affair to the special notice of the emperor, through the imperial commissioners and ministers, and to demand, in the name of his sovereign, the Queen of Great Britain, that the local authorities on the Island of Formosa, whose false and pitiless misrepresentations have led to the horrid event which has called for this proclamation, shall be degraded and (condignly) punished; and, further, that their property shall be confiscated, and its amount paid over to the officers of the British Government, to be applied to the relief and support of the families of the innocent men who have been put to death on false and foul accusation. Without this just atonement, Her Britannic Majesty's plenipotentiary is not prepared to say, that the event which has occurred, and which it becomes the plenipotentiary's unwilling duty to report to Her Majesty's Government, will not be the cause of a further serious misunderstanding, or, that it may not even lead to a renewal of hostilities between the two empires, which would be greatly to be deplored, as involving this country and its people in fresh misery and evil, for the crimes of a few shameless and unworthy miscreants in power, who have, from base motives, imposed on their own sovereign. Her Britannic Majesty's plenipotentiary, however, trusts, that the emperor will, in his wisdom, see the justice as well as policy of making the retribution which is herein pointed out; which is due both to England and China, and will avert further calamity.

That all persons may know the real state of the case, this proclamation is published in the English and Chinese languages for general information.

GOD SAVE THE QUEEN.

PROCLAMATION.

To the Chinese.

Sir Henry Pottinger, bart., her Britannic Majesty's plenipotentiary in China, announced, in his proclamation under date the 23rd instant, that a number of her Britannic Majesty's subjects had been cruelly and causelessly put to death by the local officers on the island of Formosa.

The plenipotentiary has now further to announce the following clear details which he has obtained from a few of the shipwrecked men, who have been sent over to Amoy, to be released agreeably to the treaty.

On board the ship "Nerbudda," which was wrecked in September 1841, there were altogether 274 souls; of these, 29 were Europeans, 2 Manilla men, and 243 Natives of India.

All the Europeans, accompanied by 2 manilla men and 3 Natives of India, left the ship in the boats as soon as she struck on the rocks, and thus, exactly 240 Natives of India were left behind. These men remained by the ship, which had drifted over the reef, and was lying in smooth water in Kilung bay, for five days, and then landed on rafts, without arms or weapons of any description. In landing, some men were drowned in the surf, others were killed by plunderers who came down to strip them as they reached the shore, and the rest were seized and imprisoned in separate small parties, where they were left in heavy irons, with hardly any clothing, and very small allowance of food, from which privations many died after great suffering. Of the whole 240 who left the ship on the rafts, only 2 men have been sent over to Amoy.

On board the brig "Ann," which was wrecked on the passage from Chusan to Macao in the month of March, there were altogether 57 souls. Of these, 14 were Natives of Europe or America, 5 Chinamen, 4 Portuguese or Malays, and 34 Natives of India. The brig was driven by the violence of the wind and sea so high on shore, that when the tide ebbed she was left dry, and the fifty-seven men quitted her and got on board a China junk, with the hope of being enabled to put to sea in her; but this could not be effected, and they surrendered, without having fired even one musket, or made the smallest resistance, to the Chinese troops that had come down to the spot.

Like the unfortunate men of the "Nerbudda," those who were in the "Ann" were stripped stark naked, and dragged in that state to the capital of Formosa, when they were separated and confined in small parties, which had little communication with each other, but were all treated with extreme barbarity and almost starved.

Out of the 57 souls who were cast away in the "Ann," 9 have just arrived at Amoy. Of these, 6 are Natives of Europe or America, one a native of India, and one Chinaman. A second Chinaman is alive, and is said to have staid at Formosa of his own choice.

It thus appears from the preceding details, that two hundred and thirty-seven persons belonging to the "Nerbudda," and forty-six belonging to the "Ann," have either been put to death by the officers of the Chinese government on Formosa, or have perished through ill treatment and starvation.

These atrocious and appalling facts are not to be refuted or questioned, and, that all may judge of them, and contrast the conduct of the officers of the British Government (who set all their prisoners free), this proclamation is made in Chinese. Her Britannic Majesty's plenipotentiary trusts, however, that the emperor will yet make the only atonement that remains, and thereby avert further evils.

GOD SAVE THE QUEEN.

Dated on board the steam frigate "Queen," at Amoy, on the 27th day of November, 1842, corresponding with the Chinese date the 25th day of the 10th month in the 22nd year of Taoukwang.

H. M's. Plenipotentiary.

THE SYNOD OF ABERDEEN.—On Tuesday and Wednesday last two Motions were made in the Synod—the one not to admit to their places those members of Synod who were suspended by the sentence of the last General Assembly; the other relating to the independence of the Church, as affected by the decision of the House of Lords in the Auchterarder case. Both Motions were lost. The suspended ministers were admitted by a majority of eighty-one to seventy-one; the majority in the other case was seventy-four to sixty-four. The Banner of Aberdeen calls the Synod "the insurgent Synod," and imputes the movement of the moderates to a wish "to dissever the north-eastern district from the Established Church." Now that one Synod has separated from the General Assembly, there will be two Established Churches in Scotland—the Synod of Aberdeen, and the Synods which still adhere to the Assembly.—Record.

CHRISTIAN UNION.—Our attention has been drawn to a "Proposal for a Protestant Evangelical Union," which was put forth, some months ago, in the Congregational Magazine, and which, it is understood, will be brought before the Assembly of the Congregational Union this week at Liverpool. The proposal originates with the Rev. J. A. James, of Birmingham, whose character affords a sufficient guarantee that it has no other object in view than to advance that true Catholic union which all sincere Christians pray for, and that it is made in perfect good faith. The design is stated to be, to obtain simply, "the mutual recognition as brethren in Christ of all who agree in the principles propounded as the basis of the Union; and as ministers of Christ, all godly men who hold and preach those principles, by whatever forms of ordination they may have been introduced to their office." A Form of Recognition is suggested; and, as nothing more than such mutual public recognition on the part of the different Protestant communions is contemplated, a biennial or triennial meeting at Exeter-hall, it is thought, would afford a fitting opportunity for a public demonstration of such interdenominational harmony. A union, not of individuals, but of bodies,—not a society, but a simple fraternization before the world, is conceived to be the desideratum; and such a Meeting, followed up by a public declaration on the part of the representatives of the several denominations, would, it is thought, have the happiest effect.

Our first impression on reading this proposal, was, we must confess, that it was one of those fair, but unsubstantial views which owe their radiance to the glow of feeling which they reflect, dream-like conceptions, not to be realized in the world of cold realities. But, on more attentively considering the subject, it has seemed to assume to our minds a more tangible and practical shape. And there are circumstances which appear to render any demonstration of Protestant Unity more specially desirable at the present juncture.

Plans of ecclesiastical union are the order of the day. The King of Prussia has led the fashion in his scheme of comprehension, by which he is seeking to amalgamate all the creeds and communions in his dominions into one national faith, one German Church. The Anglo-Catholics have their scheme of Catholicity, which is essentially anti-Protestant, and by which they are seeking to strengthen their claims to relationship to every mitred form of Antichrist, every corrupt Church and decrepid hierarchy in Eastern or Western Christendom. The Synod of Ulster, proud of its humiliating position as a pensioner of the State, subsisting, as it were, on the crumbs from the overflowing board of the Irish Episcopacy, is anxious, too, for a closer union with the State Church of Scotland, and with any body that can be supposed to harmonize with the servile politics of Irish Toryism. With all these combinations taking place around us, it is assuredly desirable to ascertain how far a closer union is possible between the free churches of Protestantism, which maintain in common the same fundamental doctrines, and which, while presenting to the world the aspect of sectarian division, are more intimately related to each other, and more essentially one, than State Churches held together only by their external government.

The fact, that our disunion is more apparent than real, though we must not expect that fact to be acknowledged or even believed by the world, ought never to be lost sight of by ourselves. Upon this ground, we must find some fault with the paper before us, which admits as just, a charge that ought to be repelled as a calumny. Mr. James speaks of "the sagacity of our common enemies in perceiving this our weak point, and their skill in availing themselves of it in strengthening themselves, and attacking us. Infidels, Papists, Puseyites, and last, though, in some respects, not least, the Plymouth Brethren, assail us with the charge of sectarianism. We are insultingly taunted with the sneer of being a house divided against itself, and with the asseveration that we are so unlike and hostile, such bigots for division, so infected with jealousy and the odium theologicum, that we cannot unite, and have carried our Protestantism so far as to abjure not only the notion of unity, but even the wish for it." Now, we can recognise no "sagacity" in these views of our opponents, no "skill" in their vulgar use of the old Popish argument. Is it a weak point, that, as Protestants, we acknowledge no earthly Head, Papal or Royal, no sacerdotal or synodal supremacy, that we are not held together in political unity by a common ecclesiastical government? If Christian unity consists in these things, we are altogether wrong, and our sagacious enemies are in the right. Wanting uniformity and unity of government, we must needs appear to politicians who regard these as the essentials of Catholic Christianity, to be without any bond or mark of union, notwithstanding that we have "one Lord, one faith, one baptism." But does this arise from the sagacity or from the obliquity of their perceptions? Ought we not to be more concerned to uphold scriptural notions of the essential oneness of the Church of Christ and the nature of Christian unity, than even to clear ourselves from false aspersions? We are answerable for our divisions and animosities, but not for that want of unity with which we are reproached, arising from the mere absence of hierarchical rule, liturgical forms, and State incorporation.

This is a reproach we must be willing to bear,—from which we have no escape. Yet, it is not the less desirable or incumbent upon us to vindicate Protestantism or Evangelical Christianity from the blame of causing divisions, which have doubtless proved a stumbling-block to many. How can this be done, but by giving prominence to the great principles which we hold in common! The Bible Society has, in this respect, exerted a most beneficial influence. It has presented a basis of union, and, to a considerable extent, has exhibited the actual union of all who hold the Scriptures to be the sole Rule of Faith,—the Bible only to be the religion of Protestants. It has no doubt tended, also, to bring different denominations closer together; and although, at the present moment, the Established Church is drawing back from the polluting touch of the sectaries, there is that good understanding between the other denominations, that all who are not wilfully blind may perceive, that the Presbyterian, the Wesleyan, the Independent, and the Baptist, fully recognise the kindred character of their several institutions and the validity of the Christian ministry respectively maintained by their churches. Nothing can show this more plainly than the interchange of friendly services, which is becoming more and more frequent, in the advocacy of our respective Missions, and on other public occasions. We are not entitled to answer for our Wesleyan brethren; but we believe we might safely include them, in stating our conviction, that, as regards the Evangelical Protestant denominations out of the pale of the two Establishments, there are very few pulpits in England, Wales, or Scotland, into which Mr. James himself, or Dr. Harris, or Dr. Cox, or Mr. Young, or Dr. Hannah, or Mr. Alin, or any well-known and respected minister of any of their denominations, would not find open to him,—ay, or which either Dr. Chalmers or Mr. Baptist Noel would not be welcome to occupy.

Still, we do not deny that something more than this is called for, more especially by the spread and open avowal of Anti-Protestant principles. And it has struck us, that a firm, united Protest against such principles, on the one hand, and a Declaration of Agreement, on the other, on the part of all the Bodies comprised in Mr. James' Plan, would at this time be a very becoming, impressive, and useful measure. Let this definite object be proposed, and nothing further,—a public stand against the errors and pretensions of Puseyism, in which all the parties may unite, unincumbered by any plan for producing a closer union than actually exists,—and we should hope that no difficulty would be found in carrying out the suggestion. If the Congregational Union should take this view of the subject, we venture to recommend, that, as the first step, a Correspondence be opened, through the proper officers, with all the other Protestant Bodies; and that, before any Form of Protest or Declaration is determined upon, the terms be submitted to such Bodies for their approval. This may occasion delay; but the time will not be lost. As the best bond of union is Truth, the Declaration should embody a distinct repudiation of the Puseyite errors; should Scripturally define the Church of Christ as composed of all who hold the Head; should re-assert the doctrine of the Reformers with regard to the Sacraments, as having for their design to teach, not to justify, to convey truth, not a mystic undefinable grace; and should vindicate the claim of all Christian men to the liberty with which Christ has set them free. Such a Declaration, we should rejoice to see generally adopted and proclaimed in all our free Protestant churches throughout the land. We hope that these cursory remarks will promote the object Mr. James has had in view, by suggesting, at all events, matter for discussion.—Pat.

THE LATTER-DAY SAINTS.—The emigration of the "Mormons, or Latter-day Saints," from this port is daily increasing. Notwithstanding the rascalities of their apostle, Joe Smith, having been so often denounced and exposed, these well-meaning but deluded enthusiasts continue to leave their native country by hundreds, in order to swell the number of his dupes on the other side of the Atlantic. The class of persons thus emigrating are, in appearance and worldly circumstances, above the ordinary run of steerage passengers. The bulk of them are from the Midland Counties—farmers and farmers' servants, with their wives and families. Upwards of 5,000 have already emigrated, and an equal number will probably leave before spring. As no better freight is offering, the New Orleans vessels are taking these disciples of the knavish blacksmith at a very low figure. The Sydney, for instance, only received 115*l.* for 180 of the Mormons, while the Henry has agreed to carry 140 for 100*l.*—little more than fifteen shillings a-head! All this is clearly indicative of two things; first, the utter stagnation of trade between this port and America at the present moment; and, secondly, the prevalence of superstition and simplicity amongst a class of our countrymen who ought to know better than to leave their homes and kindred in order to follow the fortunes of one of the most ignorant and impudent quacks of modern days, whose knavery is so transparent as to be seen through by every person of ordinary capacity.—Liverpool Albion.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE AFFAIRS OF GERMANY.—FRANKFORT, OCT. 16.—The event of the week is the marriage of the Prince Royal of Bavaria with the Princess Mary, daughter of Prince William of Prussia, the third brother of the late and uncle of the present King, to whom the bride is consequently first cousin. The ceremony, according to the Protestant rite, was performed at Berlin by proxy, the Prince of Prussia, another cousin of the bride, having acted as representative of the bridegroom, whom etiquette or religious scruples prevented from attending in person. By this marriage, which is highly popular in Germany, the rule of the Bavarian house, since its assumption of regal dignity, is maintained, which prescribes that the Queen shall be a Protestant. The mother and grandmother of the Crown Prince were both Protestant Princesses—the former descended from the house of Baden, the latter from that of Saxe Altenburg. The marriage is popular in Bavaria for two reasons. For the Protestant part of the kingdom, which is, at the same time, the most wealthy and the most industrious, and which felt on the recent attack made upon their profession by the fanatical party in Munich the protection which a Protestant Queen, naturally, by her mere presence, affords, this choice was one of vital importance. With the Roman Catholics generally it is very popular, as promising them some protection against the ultra movements of the above-mentioned party, of whom they are infinitely more afraid than of the Protestants. The only dissatisfied party is this same fraction of the Roman Catholics, who, by dint of assurance, have revived the belief in their importance, as well as many other antiquated notions. Yet the most bigoted has no reason to complain of the form in which the marriage has been conducted, for the rule laid down by the Pope, that the children shall be educated as Roman Catholics, is strictly observed in the Bavarian house. The second reason why the marriage is popular is, that the future Queen is a German, and the nation is relieved from the apprehension that northern manners and political feelings would be introduced at Court. The desire of the Russian Court to have placed a Princess upon the throne of Bavaria, and thus to have added the claim of relationship to the political right to protect the smaller states of Germany, as understood by the author of the Pentarchie, is no secret, and is at this moment proclaimed by the conduct of the Duchess of Leuchtenberg, who is by marriage the first cousin of the Crown Prince. This lady, who recently arrived with her husband at Vienna from St. Petersburgh, accompanied the Duke on his route to Munich as far as Salzburg, and then left him to proceed alone to the Bavarian capital, while she went on to Italy. The distance from Salzburg to Munich being but sixteen German miles, is sufficiently small to make the proceeding not a strongly marked one, while it is of a nature considerably to increase the popularity of the young couple, especially of the Prince, who has thus evinced that he has a will of his own. In these proceedings we have a sufficient insight into the position of Germany, and of the probability of success which the mediating policy of the King of Prussia has a chance of meeting with. Whatever concessions are made to Russia (and the prospect of renewing the old "cartel" treaty is a concession of great weight), there is no bringing the interests of that country into harmony with those of the other European states. Its prohibitive tariff excludes all interchange of industry, its police regulations prevent all community of intelligence. Whenever it chooses Germany for the field of political activity, it would appear as a patron or as a coercer of irresistible might, to differ from whom in opinion is to show hostility. The reckless mode in which its diplomatic operations are carried on, and the absence of all the usual guarantees for a steady course in politics, cause more apprehension than even its military power, which stands high only in the estimation of the Russians themselves. The compact now celebrated between the houses of Prussia and Bavaria annihilates for a time all prospect of obtaining an influence in Germany founded upon internal divisions within the confederation, and at the loss of this prospect no secret is made of the dissatisfaction it occasions. On the other hand, if the moderate-minded rejoice at the triumph they have obtained in the union of the principal Protestant with the leading Catholic family, it cannot pass unnoticed that neither on this nor on any other occasion has any concession been obtained from Rome. To all the arms with which it is assailed, whether reasoning or suggestions of an interested kind, as well as to the best concerted diplomatic plans, it opposes an inflexible tenacity of its assumed rights—a policy which, like that of the northern Colossus, isolates it from the rest of Europe, with which it has no community of interests. With even less power than Russia, Rome demands a more unconditional submission, and that of a kind less readily granted by those who have emancipated themselves from its trammels. The truce which succeeded to the concessions made to the Catholic clergy in the Rhenish provinces is universally regarded in Germany as but a passing moment of seeming quiet, which is used by the priests in many districts to assume a kind of sanction on the part of the Government to their preaching the miraculous efficacy of medals, which are publicly sold, and enforcing strict observance of confessions, and other means of augmenting their revenues. In short, a system of under-hand taxation is once more organizing, over which the state has no control, while its effects upon the population, both as to morals and industry, appear to be of a very questionable nature. It is much to be regretted that the efficacious arms which Protestantism could oppose to these encroachments are rendered powerless by dissensions amongst the Protestants themselves. The King is almost at open war with the synods of the National Church, and the University of Konigsberg has addressed to the throne a formal complaint against the Minister of Public Instruction, M Eichhorn, for forcing upon that body a Professor of Divinity who is so obnoxious that he cannot obtain a single hearer. The University of Berlin has been likewise obliged to take steps to vindicate its independence against this Minister, who has in a short space managed to inherit all the unpopularity of M. de Rochow. The unfortunate effects of these dissensions upon a nation struggling to obtain its fitting place amongst the civilized states of Europe cannot sufficiently be lamented, for the personal share taken by the King in these quarrels is made to excuse the severity of the censorship, and thus all freedom of discussion, the groundwork of national energy, is suppressed in its birth. The neighbours of Germany on the east and west, of course, chuckle at this unexpected mode of frustrating the King's plan for uniting the Germans into a compact mass, powerful through their intelligence and national spirit, and rejoice to see censors and commissaries of police about to effect what the best laid diplomatic schemes would fail to accomplish. In this manner, by causing the King to put himself forward, and by flattering his wish to have all improvements regarded as the result of his personal activity, while at the same time his sensitive feelings are alarmed by the very shadow of opposition and the fear of being thought to carry out any other person's opinion but his own, they place the throne in a false position, and it has been managed that a new regulation of the censorship is to be published, in the place of a law of libel, to which the King is himself said to be more inclined. By the same means it is feared that the approaching meeting of the Committees of the provincial estates will be deprived of the fondly-expected privilege of representing public opinion at the foot of the throne, and that thus both the Sovereign and the nation will be hood-winked by a small party of artful intriguers, and disgraced before their contemporaries.—From a Correspondent of the Times.

ACCIDENT TO ADMIRAL SIR C. NUGENT.—We regret to announce that a serious accident has happened to Sir C. Nugent. As the Gallant Admiral was leaving his bankers' (Messrs. Drummonds), Charing-cross, on Monday afternoon, he stopped to take a view of the Nelson monument erecting in Trafalgar-square. Whilst in the act of minutely looking at the column, his foot slipped, and the gallant officer fell on the curb stone, the effect of which was a serious fracture of the thigh bone near the hip. Admiral Nugent was immediately conveyed to Charing-cross Hospital, where the most prompt surgical attendance was given, and every attention paid, and we are informed that the gallant officer is going on very favourably, but from his advanced age (eighty-five) no sanguine hope of a perfect restoration to health can be entertained. No dangerous result is, however, at present expected. The Gallant Admiral has expressed a wish not to be removed from the hospital until he recovers, as he feels convinced that every attention will be paid to his wants and comforts. In this Institution there are apartments in which individuals who may unfortunately meet with accidents, but who are in a situation of life able to maintain themselves and pay expenses, can be admitted without at all infringing on the public contributions raised for the relief of the unfortunate poor.—Record.

It is stated that there are at present in progress of construction at Brest, by order of the Minister of Marine, immense buildings for a foundry, and for the construction of steam-boats. On the north of the town the Minister of War had ordered considerable additions to be made to the fortifications.—Ibid.

THE QUIP COURTEOUS.—Two ministers of the same name resided in the same town, which some of our readers, says the Falmouth Packet, will easily make out—one a Dissenter, and the other a Clergyman of the Established Church. A parcel came into the hands of the latter, which, on inspection, proved to be for the Dissenter. It was forwarded with the following note:—"Sir,—If you had not assumed a title to which you have no right, this mistake would not have occurred. I am, Sir," &c. In the course of a few weeks after, a parcel came into the hands of the Dissenter, which was for his Rev. namesake, and which was found to contain a case of lithographed sermons, done up to imitate manuscript. It was forwarded to the Clergyman with the following note:—"Sir, if you had not assumed an office for which you are not qualified, this mistake would not have occurred. I am, Sir," &c.—Pat.

TEA.—The official statement of the quantities of tea exported from the 1st of July, 1841, to the 31st of May, 1842, from China to this country, gives the following amounts:—26,331,161lb. of black, 8,296.080lb. of green, and 78,103lb. sorts, making a total of 34,165,344lb.—Ibid.

ADVERTISEMENT.

AS the members of the present Christian Community at Lucknow form but a small portion of Colonel Low's friends, and there are many in different parts of India who would gladly avail themselves of any opportunity of showing the estimation in which he is held by them, the Committee appointed by the subscribers at Lucknow beg to circulate for their information the proposal which was generally approved of by the Lucknow Community, and to assure those who may wish to subscribe, that they will have much pleasure in receiving their contribution to the Portrait.

"To the Community at Lucknow.

As Lieut. Colonel Low, C.B. Resident at Lucknow is about to leave India, it is proposed that a subscription should be opened for the purpose of obtaining a Portrait of him to be executed by George Beechey, Esq. and kept in the Banquetting Rooms at Lucknow, in order to perpetuate the recollection of the many virtues which have adorned his public and private character, that have caused him to be universally esteemed and respected, and have enabled him to conciliate the good opinion of every one who has had the happiness of knowing him.

Persons desirous of subscribing are requested to put down their names with the amount of their subscriptions, and to vote for a Committee who will prepare and present an Address to Colonel Low, C. B. previous to his departure."

In accordance with the above proposal a Committee was formed at Lucknow, and an Address presented—and although before Col. Low's departure it was impossible to ascertain the probable amount of subscriptions, Mr. Beechey very handsomely undertook to paint the picture.

By order of the Committee,
J. SPENCER LOGIN,
Lucknow, 20th Dec. 1842. Secretary.

EUROPEAN AND ORIENTAL AGENCY.

MR. PARKE PITTAR

HAVING arranged the formation of an Agency, the particular object of which will be the transaction of affairs, connected with this country and Europe, begs to offer his services to the community of India, in any way they can be rendered available.

A peculiar and important feature in the Agency now established, will consist in the annual return of Mr. P. Pittar to India. Taking advantage of the Peninsular and Oriental Company's Steam Vessels, he purposes re-visiting Calcutta about the latter end of every October, and returning to Europe about the middle of the following February, thus affording to persons entrusting the management of their affairs to his care, the opportunity of a personal conference and explanation of their views and intentions,—an advantage in the transaction of affairs of a complicated delicate or family nature, the greatness of which need not be commented upon.

A long residence in India, combined with an intimate knowledge of almost every description of manufactured article, and its various manufacturers, rendering him peculiarly fitted for the office of Agent to persons procuring their supplies or other articles, such as Table Equipages, Philosophical and Optical Instruments, Books, Maps, Sporting Apparatus, Musical Instruments, Military Equipments, Wines, &c., &c., direct from England or the Continent, he offers them his services with every confidence that his selections will give the most perfect satisfaction, whether as regarding quality, cheapness, or adaptation to the climate; but in the execution of these commissions, a previous remittance for their full amount, or reference for payment, will invariably be required.

Every article purchased through this Agency will be most minutely examined previous to its being packed and the same care under every circumstance, taken, as if persons were themselves individually present and superintending. Packages of a large size will, as usual, be shipped by fast-vessels to their destined port; but those of smaller dimensions, will, (unless otherwise instructed,) be sent through the Peninsular and Oriental Company's Office, Overland: thus enabling persons in most instances to receive their orders fully executed within four months from the date of the transmission of their instructions.

In transactions of a private and confidential nature a fair remuneration, according to circumstances, will be expected; in those of the ordinary nature of Agency Business, the Commission will be regulated by the customary rates; and for the selection, purchase and shipment of goods, a Commission of 5 per cent. on the gross amount will be charged.

Mr. P. Pittar has taken his passage in the India Steamer, to sail on the 10th February, for Suez and, therefore, requests for the present, that all letters intended for him may be directed to his residence, No. 36, Dhurrumtollah, Calcutta; but after her departure, to the address of MR. PARKE PITTAR, EUROPEAN AND ORIENTAL AGENCY OFFICE, LONDON, where they will meet with the most prompt attention.

China.—The Queen Steamer has arrived from China with intelligence to the 23d of December, of a still more important character than that which reached Calcutta last week. On the 7th of December, a collision took place between some lascars of the Fort William and some Chinese, at Canton and a Chinaman was stabbed. The lascars were defeated; the mob, flushed with success, increased to ten thousand men, and meeting with no check from the Chinese authorities, proceeded to attack the English factories, which they burnt and plundered. Two ladies, who were in the factories, were providentially conveyed to the house of one of the Hong Merchants and saved from the fury of the rioters. Sir Hugh Gough, who happened to be at Canton at the time, stationed a Steamer there for the protection of British interests, and ordered a large force to be in readiness to proceed to that city. The merchants addressed a letter to the Plenipotentiary on the subject of the disturbance, in which they censured the supineness of the local authorities of the city, and requested that the force at his disposal might be directed to afford them security in their mercantile transactions. Sir Henry Pottinger in his reply, traced the disturbance to their own imprudence, asserting that they had received every assistance from the British authorities, but, so far from affording him any support in the difficult negotiations on hand, had thrown obstacles in his way. He also distinctly refused to march troops to their assistance, and, at the earnest entreaty of the Chinese Mandarins, withdrew the Steamer. The merchants in their rejoinder endeavoured to rebut the disparaging assertions made by the Plenipotentiary, and denied the accuracy of his statements. There the matter rests for the present. Up to the 22d of December, a fortnight after the riot, no farther attempts had been made by the mob; and the troops which had been employed on the expedition,—with the exception of those left at Hong-Kong, Amoy and Chusan,—had been allowed to take their departure for India. By this measure, Sir Henry Pottinger has given the most decisive evidence of his conviction, that the outbreak was the result of local irritation, and originated in no desire on the part of the Chinese Government to disturb the pacification. The discussion between the merchants and Sir Henry has unfortunately given birth to party spirit, which will greatly increase the difficulty of discovering the real merits of the question.

It was well known for some time before the riot broke out, that the strongest feelings of animosity towards the English existed in the breasts of a very influential body of Chinese in and about Canton. The destruction of all the defences in the river, the attack on the city, and its consequent ransom in 1841, so humiliating to national pride, combined with the eventual triumph of our arms, and the acknowledgment of the Emperor, that he had been obliged to yield to circumstances, had inflamed the minds of the people almost to madness. The spirited manifesto, which was printed and dispersed in and about Canton by the malcontents, and their attempts to organize troops and to raise contributions, shewed but too clearly that there was a storm brewing, which must place the persons and property of Englishmen in that city in extreme jeopardy. In that manifesto, we find these expressions—"There is that English nation, whose ruler is now a woman and then a man; its people at one time like birds and then like beasts, with dispositions more fierce and furious than the tiger or the wolf, and hearts more greedy than the snake or the hog—this people have ever stealthily devoured all the southern barbarians, and like the demon of the night they now suddenly exalt themselves."—"What can be easier than for our celestial dynasty to exert its fulness of power, and exterminate these sea going imps, just as the blast bends the pliant bamboo?"—"We have recently read his Majesty's lucid mandate, that there is no other way, and what is required must be granted.—He remembers the loyal anger of his people. He has accordingly now temporarily settled all present difficulties, but it is that, having matured his plans, he may hereafter manifest his indignation, and shew to the empire that it had not fathomed the divine awe-inspiring counsel."—Then follows a bitter taunt which manifests the depth of national feeling: "But our high and mighty Emperor consents to demean himself to adopt soothing counsels of peace." The idea that the English intended to come and dwell among them seems to have given a keener edge to their indignation. "We have heard that the English intend to come into the Pearl river and make a settlement; this will not however stop at Chinese and foreigners, merely dwelling together, for men and beasts cannot endure each other.—If we do not permit ourselves to dwell with them under the same heaven, our spirit will feel no shame." It ends with these bold expressions. "We here bind ourselves to vengeance, and express these our sincere intentions in order to exhibit great principles; and also to manifest heaven's retribution and rejoice men's hearts, we now issue this patriotic declaration. The high gods clearly behold: do not lose your first resolution."

The Chinese Authorities appear to have been fully aware of the irritation which pervaded the public mind, for we find that the day before the flame broke forth, the Governor and Deputy Governor of the Province fixed up a proclamation, in which the rioters were denounced, and the peaceably disposed, cautioned against these seditious instigations. The existence of this feeling was equally known to the English merchants, who proceeded to Canton to make it the seat of their commercial operations. But they do not appear to have taken the smallest precautions against the danger which menaced them. Instead of adopting any measures to allay the irritation by a quiet and unobtrusive course of procedure, a hundred and seventy lascars were allowed to go up to Canton without any controlling authority among them; the laws were openly set at naught, and the prejudices of the Chinese violated by the presence of ladies in the factories, though the inflammatory proclamation had stated, as one of the chief grievances of the new order of things, the prospect that the Chinese and foreigners were to dwell together. Though the dispute with the lascars was only the immediate cause of the riot, yet it was certainly in the highest degree imprudent to have allowed any such cause to have arisen. A season of extraordinary peril called for extraordinary caution; and yet the most obvious maxims of prudence appear to have been neglected. While the natives of this vast empire were as yet unreconciled to the humiliating position in which our victories had placed it, and were petitioning the Emperor to break the peace and expel us; while they were manifesting the strongest desire to set the public authorities at defiance, and to take the duty of national vengeance into their own hands, it certainly behoved the merchants to act with the utmost wariness, and to avoid every appearance which might inflame the spirit of hostility; and so far as they have neglected any opportunity of soothing the people, and adopted a line of policy in their intercourse with them, which wore an air of triumph, so far they have made themselves responsible for the misfortunes which have befallen them.

The determination of the Plenipotentiary will be approved, not less on account of its intrinsic wisdom, than of his official position. In the decisive measures he pursued on hearing of the wanton massacre of the crews of the Nerbudda and the Anne, he has afforded a pledge of his determination not to allow the Chinese Government or any of its officers to trample on his countrymen. His refusal to send up a force to Canton, that the merchants might be able to carry on their mercantile transactions in security under the shadow of its protection, is not less judicious, and will secure him the praise of all disinterested men. After the Emperor had acceded to the terms of peace, Sir H. Pottinger could not have taken any such step, without incurring the charge of political inconsistency, more especially as the Chinese authorities in the city had disowned all participation in the riot, and expressed their determination to punish the rioters. The appearance of a British force would have irritated the minds of the people at a most critical juncture to incurable resentment, and probably occasioned a second and more extensive insurrection, by which our half-finished pacific relations with the Empire might have been broken asunder; and a renewal of hostilities rendered inevitable. It would have called forth the loudest remonstrances from the discontented provinces of the Empire, strengthened the hands of the war party in the cabinet, and laid a fresh train of calamities; we rejoice therefore that he has had the wisdom and firmness to resist the demand, though at the risk of losing some portion of his popularity.

The December Mail came in on Tuesday morning the 24th, bringing intelligence from England to the 6th of that month. The intelligence received by this opportunity is emphatically unimportant. Scarcely a single event is announced in connection with any part of the European or American world, which is worthy of record. The general aspect of affairs in our own beloved country was however, more pleasing than at the departure of the previous mail. The glorious intelligence of the pacification of Asia, by our successes in Affghanistan and China, reached London by express on the 21st November, and produced a very powerful effect on the public mind. The most cordial demonstrations of joy were exhibited throughout the country; and as far, as at this distance of place and time, we are enabled to form any correct estimate on the subject, we should say that no event since the downfall of Napoleon, has diffused so general a sensation of joy through the United Kingdom, as that which our victories in Affghanistan, and the peace with China, created. The clouds, which hovered over our national prospects, have been in some measure dispersed by the rays of hope which dawned from the east. The recovery of our prisoners from the Affghans, and the restoration of our national honour in Central Asia were considered as having relieved England from the gibes and jeers of her national enemies, and given her a new claim on the respect of mankind. The glorious and unexpected success in China, by which the exclusiveness of that empire is broken up, and one-third of the human race is brought by the instrumentality of England, within the pale of civilized relations, have given her a title to the gratitude of all those nations, who had hitherto bent the knee before the Chinese; while the opening of five ports to our manufactures has served to impart new life to our drooping commerce. The advices from all parts of England, which are furnished by the present mail, are more cheerful than any previous announcement during the year. Amidst these general remarks on the effect produced by the auspicious cargo of news sent from Bombay on the 16th of October, we must not forget the particular interest connected with the movement in Dublin. The Corporation of that city having voted its freedom to Sir Robert Sale, Mr. Fitzpatrick, a genuine representative of his own warm hearted country, proposed to confer it also on Lady Sale; and if they cannot find a precedent for such honors, they will create one; and a more suitable occasion for creating a good precedent they could scarcely have found.

The Treaty for the Suppression of the Slave trade, in which is included the mutual right of search, has been finally signed by the Four Powers. The date of this Act of humanity is the 12th November. The fifth power refused to become a party to it. France contributes her empty good-will to the cause of benevolence, but refuses any active co-operation. Her jealousy of England would prevent her accession to any measure in which England was interested; and this national feeling of hostility, so sedulously nourished by the Parisian journalists, as though it were a part of their stock in trade, appears to have received indefinite strength from the contents of the Mail, which traversed France on the 20th of November, on its way to London. While France, with the recollections of the Empire yet fresh, is impatient to expand her influence, and can find no field for her ambition, but in Africa, where the laurels of her heroes grow upon their tombs, she finds England casting off a connection in which she had experienced mortification, but not before Central Asia had rung with the report of her victories. She finds her extending her influence over the vast empire of China, humbling the proud dynasty of the Tartars to the dust, and opening new fields for her commerce, and erecting a new pivot for her power, in a region which had hitherto been sealed against the European family.

The anti-corn law league appears to be gathering strength for another struggle with the landed aristocracy, lay and clerical, at the next meeting of Parliament. The fund of 50,000*l.*, which it was proposed to raise to further the objects of this association, is likely to be doubled. Notwithstanding the revived firmness of our commercial and manufacturing prospects, there seems to be an increasing conviction that the corn law is the canker worm at the root of our prosperity; and it is probable that the next Session will give, if not a fixed duty, at least a farther relaxation of the monopoly. On the whole, the prospects of the country are evidently improving, and Sir Robert Peel will doubtless be able to meet Parliament again with a more cheerful confidence than he could have anticipated at the close of the last Session. His own party will also be found perhaps to have gained some wisdom during the recess, and will be disposed to make such farther concessions as may serve to bind all classes in one common and united effort to meet the difficulties of the times.

MAJOR POTTINGER.—The Hurkaru remarked about a fortnight since, on the authority of letters from Ferozepore, that Major Pottinger had been received in the coldest and most distant manner by the Governor General. This reception was considered, by those who were anxious to put the best construction upon the actions of their rulers, as the inevitable result of circumstances. It was attributed to the necessity of his expurgation through the ordeal of a Court Martial, before which time, it was said, he could receive no official welcome. But the very unusual method which has been adopted on this occasion, of publishing to the world the charges on which he is to be tried, and the mode in which the charges themselves are worded, give much support to the information received by our contemporary. The constitution of the Court is singular. It consists of a Civilian as President, and of four General officers as members. The predominance of Military officers in the Court would seem to imply that the offences of which it is to take cognizance were of a military character, and such as came within the province of a Court Martial. Yet it would appear that the charges are almost, if not exclusively, of a Political nature, and refer to the exercise of those functions, which were thrust upon Major Pottinger by the force of circumstances, after the death of Sir W. Macnaghten. We may be mistaken in our recollections, but we think this is the first instance in which the conduct of a Political Agent has been subject to the cognizance of any tribunal of less dignity than the Supreme Council.

The wording of the charge is unfortunate, in as much as it affords the enemies of the Governor General an opportunity of asserting, that it is evidently intended to mark his Lordship's personal feelings towards one, who rose to distinction during the reign of his predecessor. That the honour of the British name was deeply tarnished in the transactions of Cabul, and that a whole army was annihilated, is matter of history. What can be the object then of appointing a Court of Enquiry to examine whether the conduct of Major Pottinger, after the death of Sir W. Macnaghten, when the political direction of affairs devolved on him, was such as to reflect honour on the British arms, except it be to associate our disgrace with his honoured name? Perhaps it may have been in the hope of his being able to establish the fact, that the counsels which led to our disasters were the very reverse of those which he offered. We fear, however, that the number of those who will consider the question invidious, is likely far to exceed that of those, who will attribute it to a generous motive.

The enquiry regarding the drafts drawn on the Supreme Government, in the hour of extremity, by Major Pottinger, wears a still more questionable aspect. It is rarely that a British functionary is placed in circumstances of such extreme difficulty, as those in which he found himself. He was the only Assistant in the Political department, on the spot, at a time when the Head of the Establishment was infamously assassinated, after he had commenced a negotiation, which even the pressing danger of the troops would barely justify. He took charge of the office,—and with it of the negotiations,—simply because there was no one else on whom it could devolve. The whole of his previous career, by which he has earned so brilliant a reputation throughout Europe, forces on us the belief that nothing less than the unexampled emergency of the case, and the hope of saving the lives of eight or ten thousand men, would have induced him to affix his signature to the Bills thus extorted from him. He might possibly have avoided the trial he has now undergone, by refusing to act at all; but then he would not have been the Eldred Pottinger, whom no personal risk among friends or foes could deter from the performance of the duty he owed to his country. Whether he would, by refusing to act, have rendered himself liable to severe official censures or not, it is certain he would have been considered altogether unpardonable as a man, if, in his position and with his qualifications, he had refused all assistance to the beleaguered army. It is for Government itself, not for any inferior Court of Enquiry, to determine whether he was acting with due authority in the matter of the Bills. It is for Government, and for Government alone, to determine whether it will recognize any of his acts, and honour any of the bills which he drew. It is altogether without precedent, for the Supreme Authority in the state to submit to its own officers the delicate question, how far it is bound to the payment of certain sums of money drawn by a Political Agent in any given circumstances.

The circumstances, under which these Bills for fourteen lakhs of Rupees were drawn, were analogous to those under which Captain Elliott acted in reference to the surrendered Opium, with this difference, that the difficulties in Cabul were infinitely greater than those at Canton. In neither case could the functionaries have been in possession of direct authority to draw bills on such an account on their superiors; in both cases they were constrained to act upon their own discretion, under the necessity of circumstances for which no provision could have been previously made. Yet in the matter of the Opium drafts, the home Government, without submitting the question to any Court of Enquiry, at once took on itself the responsibility of refusing to recognize their validity; and it would perhaps have been more dignified, if the local Government had at once acted upon the precedent thus afforded, and determined to follow its own judgement in honouring or rejecting the Bills. Besides, the consideration for which they were granted, was not fulfilled. The troops were to be conducted in safety out of the country; they were basely murdered on their march. If the Chiefs, who received the money, knew that they had not the power to grant this safe conduct, and could not prevent the massacre of the army, they extorted the drafts on false pretences, and are not entitled to the payment of them. If they possessed this power, and refused to exercise it, their claim is if possible still less valid.

THE SAILOR'S HOME.—The annual meeting of the Sailor's Home was held on Monday last, at the Town Hall. The Chair was taken by the President, Sir John Peter Grant. There were not above twenty gentlemen present; a very miserable attendance, considering the benevolent object and extensive usefulness of the Institution.

It would be altogether superfluous to say a word on the value of such an establishment in a port like Calcutta. The scenes of riot and debauchery, which are presented to the eye in the locality of the Punch Houses in the Lall Bazar throughout the day and far into the night, must convince every benevolent mind of the importance of maintaining an Institution, in which the sailors are rescued from the contagion of vice, and enabled to enjoy the comforts of a peaceful home during their brief residence on shore. It is therefore with feelings of great satisfaction we find, from the Report read at the Meeting, that the progress of the Home during the past year has been more encouraging than at any former period, and that arrangements have been completed for enlarging its accommodations. The number of men admitted into it during the past twelve months was 1220, being 487 in excess of the highest number received in any previous year; of these 1,167 have been shipped.

The Home has been removed from the obscure and inconvenient locality of Emambary lane to the large, airy and commodious house near the Police office. The expense of the new House is 400 Rupees a month, for which additional charge the Committee must look to public generosity, since the allowance made by Government for rent has been discontinued, and cannot be renewed without the sanction of the Court of Directors. We hope the Court will vose it back to the Committee without a dissentient voice. It seems odd at first sight that lakhs upon lakhs of Rupees can be lavished on a raree shew at Ferozepore without consulting the Court of Directors, while their consent is required to continue a small public grant, which contributes to rescue a thousand European sailors annually from the lowest depth of degradation. But this Government is a Government of anomalies. We hope the Committee will not fail to send a copy of their report to Leadenhall Street, and bring to the especial notice of the Court the fact, that the total saving to the poor sailors which the existence of the Home has secured, amounts to 63,906 Rupees, which money would otherwise have been spent in the brothels and liquor shops of the town, and contributed to swell the mass of immorality, disease and death. The little monthly pittance for which the Committee are now suitors to our Honourable Masters, is after all but a small contribution from a great Government to the cause of public morals.

The proposal made by the Calcutta Temperance Society to co-operate with the Sailor's Home, on the condition that ardent spirits should be entirely excluded from it, has not been acceded to; but we are happy to find that it was treated with the consideration which the benevolence of the motive demanded. It is to be reconsidered at the next meeting in July. We subjoin to this article, the reasons given by the Committee for not having accepted the alliance, and they appear to us satisfactory. We are fully aware that in offering such an opinion we are running counter to the views, the pure and generous views, of some friends whom we hold in the highest esteem, and with whom we are happy at all times to co-operate in every benevolent undertaking. But they will appreciate our motives, as we do theirs. Temperance Societies are excellent Institutions, and cannot be too widely established. The Sailor's Home is equally an admirable Institution, established to correct a great and specific evil; and the more assistance it can obtain, the greater will be its means of doing good. But we much fear that the entire exclusion of spirituous liquors would induce many to quit it, and resort to the Punch Houses, and that the public interests it protects would be more injured by this diminution of its practical utility, than they would be promoted by an accession of influence and funds. The great object of the Sailor's Home is to keep the poor sailors from the wretched crimps who lie in wait to inveigle and strip them; and to induce habits of sobriety and temperance. It is not its object to eradicate the habit of drinking spirits, for which indeed the limited residence of the men at this retreat affords but little opportunity; and if, in any attempt to enforce total abstinence from liquor, the men were induced by the strength of their inclinations to leave the establishment, the cause of abstinence would gain nothing, and the cause of temperance and virtue would lose much. Besides, the quantity of ardent spirits drunk throughout the year is so small,—not averaging more than a wine glass a day for each,—as not to affect the value or utility of the institution. We think the two Associations must therefore be content to labor each in its own sphere, and upon its own principles, without any further co-operation than mutual good-will.

"A proposition has been made by the Calcutta Temperance Society, offering their co-operation on condition that spirituous liquors be entirely excluded from the institution; your Committee would have gladly acceded to this proposition, were they not of opinion that its adoption would cause a number of men to forsake the Home, and throw themselves into the hands of the crimps, and that many of those who would come, having been daily accustomed on board ships to their glass of grog, would not be satisfied without some allowance on shore; and that, therefore, if they were debarred from it entirely in the Home, many of them would resort to the Punch Houses, or to the shops in the bazar, for the deleterious mixture usually vended there as spirits. The probability is, that having once entered those dens of iniquity, they would not quit them except in a state of intoxication; if, indeed, they were fortunate enough to escape from the clutches of the crimps.

"Your Committee are further of opinion, that the stay of the men is much too short, averaging 12 to 15 days, to admit of persons of their habits deriving any permanent benefit from being obliged to submit during their stay to temperance rules."

THE AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY.—A special meeting was held of the Agricultural Society on Wednesday last, the 8th Instant, for the purpose of reconsidering the question of Proxies, and the late increase of subscription. Before entering on the discussion of these topics, the President read a requisition from Mr. Piddington and fifty-four of his friends, and from seven other individuals to postpone the meeting, so as to allow of sufficient time for consulting the most distant stations on the questions to be submitted to the meeting. Sir John Grant replied, that he had no power, as President, to rescind the votes of a General Meeting. Mr. Turton then brought forward the following motion which was seconded by Mr. Kaye and carried, an amendment having been put by Mr. Piddington and negatived:

"That on the question of all paid officers of this Society, and of the salaries to be given to any one officer of the Society; absent members shall be allowed to vote, by letter, addressed post paid to the Secretary, stating the person for whom they intend to vote and that on all questions carried at a meeting in Calcutta, the question shall be again submitted to the Society, on a requisition of 10 members in writing, addressed to the Secretary, to rescind the same, at which every absent member shall be entitled to vote by letter, such vote being addressed post paid to the Secretary."

We think this resolution is calculated in a great measure to meet the case. The Mofussil members will now possess the right of voting on the election of all the paid officers of the Society, and thus enjoy that influence which it is deemed so desirable they should possess. We have some doubts however about the working of the second proposition, that on the request of any ten members every question carried at a meeting may be re-opened at a subsequent meeting, when every absent member will be entitled to vote. We fear that an opportunity will thus be created for any ten factious or fractious members indefinitely to impede the business of the Society. It is on this ground alone that we have any objection to the votes of those who reside in the country. The advantage to be derived from their wisdom and experience will scarcely be equivalent to the disadvantage which may arise from the power now given to unsettle every thing.

The questions which are thus exposed to the risk of being rescinded, are not clearly defined; and it is not stated whether the arrangement is to be prospective only, or retrospective likewise; that is, whether all questions which have been already settled by the votes of the resident members may not thus be brought under reconsideration. Neither is there any definition of the period after which any measure which has been adopted, shall be considered to have been established. Under the wording of the resolution, any vote may at any future time be brought again before the Society; and much of its valuable time may thus be frittered away, in reconsidering the resolutions passed during the year. It is not clear moreover whether the ten members, whose requisition shall be sufficient to re-open any question, are to be resident or non-resident members. If any ten members in any district are at any time at liberty to demand the review after any lapse of time, of any measure which may be hereafter adopted, and the votes of five hundred of the members of the Society scattered over the country are to be taken upon it, the energies of the Society will be wasted in contention, and its capacity of benefitting the country materially curtailed. And there is no provision for the period at which the scrutiny shall be taken upon any point thus submitted to the universal suffrage of the whole body; and it may, for aught we see to the contrary, be kept open for months awaiting the arrival of proxies. We could have wished that the resolution had been more precisely worded, and that as little scope had been left as possible for those interminable discussions, which may be expected to arise from the spirit of contention which has unfortunately obtained a footing in the Society.

THE FEROZEPORE TOURNAMENT HAS CLOSED; and the troops are now on their way to their respective Cantonments. The Governor General has put forth two notifications in reference to this great event, in one of which the public is informed that the objects for which the Army of Reserve had been assembled, having been accomplished, the army was broken up; in the other we are told that after twenty-eight battalions of Infantry, eleven Regiments of Cavalry and seventeen batteries of artillery, comprising one hundred and two guns, had been reviewed by the Commander in Chief and had passed in column before the Governor General, thirty thousand seers, that is, about thirty tons, of their favourite mehtays, or sweetmeats, were distributed to the Native Regiments. From which it is natural to infer that the main object of keeping together an army of Reserve at an expense of 60, or 70,000*l*. a month, was to afford the Commander in Chief an opportunity of reviewing, and Lord Ellenborough the occasion of inspecting the man, and to feast them with sweetmeats. The sweetmeats were doubtless very acceptable, and were swallowed with much delight; only the announcement of such an event, in a public proclamation by order of the Governor General of British India, is naturally considered inconsistent with the dignity of the viceregal character. The minuteness with which the number of seers of mehtays is chronicled in this state document, affords an amusing contrast to the studied mystery, in which even the unimportant movements of Government are shrouded; and the subject will afford abundant food for ridicule to the Opposition journals at home, and possibly call down fresh censures from the Authorities.

We have placed the notification on record in our columns, though without the remotest idea of its design. It may have been intended to subserve some great national object, which it is not the privilege of the present generation to understand; and it must therefore be made over to the researches or the ingenuity of some future historian. It will remain for him to discover what political plan it was proposed to promote by announcing, that General Napier had concentrated at Sukkur fourteen Regiments of foot and horse, and an ample force of artillery,—that two vessels, lately transferred from the Euphrates, had been incorporated with the steam flotilla of the Indus—that 14,000 troops had been assembled to preserve the tranquillity of one of our own provinces, where for three months, they had been searching for insurgents, without success, and that six Regiments lately employed in China were now at the disposal of the Governor General. This ambitious enumeration of troops, at a time when peace has been "restored to Asia on the East and the West," may be attributed by some to the want of any adequate conception of the true nature and object of Government, or it may be intended to ensure the good behaviour of the Seiks, the Nepalese and the Ameers of Scinde, when translated into their respective languages. —One thing at least is certain, that if the object of Lord Ellenborough is to veil all his proceedings in mystery, he has succeeded in doing so beyond any of his predecessors; for the details which he communicates, even to the minute enumeration of the sweetmeats, are as mysterious, as the secrets of state, which his Secretaries are obliged to keep as under the seal of confession.

UNION BANK.—The arrival of the December Mail from England induces us to postpone to the next week, our own observations on the Meeting of the Union Bank, and the speeches delivered at it, partly because we are obliged to make room for the contents of the Mail, and partly because the public attention is engaged by matters of deeper interest. Suffice it to say that a Dividend of Eight per cent. was declared; that it was proposed to divide the loss arising from the transactions of the Bank with two of the late firms, over several years; and that it was distinctly announced that the Bank would lose nothing by the failure of Fergusson, Brothers and Co.; indeed, that a considerable sum would remain on hand after the claims of the Bank had been satisfied.

The same reason constrains us to postpone our remarks on the very interesting examination of the youths in the General Assembly's Institution, of which we publish the Programme.

WEEKLY EPITOME OF NEWS.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 19.

— A Meeting of the Indigo Planter's Association took place last Saturday, the attendance at which only served to mark the indifference of this body to the Society. This institution founded for their benefit can scarcely be kept in existence. The Benevolent Fund, which was intended to secure a provision for widows and orphans, is not prospering. The Planter's Journal says, that this does not arise from any lack of the spirit of charity and benevolence in that body—only that charity and benevolence are not visible. There is music in the spheres, only we do not hear it. The twin association of the Zemindars born about the same time is we fear in much the same plight. We have heard nothing of its operation, or even of its existence, for more than a twelve month, which leads to the sad conclusion that there is nothing so short-lived or inactive as indigenous patriotism.

— The Governor General left Ferozepore on the 6th of January on his way to Meerut, and the whole force was dispersing rapidly. The only items of particular interest from that quarter are that the Governor General had paid a long promised visit to Lady Sale, attended only by a single A. D. C.; and that the Commander-in-Chief had given a great dinner, at which Major Pottinger was present; from which we infer that as his transgressions are Political and not Military, Sir Jasper, has no official scruples at inviting him to dinner pending his trial.

— The Court Martials are going on—and we suppose off—swimmingly, as a correspondent of the Hurkaru announces. In some cases the officers have not even been called on for their defence. Col. Palmer, Captains Boyd, Eyre and others have been acquitted. The charges, says this correspondent, were so worded that they could hardly fail to get off. Yet in the case of Pottinger they were worded, as if with a design that he should be convicted.

— It is said that authentic intelligence has been received of the death of Col. Stoddart and Capt. Conolly at Bokhara. They are reported to have been thrown into dungeons, where the vermin quickly devoured them. We have so frequently heard of Col. Stoddart's destruction, that the intelligence must come in a most unquestionable shape before it can be regarded as authentic.

— We think the weakest reason which has been yet advanced against the appointment of Major Broadfoot, 'the first of men,' as we have seen him emphatically called, is contained in the following envious ebullition. "The Burmese and the poor inhabitants of Tenasserim, who saw that Officer but the other day as a petty Officer issuing ghee and beef, and who know nothing of his great military deeds in Affghanistan, will naturally suppose, that he made good pickings as a commissary, and bribed high to be raised at once to the chiefship over them. Such events they have often witnessed under the rule of the Golden Foot, and we ought not to let them suspect even, that a similar case could possibly occur under the British Government."

— As our Summary of last Wednesday was thrown out for want of room, we now mention that the sentence on the first Native libeller ever convicted in the Supreme Court, was, that he should pay a fine of 500 Rs., be confined six months in jail, and find securities himself in 1000 Rs. and two others in 500 Rs. each. The punishment is severe, but not more so than the greatness and wantonness of the offence merited.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 20.

The statue of the Marquis of Wellesley, voted by the inhabitants of Calcutta in 1803, which had been executed by Bacon, is now at the end of forty years on its way to this country, just after we have heard of the death of that illustrious statesman.

— The London Mail was expected at Bombay between the 10th, and the 12th and it is hoped may possibly arrive in the course of this day.

— We regret to record the death, by an attack of Cholera, of Major General Foster Walker.

— The Englishman in his editorial column states, that Printed Books may be taken to England free of duty. We shall be very happy to find that our contemporary is correct, but we fear the news is too good to be true. The re-importation into England of books, which had been exported from it, used to be fettered with a duty of three pence a pound, equivalent to the drawback allowed on the exportation of paper. We know there is a general impression that all English books taken home are still liable to duty, though it is less than it formerly was; and many who have collected valuable libraries here are hence deterred from sending them home, but send them to Auction when they sell for less than an old song. We wish some of our Librarians would illuminate our darkness on this point.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 21.

— The Queen has arrived from China, with accounts of a very serious outbreak at Canton, where a mob of ten thousand men had assembled together and burnt down the British Hong. We have published the most comprehensive account we could find of it, among the Journals which have reached us; but it is evidently written by one belonging to the mercantile party, who are not disposed to admit that the Riot may in part be traced to the imprudence of the merchants. The transports with a large portion of the troops had been dispatched from China, in Company of the Queen, which was to steam the vessels through the Straits.

— The Twelfth annual examination of the students in the General Assembly's Institution took place yesterday at the Town Hall, in the presence of a large number of the most influential members in European and Native society.

— Letters from Gwalior state, that the small pox was raging there with great violence, and that scarcely five in a hundred recovered.

— Rustumjee Cowasjee is about to give a farewell party to Mr. H. T. Prinsep, who, after having taken a prominent part in the political transactions of this empire, for the last twenty-five years, since he accompanied Lord Hastings as his Secretary during the Pindaree war, is now about to retire to his native land.

MONDAY, JANUARY 23.

— The Hurkaru publishes a letter from Roree, on the Banks of the Indus, dated the 3d of January. The items of intelligence are interesting. Sir C. Napier's camp is in the neighbourhood of Khyrpoor. He has with him a force of 8000 Bombay troops. No one (Lord Ellenborough of course excepted) knows what he is about; whether Scinde is to be conquered or not. Shikarpore, which under our protection would have become an important commercial depot, and the focus of trade beyond the Indus, having been abandoned, the natives have pulled down every house we had built, to efface every trace of the Feringees. The same is said of Quetta and Dadur, both which places have been plundered. At Candahar the people are ready to tear each other to pieces, and are arming the refugee Hindoostanees to repel the violence of Sufter Jung. The letter says that the disturbances in Scinde have been much magnified, and that every thing has gone wrong since Major Outram left it. It also affirms, that Sir Charles Napier had put in orders, that he would hang the officers found plundering with his own hands; and turn the common soldiers over to the tender mercies of the Provost Marshall of his army.

— The following extract will be read with deep interest.

"As a proof that the feeling of good comradeship between the 13th Light Infantry and the 35th Native Infantry is genuine, four of the former carried a sick sepoy of the latter Corps, several miles on their shoulders, he being left behind on one of the marches, by some mistake; and no joke either, —the poor fellow being in the last stage of confluence small-pox."

— Lord Ellenborough is to be at Meerut on the 26th, and at Delhi about the beginning of February, when it is said to be his intention to depose the Great Mogul, or to drive the descendant of Timur from his pageant throne, or to sit down with boots in his presence, or to do something which shall rouse the Mahommedan population to the highest pitch of fury. We believe his Lordship will do no such thing, but hold his durbar, and receive the Kow-tow of the Chieftains of the vicinity as the true Emperor of the East, without wasting a thought on the extinct dynasty.

— We regret to find from the Madras papers, that the Rev. Mr. Spring has been removed by death, after a residence of twenty-six years in India.

— Letters from the banks of the Sutledge state, that Dost Mahomed was still at Loodiana, and had not moved on towards Affghanistan, and that he was in expectation of some pecuniary assistance from our Government. Lord Ellenborough might, we think, without impropriety and without distress, give him the amount of a twelve month's pay, two lakhs of Rupees, to smoothe his way to his iminerated capital.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 24.

— Mr. W. S. Smith, of the late firm of Gilmore and Co., has come forward in his own name to rebut the very serious charge against him which the reporter of the Hurkaru erroneously put into the mouth of the Secretary of the Union Bank, who was made distinctly to say, 'The documents were given to one of the members of the firm of Gilmore and Co. who was at the time a Director of the Bank, with the request and on the understanding of his merely conveying them to the hands of third parties, who were to hold them in trust. Instead however of this engagement being fulfilled by him, he retained possession of those papers, which subsequently passed into the hands of third parties, but not in trust for the Bank, and thus the Bank lost its lien upon the property, to which those deeds and papers related." This implies a charge which must affect the standing of any man in society. Mr. Smith, the individual alluded to, affirms that he "never in his life received a paper or document of any kind whatever in trust for the Union Bank, either as a Director of that Institution or as a member of the late firm of Gilmore and Co." Mr. Gordon states that the report of the desultory conversation regarding the Colliery papers is confused and incorrect.

— The intelligence from Scinde, as detailed in a letter from Ferozepore of the 13th instant, published in the Englishman, looks very warlike. Two officers of the 3d Bombay Cavalry, who had obtained leave to visit the City of Delhi, have been recalled by express, and Christie's horse, who were on their way to join him, have been ordered to return. Sir Charles Napier may yet have the pleasure of besieging the city of Hydrabad.

— The Somnath Gates have, we are informed, actually left the Magazine on their way to the ruins of the temple under the command, it is said, of Capt. Herries, one of the A. D. C. to the Governor General. We thought the procession had been placed under the command of Major Leech, and that the Aide-de-camp, merely accompanied it on the part of Lord Ellenborough.

— One Mr. A. G. Martin was proceeding yesterday to Tulloh's Auction, when he crossed a sepoy in his way who would not move. It is said, Mr. Martin struck him with his whip and drove on. The sepoy adopted a very ingenious mode of identifying the person who had struck him. He assembled some of his comrades and carried off the buggy. Its master soon followed, when he was taken to the Police, and fined Five Rupees for the assault.

— The Hurkaru of this morning states, that intelligence was yesterday received in town, of a revolution having broke out in Nepal. "It would appear," says his correspondent, "that certain tyrannical attempts by some of the members of the royal family on the females of the nobility, occasioned an insurrection, which has terminated in the dethronement of the monarch by the general consent of the people." We may add that the insensate Raja and his son have been placed under salutary restraint, and that the Queen has been recalled from exile, and entrusted with the responsibilities of the administration, which no one is more worthy to manage than she is.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 25.

— The London Mail arrived in Calcutta yesterday morning, at 8 A. M., with news to the 6th of December. The Mails were despatched from Suez on the 23th of that month; and the Express has thus reached us in thirty days; the regular Mail will probably be here in thirty-two, perhaps thirty-three days. We note these particulars for reference when the Hindoostan Steamer returns, that we may compare her speed with that of the Mail sent by way of Bombay.

LATEST EUROPEAN INTELLIGENCE.

The Queen, his Royal Highness Prince Albert, the Prince of Wales, and Princess Royal have been spending the last few weeks at Walmer Castle, which the Duke of Wellington has placed at Her Majesty's service.

There is a rumour that Prince Albert is to succeed the Duke of Wellington in the office of Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports, his Grace desiring to be relieved from all active duty.

Prince George of Cambridge has through his solicitor addressed the Editor of the Observer, denying most solemnly certain calumnies affecting the purity and honour of Lady Augusta Somerset.

The Marquis of Londonderry, while hunting near Stockton on Tees, was thrown from his horse, from the effects of which his right arm was broken.

A terrible fire broke out in the large cotton-mills of Messrs. Pooley, in Manchester, on the night of the 3d. The fire began near the chief staircase; and so rapid was the progress of the flames that the escape of some of the work people was cut off. That part of the pile of buildings called the New Mill was destroyed before the fire was subdued; and many persons were missing. Nine bodies were dug out of the ruins. The damage is estimated as exceeding 10,000*l*.

Within the last eight months the price of Whitby and Newcastle built ships has fallen nearly 3*l*. per register ton, while new ships sent over from America have been sold at 3*l*. 10*s*. to 4*l*. per ton register, which cost the owners 8*l*. to 10*l*. per ton. The gross amount of British registered tonnage is 2,000,000 tons. The best informed parties valued this property eighteen months ago at an average of eleven pounds per ton, including steam-boats, the finest East India ships, colliers, and coasters, giving for value 28,000,000*l*. The same parties calculate the depreciation within the last eighteen months at about 40 per cent., or 11,440,000*l*., a most fearful loss of property, and it is said that one-third part thereof is mortgaged.—Much speculation is afloat in the city on the expediency or practicability of a reduction of the 3½ per cent stocks to 3 per cent. in the course of the next year, and some go so far as to assume that Sir R. Peel has determined on bringing forward that very important measure early in the session, in order to avail himself of the great saving to be thereby effected in the public expenditure, which would exceed 1,000,000*l*. annually.

A great reduction in the number of electors will take place on the registries for this year, owing:—First, as in the old boroughs, numbers have been compelled to receive parochial relief; and secondly, in both old and new boroughs a great reduction in the value of property has taken place, so that many houses, once of the value of ten pounds, are reduced below that sum.—The Court of Bankruptcy has again been occupied in investigating the case of Lord Huntingtower, who has been made a bankrupt, and whose liabilities amount to upwards of 200,000*l*. The object was to sift the honest from the fraudulent debts. Names of men who stand high in society are strangely mixed up in the account of the career of this reckless young man. In the course of his examination, Lord Huntingtower exclaimed —"In truth, I do not understand these accounts myself; and they are principally prepared under the direction of my solicitor and accountant." Mr. Commissioner Fonblanque said that he must be made to understand them. The examination was adjourned for a month, to enable the bankrupt to amend his accounts.

A special general meeting of the shareholders of the Great Western Ship Company was held lately at Bristol, to receive a report from a committee appointed to investigate the affairs of the company. The report recommended the sale of all the company's property, and the winding up of the concern. A resolution in accordance with the report was moved by J. Cunningham, Esq., and a very lengthy and stormy discussion ensued, in the course of which it was elicited that the liabilities of the concern amounted to 23,818*l*. There was due on calls 17,000*l*., being a balance against the company of 6818*l*. The cost of the Great Western was stated at 61,671*l*. Complaints were made of the extravagant management of the company's affairs. It was stated that the highest bidding for the Great Western at the recent attempt to sell her was 17,500*l*. A set of counter resolutions was presented by the directors, and eventually adopted by the meeting in a modified form, to the effect that the Great Western should continue her voyages at the usual time, unless in the meantime an advantageous offer should be made for her; that the Great Britain should be completed and fitted for sea, and that a loan of 20,000*l*. should be raised for that purpose.

FROM 21ST TO 26TH NOV.—After an interval of of nearly two years spent in its restoration and renovation, the Temple Church was reopened on the 20th. This very ancient, interesting, and most beautiful structure is now in all its essential parts, as its original founders framed it. All that great artistical skill, persevering industry, and lavish expenditure could do, has been effected to exhibit again in their pristine beauty the exquisite taste of the design and the surpassing delicacy of the execution—and well has this profusion of skill and of wealth been bestowed.

Berrymead Priory, Acton, has just been purchased by the Sisters of Le sacra Cœur de Jesus of Paris, to be converted into a convent. The priory is a castellated building, of considerable extent, and since the year 1679 has been the residence of many of the aristocracy. For some time it was the property of Lady Mary Wortly Montague, the celebrated wit and beauty.—A most extraordinary collection of Pagan deities, instruments of war, and vessels for domestic purposes, has lately arrived in this country from Mexico, as presents to Sir E. Antrobus, Bart.—The sum of 640*l*. has been lately given for the bulb of a tulip, called "Citadel of Antwerp."

Lately, in 36 hours, not less than 45 couples were married by Mr. S. Beattie, of the Sark Tollbar, Gretna, besides all the business done in the same way by the worthy "Bishop" Mr. J. Linton, of Gretna-hall.

At Bow-street, the Rev. W. Bailey, L.L.D., of Queen's-square Chapel, Westminster, has been committed on a charge of forging a promissory note for 2375*l*. and an I. O. U. referring to the same sum, with intent to defraud the representatives of a man named Robert Smith, of penurious habits, but of alleged great wealth, who died at his residence in Seven-Dials. His brother became his executor, and was soon assailed by persons who brought forward demands of fictitious debts on the estate.

A monument, subscribed for by the friends of the abolition of slavery, has lately been erected in Westminster Abbey, to the memory of Zachariah Macaulay. It consists of a very handsome sarcophagus, enriched with appropriate emblems, and surmounted by a bust, which bears a strong resemblance to the deceased, and is, moreover, singularly expressive of that peculiar mildness and benevolence which so distinguished him through life.

The steamer Great Western has arrived from New York in twelve days and eighteen hours, the shortest passage yet made between that port and Liverpool.

We regret to see announced the murder of a Roman Catholic gentleman, Mr. Scully, of Kilfeacle, in the county of Tipperary. The unfortunate victim was returning to his residence after enjoying a day's sporting in the neighbourhood, when he was waylaid and shot dead, two bullets passing through his heart.

It is proposed to erect a suitable monument, by subscription in Enniskillen Church, to the late Gen. Sir G. L. Cole.—It has been reported, with how much correctness we know not, that Mr. O'Connell is about to withdraw himself from public life and devote the remainder of his days to monastic seclusion.

A monument to the memory of the Right Hon. John Philpot Curran, has just been erected in St. Patrick's Cathedral, Dublin. The artist employed was an Irish gentleman named Moore.

Sir E. Sugden having already had occasion to reverse a decision of the new Master of Rolls it has been remarked that his predecessor, Sir M. O'Loghlen, had, during five years and a half pronounced no less than 25,000 orders, from which there were only twenty appeals; fourteen of which were affirmed, three partly varied, and only three reversed—one at his own suggestion

The Queen has been pleased to grant the place of one of the Lords of Session in Scotland, to Alexander Wood, Esq., in the room of Lord Gillies, who has been obliged by ill health to resign. It is thought that the office of Dean of the Faculty of Advocates will be conferred on Mr. P. Robertson. On the 22d Nov., Mr. Wood took his seat in the Court of Session, as Lord Probationer, beside Lord Ivory in the outer house, and in the inner house, as Junior Lord Ordinary. Lord Jeffrey in consequence took his seat on the bench of the first division, in the room of Lord Gillies.

Mr. Fox Maule has been elected Lord Rector of Glasgow University, by a majority in all the "nations"; his opponent being the Marquis of Bute. Mr. Maule was supported by the Non-intrusionists, the Marquis by the Moderates.

The Scottish Episcopalian college is to be built in the neighbourhood of Perth, upon the lands of Cairneis, belonging to George Paton, Esq., advocate, who made a gratuitous offer of sufficient ground for the purpose. It will stand on a good elevation, and command an extensive prospect.

The Paisley Advertiser says, we grieve to say that the number of the unemployed is still rising. Last week it was 7,022, this week it is 7,372: showing an increase of 350.

Our accounts from America are not of very general interest. The cabinet would, it is stated, be reorganized before the meeting of Congress in December. Mr. Webster would retire from it, and Mr. Cushing would occupy his seat. Mr. Spencer and Mr. Upshur were both mentioned as candidates for the office of Secretary of State. Mr. Webster was on a visit to New York. The citizens had presented an address to him. His reply was short, but eloquent, and it gave general satisfaction.

Mr. Dicken's book had arrived out, and given great offence to our Transatlantic neighbours. The statements contained in it leave no doubt, they say, that the offensive article in the Foreign Quarterly Review on the American press was the production of the same pen.

The papers state, as a proof of the bad odour in which the credit of the government is held, that while bills on the executive of the United States could only be negotiated at three per cent. discount (thirty days' sight), at Havannah private bills at sixty days' sight were negotiated at two per cent. premium.

At Natchez, a duel between Judge Tenney and Mr. N. C. Rowley was in train of preparation. It was to take place on the Arkansas shore, opposite to Prince Town. Each of the principals was to be armed with a rifle, a pair of duelling pistols, and a bowieknife. The rifles were to be discharged at 30 paces' distance, then to advance at pleasure, to the fall of one or both of them. The cause of the duel is said to be through a decision of Judge Tenney, at the Circuit Court in Concordia, affecting Mr. Rowley's property. This is quite an improvement on the usual tardy course of appeal. Should the Judge receive a rifle ball through the heart, we presume it will be held that his decision was wrong, and ought to be set aside. On the other hand, should his Honour succeed in plunging a bowie-knife fist-deep into the thorax of Mr. Rowley, the law of the judge will stand good, and the equity of his decision be unquestionable.

The Débats thus announces the ceremony of the closing of the protocol:—"The representatives of Great Britain, Austria, Russia, and Prussia, assembled in London, on Nov. 10, in order to confer on the treaty of Dec. 20, 1841, relative to the suppression of the slave-trade. The French government having communicated its firm resolution not to ratify the treaty, the four plenipotentiaries, after having purely and simply verified the refusal of France, declared in the name of their respective courts, that they maintained all the clauses of the treaty, and that they closed definitively the protocol."

General Vandersmissen, who was implicated in the late Belgian conspiracy, escaped from prison at Brussels on the 7th of Nov., disguised in his wife's clothes. The lady subsequently effected her escape also. A letter from General Vandersmissen, dated Aix-la-Chapelle, 9th, announces his safe arrival on the Prussian territory (and at the same time on the Dutch frontier). His lady had just joined him, having been (as he observes) more fortunate than Madame Lavalette. The General is obviously proud of his wife, and thinks that England ought to be equally proud of having given birth to such a heroine. She is the daughter of the late Admiral Graves.

Funchal, the capital of Madeira and the whole of the islands, had been visited with one of the most dreadful storms that has occurred since the flood in the year 1803, when upwards of 400 persons were swept into the sea.

The death of the Right Rev. Dr. Sandes, Lord Bishop of Cashel and Waterford, a man of the purest and most elevated character, and who might truly be described as an ornament to the Church, took place at his residence, on 15th Nov, in Fitzwilliam-square, Dublin. Dr. Sandes had long been a Fellow of the University of Dublin, and was elevated to the See of Cashel by the late Government.

Mr. William Hone, the well-known author of the "Every-Day Book," and other popular works, died on 6th Nov., after a long illness and much suffering, which he bore with the most exemplary patience. In early life he was celebrated as one of the first satirical writers of the day; his "Political House that Jack built," went through upwards of 50 editions, and, it is said, that by illustrating this and similar works the name of George Cruikshank was first established. By putting one of his satires into the form of the Liturgy of the Church of England he was prosecuted for blasphemy; and his trial before Lord Ellenborough, which lasted three days, and in which he successfully defended himself in person, with the greatest ability, may be considered one of the causes célèbres of this country. When Dr. Stodart established the paper, now extinct, called the New Times, Mr. Hone published an admirable burlesque of it, in the form of a newspaper called the "Slap at Slop," by which he gave a nickname to, and effectually demolished, that very frothy and pompous person. Having abandoned his career as a satirist, he appeared in later years as the editor of the "Every-Day Book," the "Year Book," and the "Table-Book," three works, all on the same principle of giving antiquarian information in a popular form, and all exhibiting the indefatigable perseverance and research of Mr. Hone. The "Every-Day Book," in which the information given is connected with the days in the year, may be considered as a standard library book. Towards the close of his life, he became one of the conductors of the Patriot newspaper, and in this situation he continued till increasing infirmity, occasioned not so much by years as by unremitting labours of his life, caused him to retire from every active pursuit.

Mr. J. Hollins, and Mr. F. Grant were elected associates.—Lord Wrottesley has lately finished the erection of an astronomical observatory on his estates near Wolverhampton.—The public will be sorry to hear that Captain Basil Hall, R. N., whose literary and professional eminence are so widely known, is in a condition of mind and body the most painful to contemplate.

Mr. J. Miles, in a letter to the Editor of the Atlas, says, "It is perfectly true that such an invention," (the Aerial Steam Carriage) "is in existence, totally distinct from the principle of balloons; that a working model has been shown me, which, by its action, appears to establish the perfect practicability of travelling through the air, being so complete and simple in its construction, and the combination of its parts so extraordinary, that little doubt remains that the important results of the invention will be fully achieved. I am given to understand that the first carriage will be ready for operation early in the ensuing year: it therefore behoves individuals to await the development of this wonderful invention, when it may become an important subject for consideration as to the changes that will result to society, whether under the control of the government, or in the hands of a public company."

Letters and papers from Bombay, 1st Oct., via Marseilles, reached London on the 8th November; those by way of Falmouth were delivered in London on the 14th November. News of the peace with China, and the capture of Cabul, reached London by express from Paris on the 21st November, and the particulars were published on the 23d November; on the morning of which day the triumphs of our armies in India and China were communicated to the Queen at Walmer Castle, by a special messenger despatched from Downing Street.

A letter to the Lord Mayor of London from Lord Stanley, communicated on 23d November, the intelligence, that "it has pleased Almighty God to crown her Majesty's arms in China with complete success; and that the Emperor of China has been compelled to recognize the claims of Great Britain."

By the direction of the War Office, the Park and Tower guns, were fired to celebrate the receipt of the news from the East, and especially from China. It was reported that the war in Affghanistan was at an end, and that on the ratification of the treaty, a day will be appointed for a general holiday, an illumination, with fire works in the Park, and other amusements, similar to the proclamation of the peace of 1814. In the evening, the Metropolitan church-bells rang.

The news showed its immediate effect in the city by a rise in the funds. The cotton-market became brisk, and an advance in the price of one-eighth of a penny per pound was established.

The news of peace with China immediately gave a stimulus to trade in the manufacturing districts. It was received at Liverpool with firing of guns and ringing of bells; and the cotton-market at once assumed a brisker appearance. In Manchester prices of goods suited to the Eastern markets were raised; and as the stocks of goods and yarns are now low, every impulse tells strongly. On receipt of Sir J. Graham's letter to the Lord Justice Clerk, the guns of Edinburgh Castle fired a salute, and the city bells were rung by order of the Lord Provost and Magistrates; and in Dublin the victories obtained in India and China were hailed by the entire garrison assembling in the Phœnix-park, and firing a feu-de-joie.

At a meeting of the corporation of Dublin, Town-councillor Synes moved a resolution to the effect, that the freedom of the city be conferred on Sir R. Sale, Gen. Nott, Gen. Pollock, and Lieut. Cuddy, 55th Regt. The resolution being seconded, a gallant town-councillor (Mr. Fitzpatrick) begged to move that a like honour be conferred on the heroic Lady Sale. It appears there was a precedent in case, a similar distinction having been conferred on the daughter of Alderman Nugent during the old regime. Owing, however, to an informality in the shaping of the motions, and there being some doubts whether the right of granting the freedom by "grace especial" still existed in the new corporation, the subject was deferred till the next day of assembly.

The highly satisfactory and glorious news from China and India seems to have awakened, if it ever slept, the rancour of the Paris press against this country. With one exception, which it is almost superfluous to name (the Journal des Débats), the papers before us are filled with the most violent, and in fact ridiculous tirades against "the English," for the manner in which the Chinese war had been conducted, and upon the grasping policy in which it had originated.

The Rev. Thomas Robinson, M. A., Lord Almoner's professor of Arabic in the University of Cambridge, and late Archdeacon of Madras, has been elected morning preacher at the Foundling Hospital.

At a Court of Directors held at the East India House, on the 30th Nov., Lestock Robert Reid, Esq., was appointed a Provisional Member of Council at Bombay.

The East India Company have granted a pension of 80*l.* a-year between the four daughters of the late Col. Dennie; this is in addition to the pension given to the same ladies by the Crown.

The iron steamer, building by order of the East India Company for the use of the Bengal pilot service, is to be launched in a few days.

On the night of the 11th Nov., the Reliance, 1500 tons, Captain T. Green, bound from China to London, went to pieces on the coast of Merlement, near Boulogne, when 115 out of a crew of 122 persons perished. The carpenter, three Europeans, and three native seamen were saved.

The Liverpool Standard says on the authority of a letter from Poonah, that the murderer of Lord Norbury has been discovered and arrested at that place in the person of a private soldier in the East India Company's artillery, who eased his conscience by confessing his crime.

The shareholders of the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Company held their meeting on the 30th Nov. at which a dividend of 3½ per cent. for the last six months, or at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum, was declared. The directors in their report, a luminous and well-digested document, congratulate their constituency on being enabled, by the steady increase of the traffic of the company, to maintain the rate of dividend they had before paid, and this at a period when all other establishments of a similar character have complained of a diminution of receipts from the unsatisfactory condition of commerce. The company's fleet is represented to be so complete, including the new iron steamship, The Pasha that for the future there will, it is hoped, be no necessity for the assistance of chartered vessels to carry on the service; while at the same time it is observed, that in order to give the property of the shareholders sufficient protection, the directors have availed themselves of their discretionary power to increase the insurance to 230,000*l.*, which is the amount the vessels are now covered for 1842 and 1843. In order to facilitate the transit through Egypt, a distance of 25 miles, the directors had placed two efficient steam boats on the Nile, with two iron baggage-boats and two packet-boats on the Mamoudie Canal, and the Pacha of Egypt had afforded the company every facility for prosecuting their operations.

Intelligence from India, Bombay the 1st Nov. reached London by express from Paris, on the afternoon of the 3d Dec. Particulars of the news appear in the papers of this day.

The Court has returned to Windsor from Walmer Castle. The Queen has completely recovered from the slight indisposition by which she was affected the last few days of her sojourn at the coast.

The Queen has been pleased to direct letters patent to be passed under the Great Seal, granting the dignity of Baronet of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland unto Lieutenant General Sir Hugh Gough, G. C. B., and to the heirs male of his body lawfully begotten.

The Queen has been graciously pleased to nominate and appoint Vice-Admiral Sir William Parker, Knight Commander of the Most Hon. Military Order of the Bath, to be a Knight Grand Cross thereof.

Her Majesty has also been pleased to nominate and appoint Major-General Sir Henry Pottinger, Bart. to be a Knight Grand Cross of the said Most Hon. Order.

Her Majesty has further been pleased to nominate and appoint Major-General George Pollock, Companion of the said Most Hon. Military Order, and Major-General William Nott, of the East India Company's Service, to be Knights Grand Cross of the same Order.

The Countess of Munster expired on the 3d inst.—The deanery of Dromore has been conferred on the Rev. J. Mahon.

We understand that 15,000 yards of the military riband of India have been ordered in this country.

The point of greatest interest involved in the case of Capt. Douglas, 49th M. N. I., namely, whether or not under the circumstances he could be legally held to be a deserter, has not been decided; for though he has been discharged by the Court of Queen's Bench, it was solely in consequence of an informality in the warrant, it not stating as it should have done, that at the time of commitment he was a person "who ought to be present with his regiment." Captain Douglas is at present in custody in default of bail (himself in 20,000*l*. and four sureties in 2500*l*. each) upon an ex-officio information charging him with a misdemeanor in having received certain bribes while resident at Tanjore. We believe the only case tried under the Act which constitutes this offence, 33 G. III. chap. 52, is Rex v. Blacke, where the defendant was charged with having received 10,000*l*. In that case the defendant was found guilty, and sentenced to pay a fine to the Crown of 5000*l*. and be imprisoned for two years. The very conviction involved the forfeiture of the 10,000*l*. charged in the indictment, which of course was an additional penalty.

The triumph in China has caused one of the hottest of newspaper controversies, it being claimed by the press of both "the great parties in the State." The Conservatives impute it to the energy of the Tories; at which the Whigs are shocked, since they say, the Tories had done nothing in the matter. Thereupon the Times publishes a long list of ships sent out by the new Ministers with reinforcements. The Chronicle thinks that they were not all sent out by the new Ministers; one of them, "for instance" was sent out so soon after the present Ministers came into power, that it must have been despatched by the present Board "before they had well settled into their places." The Globe roundly declares that the far greater portion of the ships were on their way to China before the late Government was displaced. The Times rejoins, that the orders for sending out every one of them are in the hand writing of a member of the present Board of Admiralty. Moreover, in June, 1841, the Whigs asked a vote of no more than 400,000*l*., for the whole year, on account of the Chinese war; indicating no intention of making any great effort: in September the Conservatives obtained 800,000*l*. more. The Whigs, however, remember that their party appointed the successful commanders; the Tories, that Lord Ellenborough recommended the occupation of the Yang-tse-Kiang at its crossing the Grand Canal; the Whigs, that the commanders had already determined on that stroke before they had received Lord Ellenborough's suggestion.

DEC. 6.—In the course of yesterday notice was issued of the postponement of the Mail, for India via Marseilles. Letters and papers from India by the Mail from Bombay of 1st Nov. were received in London via Marseilles this morning. Some idea may be formed of the exertions that are made to facilitate the receipt of Indian intelligence in this country from what occurred with reference to the Times express conveying the important news of peace with China. On reaching Boulogne it was found that the regular packet had sailed, that no steamer was to be obtained, and that as it was, strange to say, a complete calm, no sailing-boat could leave the harbour. Under these circumstances the courier took advantage of the only available means of transit. With eight stout rowers he crossed the English Channel in an open boat, reaching Dover in nine hours.

H. M. Ship Formidable, 90, which proceeded from Gibraltar to Barcelona, in order to protect British interests during the late revolt, is reported to have struck on a sand-bank at the mouth of the Lobregat, and become a total wreck.

The Morning Chronicle remarks:—"Well—we suppose Lord Ellenborough's friends will now at least not attempt to deny that he ordered the evacuation of Affghanistan, before he was aware of the release of the prisoners. For ourselves, we did not require what we now have—his own assurance of the fact. We knew the man; we knew what he had done before; we knew that it was General Pollock's refusal to obey the order given in March to retreat that led to the advance upon Cabul; and, therefore, when we saw Lord Ellenborough's proclamation of the 1st of October, in which not a word was said of the release of the prisoners, we saw in it only a repetition of the same cowardly command to leave the men, women and children to their fate. Our statement was of course met by violent and indignant denial. The thing was impossible: the very object of the campaign was to release the prisoners; how absurd, then, to suppose that Lord Ellenborough would announce the campaign as closed, and order home the troops until he was aware that that object was accomplished. However, we suppose Lord Ellenborough will not be rejected as evidence on this point.—London Mail.

CONTEMPORARY SELECTIONS.

PROGRAMME OF THE TWELFTH ANNUAL EXAMINATION OF THE PUPILS ATTENDING THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY'S INSTITUTION, 1843.

The last session opened with about 800 pupils. This number gradually increased to upwards of 900. There are registers kept for every class in which the names of the pupils, the dates of their admission or removal, the designations of their fathers or guardians, as well as their places of residence are accurately marked. The regular class lists, in which the lateness, the absence or presence, and the daily position of each boy in the class are noted, have, as usual, been renewed every month. From each list thus renewed the name of every boy, for whose absence, during the preceding month, a satisfactory account has not been rendered, is invariably struck out. The class registers, regularly subjected to this rigorous monthly scrutiny, furnish a sure criterion of the actual number of bonâ fide pupils. From sickness and a variety of other causes, the number in actual daily attendance will always be considerably less than that exhibited by the corrected registers. Special care has been taken during the last session to ascertain the exact amount of actual daily attendance. That amount indicates that, with the exception of the principal Hindoo holidays, such as the Charak and the Doorga poojas, which alone affect the attendance in any material degree, the average absenteeism from the causes already specified is somewhat more than a fourth, but considerably less than a third, of the total number. Thus, in the months of March and December last, which are, ordinarily, healthy and little interrupted by Native holidays, the different numbers were respectively as follow:—

| | Total No. in the Register. | Average of the Daily Actual Attendance. |
| March, | 791 | 528 |
| December, | 924 | 675 |

The drainage on certain classes in the College Department has, during the last session, been unusually great—the number diminishing from 60 to 41. Some have withdrawn solely from necessitous circumstances; and others, to occupy important situations.

The system of comprehensive instruction which has been vigorously pursued in both the School and the College Departments of the Institution will best appear from the subjoined tabular representation. Every one of the subjects therein specified has been fairly mastered and repeatedly revised; and on any one of them the scholars and students are, at any time, liable to be examined, without any preparation or forewarning. Opportunities for such examination constantly occur at the Institution itself. On Saturdays in particular, throughout the cold season, parties of visitors are usually present who inspect and examine, more or less, the whole of the classes from the lowest in the School Department to the highest in the College Department. And it is proper to remark, that, if any friends of native improvement really desire to become acquainted with the practical working of the educational system pursued, such acquaintance can only be obtained by a personal visit to the Institution itself when in full operation.

A suitable number of prizes for general eminence is given in every class, as well as one in each class for the most regular attendance and general good conduct. Besides these, the following special prizes, have been proposed and competed for.

I. The MacFarlan Gold Medal for the best general scholar in the Institution, determined by competition on the following subjects:—

Bible, Christian Theology, Evidences of Christianity, Bengalee New Testament, Greek New Testament, Milton, Mental and Moral Philosophy, Political Economy, Logic, Rhetoric, Bacon's Essays, History, Optics, Astronomy, Steam Engine and Pneumatics, Chemistry, Normal Teaching, Solid Geometry, Spherical Trigonometry, Conic Sections, Plane Trigonometry and its application to heights and distances, Mensuration of Surfaces, Land Surveying, Mensuration of the Circle, Calculation of Trigonometrical Lines, Simple, Quadratic and Cubic Equations, Arithmetic of Surds, Binomial Theorem and its applications, Theory of Logarithms and their application to Compound Interest and Annuities, Analytical Geometry, Analytical Trigonometry and Fluxions.

The medal has been awarded to the competitor who furnished extemporaneously the most correct written answers to questions on the various subjects above mentioned. The competition occupied four entire days.

The MacFarlan Medal was gained, after a competition of four days, by Banamali De. Second Prizes were awarded to the second best competitors, from the several College Classes from a fund placed at the disposal of the Missionaries by J. F. M. Reid, Esq. The second prize in the 4th year's class was awarded to Bipin Behari Shom; that in the 3d year's class to Iswar Chandra Nandi and Lal Behari De; that in the 2d year's class to Gopaul Chandra Dass, and Jagadishwar Bhottacharjya; that in the 1st year's class to Prasanna Kumar Chatterja and Frederic D'Rozario.

II. Prizes offered by Charles Deaic, Esq.

1st. Seventy Rupees for the best exposure, and

2d. Thirty Rupees for the second best exposure of the "fallacies involved in the definitions and axioms which constitute the basis of the celebrated Pantheistic system of Spinoza."

Five Essays were given in; all of which, in different degrees, possessed great merit and exhibited no ordinary acuteness in the discussion of a profound and difficult subject.

On account of the superior character of three of the essays, the prize was divided into three portions. Dinonath Das gained the 1st, Banamali De the 2d, and Bipin Behari Shom the 3d.

III. Prizes offered by the Rev. Dr. Charles, to the students of the Junior College Classes.

1st. Thirty Rupees for the best Essay.

2d. Twenty Rupees for the second best Essay, "on the systems of Christianity and Hinduism contrasted, in regard to the account which they give of the nature, attributes and government of God, and the precepts of morality as well as in regard to the practical influence which these systems are calculated to exert on the intellectual and moral character of their votaries."

Several Essays were given in: some of which displayed great accuracy, clearness, and fulness of research.

These prizes were gained by two well written essays: the 1st was awarded to Ishwar Chandra Nandi, the 2d to Lal Behari De.

IV. A Prize offered by Edward L. Stirling, Esq.

Twenty-five Rupees,

To the greatest proficient in Mathematical and General Science.

This was adjudged by competition in the same way as the MacFarlan Medal.

This prize was gained by Banamali De and Gopal C. Das.

V. A Prize for the best Essay in Bengalee on Female Education.

Several Essays were given in of considerable merit, both as to matter and style.

This prize was gained by Naba Kumar Chakrabartti, and Suresh Chandra Roy.

VI. A Prize for the best translation from English into Bengalee of passages specially selected.

The prize for Bengali translation was gained by Naba Kumar Chakrabartti. That for Urdu by Ishwar Chandra Nandi.

Also, a Prize for the best translation from English into Hindoostanee of passages specially selected.

Both of these prizes were determined by extemporaneous competition.

VII. Captain Paton's Prize.

Twenty-five Rupees,

To the greatest proficient in the knowledge of Scripture Doctrines with References.

This was awarded to the best out of fourteen competitors from the College Classes.

This prize was gained by Prasanna Kumar Chatterjya, in whose written answers there was not one single mistake. Dinanath Das, Shiba Chandra Basak, Gopal Chandra Das and Jadab Chandra Sirkar were thought deserving of second prizes.

The examination commenced about ½ past 9,

A. M. and continued with intermission until about 2 P. M. when the prizes were distributed by Dr. Charles. The number of European Spectators was numerous—that of Native Spectators very numerous and not a little noisy, now and then. Portions of the three successful Essays given in for Mr. Dearie's prize were read on the day of examination; as also portions of the Essays which gained Dr. Charles's prizes. The Bengali Essay on Female education was also read.

SCHOOL DEPARTMENT.

Total number at the beginning of the Session, 722; total number at present 883.

Second Class.—No. of boys 28.

New Testament, Four Gospels, whole; and Acts, whole.
Companion to the Bible, part 2d.
McCulloch's Course of Reading—Natural History, whole.
History—Brief Survey, both vols. I. and II. whole.
History of India, 94 pp.—Grammar, whole.
Use of the Globes from Keith, Def. all; and 30 Prob.
Geometry, 1st and 2nd Books of Euclid; Algebra, whole.
Arithmetic, Vulgar and Decimal Fractions.
Bengalee, Hitopadesh, 140 pp.; Anka-pustak.

First Class.—No. of boys 25.

New Testament, Four Gospels, whole; and Acts, whole.
Evidences of Christianity—Horne's Manual, whole.
McCulloch's Course of Reading, nearly whole.
History of England, to the Reign of Elizabeth.
History of India, whole.—Arithmetic, a complete course.
Use of the Globes, from Keith, 40 Prob.
Geometry, first 3 Books of Euclid; and 12 Prob. of 6th Book.
Algebra, Simple Equation, 3.
Bengalee, Hitopadesh, 160 pp. with exercises.

COLLEGE DEPARTMENT.

Bible—the whole of the Pentateuch, and Joshua.
Scriptural Doctrines, with textual proofs.
Evidences of Christianity, (Horne's Manual,) whole.
History—Goldsmith's England, to the reign of George III.
Political Economy, (Clift's) whole; Poetical Instructor, 141 pp.
Geometry, Application of Trigonometry to Mensuration of Heights and Distances, Mensuration of Surfaces, Levelling, and Land Surveying.
Algebra, Quadratic Equations, Surds, Arithmetical and Geometrical Proportion and Progression. Pneumatics; Principles of Normal Teaching.
Bengalee, Hitopadesh (Mitra-lábh;) Grammar and Translation.

Bible—from Genesis to 2nd Kings, four Gospels and Acts.
Scriptural Doctrines, with textual proofs.
Lectures on Theology.—Christianity and Hinduism Contrasted, (Mundy's,) 2 vols.
Reformation of the Sixteenth Century, Part of, (D'Aubigne's.)
Poetry—Milton's Paradise Lost, first four Books.
History—Robertson's Charles 5th, 250 pp.
Logic, (Leechman's,) whole.
Geometry—Trigonometry, Application of Trigonometry to Mensuration of Heights and Distances; Mensuration of Surfaces, Levelling, Land Surveying, Mensuration of the Circle, Solid Geometry, 1st Book, whole; and part of the Second.
Algebra, Quadratic Equations, Surds, Arithmetical and Geometrical Progression, Binomial and Exponential Theorem.
Astronomy (Milne's), whole; Elements of Mechanics, (Lardner's.)
Chemistry—Organic and Inorganic.—Principles of Normal Teaching.
Bengalee—Hitopadesh; Grammar; Translation, and Dictation.
Hindoostanee—Sketch of the Solar System, Injil and Moral Aphorisms, &c. &c.

Bible—all the Historical parts, with portions of the other parts.
Church History, (Barth's,) the whole.
Scriptural Doctrines, with textual proofs.
Christianity and Hindooism Contrasted, (Mundy's,) 2 vols.
Reformation of the Sixteenth Century, Part of, (D'Aubigne's.)
Transmission of Ancient Books, (Taylor's,) the whole.
Poetry—Milton's Paradise Lost, first four Books.
Bacon's Essays—nearly the whole.
Mental and Moral Philosophy, (Dr. Abercombie's) 2 vols.
Logic, and Rhetoric, (Dr. Whately's,) the whole.
Mathematics—Solid Geometry, Spherical Geometry and Trigonometry, Orthographic, Perpendicular and Stereographic Projections, Perspective. Conic Sections— Parabola and Ellipse.
Algebra—Binomial Theorem, Surds, Logarithms and their application to Compound Interest and Annuities, Imaginary Quantities, Exponential Theorems.
Cardan's formula for the solution of Cubic Equations. Series—the Differential Method.
Steam Engine. Chemistry—Organic and Inorganic.
Physical and Practical Astronomy; Use of Instruments; Principles of Teaching.
Bengalee—Hitopadesh—first part; Grammar, Translation and Dictation.
Hindoostanee—Gulisthan; a sketch of the Solar System; Pandanama and Moral Aphorisms. &c. &c. &c.

BRANCHES OF STUDY.—Have finished all the preceding branches of study, together with nearly the whole of the Bible, Krummacher's Elijah, portions of the Greek New Testament, and Greek Grammar. History of Metaphysics in the Encyclopedia Metropolitana. Part of Plato's Dialogues. Campbell's Pleasures of Hope. Optics—Practical Astronomy—Analytical Geometry and Trigonometry, and the Direct and Inverse Method of Fluxions. In Bengalee, Yates' revised Hitopadesh, Grammar, and Translation. A tract on Temperance, translated as an exercise by this class, has been published by the Calcutta Temperance Society.

NOTIFICATION BY THE RIGHT HONORABLE THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL OF INDIA.

Camp Ferozepore, Dec. 31, 1842.—This day the troops which have returned from Caubul, and the Army of Reserve, were reviewed by His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief.

The whole force afterwards passed in column before the Governor-General.

The Governor-General was accompanied by the Koonwur Pertab Singh, son of the Maharajah of Lahore, the Rajah Dhian Singh, the Minister of Lahore, and the other chiefs of the Punjab, now on a mission from the Maharajah, as well as by the Rajah of Jheend, and other chiefs of the protected Sikh States.

The force reviewed, consisted of nine battalions of European, and 19 battalions of native infantry, (including Broadfoot's Sappers); of 2 regiments of European, and 9 of native cavalry, besides detachments, and of 17 batteries of artillery, comprising 102 guns.

Four battalions of infantry remained in camp.

The regiment of Kelat-i-Ghilzie carried, for the first time, the colours presented to it by the Governor-General, already inscribed with the words, "Kelat-i-Ghilzie," "Candahar," "Ghuznee," and "Caubul," in commemoration of the services which have justly obtained for it the honor of being permanently attached to the Bengal Army.

The troops were all in the finest order, and the horses in good condition for any service.

After the review, the Europeans received double rations; and thirty thousand seers of their favorite mehtoys were distributed to the native regiments.

Major-General Sir Charles Napier lately reviewed the troops, under his command, at Sukkur.

The Major-General has concentrated at that place, and in its immediate vicinity, 12 regiments of infantry, 2 regiments of cavalry, and an ample force of artillery.

One European and 2 native regiments occupy Kurrachee.

Two Steam Vessels transferred from the Euphrates, have been already directed to the Indus, where the flotilla will now comprise six Steam Vessels.

A force of 14,000 men, well composed and amply provided with artillery, to which the Maharajah Scindiah has added from his own army, 3 regiments of Infantry and 1 of cavalry, with guns, which his Highness has placed under the command of a British Officer, will effectually preserve the tranquillity so established in Bundlekund, and extend it to Saugor and the Nerbudda.

In both districts the principal chiefs zealously co-operated with the British Officers in the pursuit of plunderers, and for the apprehension of all who have disturbed the peace of the country.

Two regiments of Europeans and 4 of native infantry, which formed part of the force, lately employed in the operations against China, have been rendered immediately disposable by the conclusion of a peace upon our own terms, of which the Chinese Government evinces every disposition fairly to execute the conditions, and the native regiments are already on their return to India.

By order of the Right Honourable the Governor General of India,

T. H. MADDOCK,
Secretary to the Government of India, with the Governor-General.

CHINA.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM CANTON.

Canton, Dec. 8th, 2 P. M.

"After a night of much anxiety and excitement, I send you a line to say that we are all safe, and the danger apparently over for the present.

Before this reaches you will have heard that a row commenced at 9 or 10 yesterday morning between some lascars and Chinese, which went on increasing through the day, until at night it reached a fearful crisis. We early sent notice to Howqua, but his report, if he made any, was not heeded. The mob increased in numbers and audacity every hour, and by 2 or 3 we could see by the plunder carried by, that Mr. Murrow's factory had been forced. The ladies (English) had already taken refuge at Kingqua's. This scene of plunder and violence went on through the afternoon, a feeble party of the city policy, which came out to restore order, being beaten off the field.

Early in the evening the Anti-English feeling began to show itself in the setting fire to the British flag staff, and the concentration of the mob on the company's factory. Matters getting thus serious, old Mingqua politely sending a chair, the ladies (American) were taken to his factory, whence he kindly promised they should be taken to his family house, in case of necessity. Soon after they had been comfortably placed there, the smoke appeared issuing from the interior of the British hong, and it became evident that the incendiary mob had fired that factory. We were now attended to Mingqua's terrace whence we had a full view of the sad but splendid conflagration. The skylight of Mr. Murrow's house and the chapel belfry shone beautifully for a while, till they sunk in the flames. The verandah still stood firm, but suddenly volumes of smoke poured from every crevice, and soon after the whole roof and architrave was burning furiously. The square all the while was crowded by Chinese who had early thrown down the company's wall and forced sundry passages through the paling of the square. Alarms were from time to time communicated to this immense mass, and they at one moment fled in all directions, and then swayed back again to their former position. Furious cries and shouts were every instant mingled with the crackling of the fire and the crash of the falling ruins. The fire extended slowly back into No. 2, but happily the night was nearly calm, and the slight breeze which the conflagration made veered a little to the eastward: this and the strong west walls of the British hong saved the factories on our side of Suntowlun (Hoglane), but insured the destruction of those eastward. It was evident the Dutch and Creek hongs must go, and our concern for the inmates of the former was increased by the report of a fire arm from that quarter which several times reached us. The fire engines sent to check the flames were driven off, the mob declaring no one should interfere to save the British hong, and when that was down they themselves would help to save the others—This with the eastern factories was impossible; and Mr. Heard and party, after defending their entrance against the thieves for some hours, were forced by the fire to escape by the back passage at about 11 o'clock. Happily they effected this in safety; and soon after the flames running along the verandah, consumed it, and now of those fine porches nothing remains standing but the lower arches and some broken pillars. Of course the Creek hong shared the same fate. While the fire was still intense there, smoke issuing from Mr. Fisher's showed that that also had been doomed to destruction. Some new alarm was felt from this fresh outbreak, but happily the same causes prevented the fire from spreading westward. The assurances of the ring leaders of the mob that they would fire no other factory were now corroborated by the evident exertions going on along the outskirts of the crowd to check the thieving by despoiling the wretches of their plunder. We became less and less apprehensive for the rest of the hongs, and, after keeping the terrace till two or three in the morning lay down on mat couches and got a few broken snatches of sleep. Some of our party (12 in all) sat up till morning. It was on the whole a fearful night, the fire threatening all of us, and the furious mob in full possession of the square, making the removal of anything impossible. In fact, old Mingqua, though kind as possible to us all, the ladies especially, refused to open his gates when we wished to return to our factory.

Towards dawn there was a lull in the popular violence, and it was determined that the ladies and a large escort should take Mingqua's boat, and proceed down to Whampoa, which they accomplished without molestation; the rest of us, after an early breakfast, returned to our factories, which we found quite as we left them. But again, as the morning advanced, the mob collected, resumed full possession of the square, and renewed their work of plunder. They had now evidently found entrance into some not empty treasuries. Ragamuffins were appearing in quick succession laden with dollars. This illgotten booty was, however, seldom left in their quiet possession; every suspected fellow was soon surrounded, seized, and his dollars scattered in the scuffle to be scrambled for by the by-standers; for hours the square was covered by knotted groups of this kind, struggling desperately for a share in the plunder. By and by the police and hong coolies mingled in the affrays, for the purpose of spoiling and punishing the villains. Thus the morning wore away, and no interference came from the government. No doubt the governor passed an anxious night, ready to interfere, but dreading the power of the popular party. In the course of the morning, he learned the true state of the case; that the factories were not all burned, nor the foreigners all murdered, and that the portion of the mob which had the burning of the British hong as its object was satisfied, and that he had only the thieves to contend with; he, therefore, ventured to interfere, and a strong body of soldiers at length appeared at about noon, and cleared the square of the lawless fellows who had been more than 24 hours in possession of it. It was pleasant to sally forth again and we went down to the seat of the conflict, where five dead bodies of Chinese, torn and bloody, showed that some at least had not escaped to run riot again. Numbers of wretches soon came creeping from the burning embers, evidently thieves, yet we saw none apprehended; the officers seemed content to scatter them.

Thus ended this disgraceful affair for the present, for vast crowds are still hanging on the edges of the foreign residences, and new efforts to fire and plunder may be apprehended. We are now putting our moveables on board a chop, and shall go afloat until Sir Henry settles the account with the authorities. An express was sent to him yesterday, and we wait to see whether he will choose to explain away the difficulties of the rowdies, or challenge them to as much fight as they are inclined for. It is clear that either the native or foreign officers must afford protection, or we cannot return to the factories.

The British flag staff was an object of much interest through the evening. It was fired at the base, the flame crept slowly up the staff, which still stood steadfast until the fire reached the cap, there the cross piece detained and increased the flames until the staff burnt through and the topmast slowly toppled down: a loud shout from the mob marked their triumph when it fell.

As to the commencement of the row, the Lascar's fight was merely the exciting occasion; it has been evident to us for some time that a growing discontent was abroad. I hear some have been foolish enough to ascribe the discontent to the arrival of the ladies: it is the working of the popular mind and passions as to the late war,—humbled at the north but not convinced here, nor, perhaps, anywhere. Now, perhaps, the real difficulties of the China question commence.

The leaders of the patriot party lately applied to the governor for arms: he refused; they requested permission to arm themselves: he evaded this petition; they have now tried fire, and in time may command guns."

We have also seen two letters written by an English gentleman, which enables us to compare these too highly respectable sources of intelligence.

The English letters state that the riot began on the forenoon of the 7th inst., with a pretended row between some Chinese and Lascars (it is said a Lascar stole an orange!); the latter were obliged to retreat to the Creek hong. The Chinese then attacked Mr. Murrow's house, where two English ladies resided, breaking the windows and battering the doors, and soon effecting an entrance, being unopposed, they broke to pieces and carried off every thing they could find. The ladies were dressing for dinner when the assault commenced, and were hurried away, without their gowns, in disguise, to Kingwa's hong. At the same time the mob attacked Mr. Heard's factory, but with less fury until they had set the British factory and Mr. Murrow's house on fire; they then attacked Mr. Heard's house in greater force and with increased fury, and every effort was required to prevent their forcible entrance.

With Mr. Heard were his partner, Mr. Dixwell, and Mr. Humpston, Messrs. Jardine, Matheson and Co.'s tea inspector. Mr. Heard and his companions had only two muskets and two pistols, and a very scanty supply of ammunition; thus they were obliged to reserve their fire until required by absolute necessity for their safety.

Repeated applications were made to Howqua, the senior hong merchant, for help, which he at first promised in a few minutes, but it never came.

The mob set fire to Mr. Heard's front or outer door, and broke down the entrance door leading into the passage, but Mr. Heard and his companions prevented them from setting the entrance door on fire by throwing water on it. Here were hundreds of the Chinese mob pulling down the walls, and throwing whole bricks through the windows, opposed only by three or four Americans and Englishmen, armed with two muskets and two pistols, with a little powder and shot!—How easily, then, could the Tartar guard have dispersed them: indeed, the alarms that spread from time to time through the masses, as stated in the above letter, prove they were in dread that their lawless violence would be interrupted by the arrival of troops and the terrors of the law.

The passage of Mr. Heard's house was open to them! but whenever they advanced a ball from the musket laid one of their number on the ground either dead or wounded, and they then retreated. Finding all their attempts to gain an entrance baffled, and excited by disappointment, defeat, and revenge, they set fire to the Creek hong: thus Mr. Heard and his companions had fires on each side, and were driven out of the house by the approaching flames about 12 p. m., and they fortunately succeeded in reaching the Footae hong in safety. On returning the next morning they found Mr. Heard's treasury had been broken into and three lakhs of dollars plundered.—Some boats having arrived from Whampoa, with the assistance of their crews the robbers were driven off the premises, and what they had left of the treasure was removed.

Messrs. Gibb, Livingston and Co.'s factory was also plundered of $40,000.—Canton Register, December 13.

EUROPE.

RELIGIOUS.

THE JUBILEE OF THE BAPTIST MISSION is an occasion on which evangelical Christians of other denominations have "rejoiced with them that do rejoice." For, although the successful efforts of a particular section of the Universal Church furnish the theme of special gratulation, yet they are efforts which, whether their character or their extent be regarded, must equally call forth the devout thankfulness of every section of that Church retaining a just perception of its common obligations to the world at large. A further reason why Christians of other names may well rejoice with their Baptist brethren, is furnished by the facts, that there is no body of British Christians entertaining Scriptural notions of the person and office of the incarnate Son of God, that has not long since practically recognised the duty involved in his "Great Commission," by entering upon the field of missionary labour; and that the LORD of the vineyard has vouchsafed the same reward to such as engaged in the work at periods a little subsequent, as he has bestowed upon those who were almost the first to place themselves in this manner at his disposal. In the numerous Jubilee Meetings which have been held during the last six months, nothing has delighted us so much, as to observe the affectionate manner in which Ministers of various denominations have commingled with their Baptist Brethren, and the cordial terms in which their fraternal sympathies have been reciprocated. It has been remarked, by one who has enjoyed the rare felicity of witnessing the birth of the Baptist Mission, and of becoming the honoured historian of the first half-century of its benevolent career, that, had not the Missionary efforts of other Societies been as successful as those of that to which he belongs, the present, instead of being a year of Jubilee, would have been to him a year of mourning. The sentiment does honour to the speaker; with whom we congratulate our readers of every class, that the fact is the converse of the supposition, and that, inasmuch as the success which has crowned the labours of one branch of the Church is but a sample of the prosperity which has attended all, no one needs mourn, but all may equally rejoice.

The rise and progress of the Baptist Mission is a subject for instructive, as well as delightful contemplation; and we are glad that those who are interested in it, will be aided in their recollection of the facts by Dr. Cox's admirable History. What men they were who founded the Society, and instituted its first operations! As apostolical in their poverty as the Apostles themselves; apostles (to spend a phrase then current) "from the loom and from the anvil;" but, what was best of all, proving their apostolicity by the spirit in which they took up the proper work of the Apostleship, and, with thirteen pounds twelve shillings and sixpence, entered upon the task of "going into all the world, and preaching the Gospel to every creature!" "Attempt great things for God; expect great things from God,"—was the motto which their leader gave them; and nobly did they and he abide by the spirit of the lofty sentiment. Nothing less than a Continent could satisfy their ambition. Wide India was the sphere of their experimental effort; and the Jubilee of their success finds their successors, true to the spirit of their institution, meditating the subjugation of another Continent to the Cross of Christ. The world may deem this Quixotic; but it is the true heroism. The great things to be attempted, were for God; and the great things to be expected, were from God. Herein lay the reason why it was ridiculous to ridicule an enterprise, in which the means and the end appeared so hopelessly unequal. The vindication of the Careys and the Fullers was then to be sought in the spirit in which they began the enterprise,—in their entire distrust of themselves, in their simple obedience to the Divine Command, in their implicit dependence upon the Spirit of God, and in the faith and the urgency with which they never failed to pray for His blessing upon their plans and exertions. Their vindication now is in the results. They attempted great things for God, and they expected great things from God; and they have not been disappointed. The greatness of their aims is faithfully reflected in the greatness of their success; which, looking only at the material means employed, is wholly inexplicable, but plain enough to those who have observed and can appreciate the spirit in which the work was originated and has been carried on. The extent to which the labours of Carey and his associates have benefited the social, moral, literary, and scientific interests of the untold millions of the East, is too vast to be estimated; although some notion may be formed of it, when we remember their various achievements by means of the Printing Press, and in promoting, as they mainly did, the abolition of Suttee and Infanticide. But these are the smallest advantages which they have conferred upon that vast Continent, and may be regarded as trifles in comparison of the infinite good which must accrue from their stupendous and blessed labours in the translation of the Word of God into the difficult dialects of those countless nations. Nor are the more recent exertions of their Brethren in the West unworthy of being associated in celebration with those of the Careys and the Marshmans in the East. For who can hear of the Jubilee of the Baptist Mission, without remembering how large a share its agents had in striking off the fetters of the negro, and in giving, at the same time, civil liberty and spiritual freedom to little less than a million of their sable fellow-subjects? Nor do we doubt, that, if the spirit of the fathers continue to inspire their sons,—if they continue to make large attempts, and to cherish large expectations, remembering, all the while, to found those attempts and those expectations upon the Divine glory and the Divine blessing, their success in Africa will be as illustrious as it has been in India, and the benefits conferred upon her aboriginal inhabitants as glorious and extensive as those which have been dispensed among her exiled sons.

There is one feature in the history of the Baptist Mission, which it may be useful at the present juncture to call up to special view. We refer to the anti-sectarian spirit of its Founders, and to the response which that spirit uniformly met from Christians of other denominations. Those who are familiar with the facts will remember how entirely free from a mere Baptist feeling, those honoured men showed themselves to be in their plans and projects. They had imbibed the true and pure missionary spirit, which seeks only the diffusion of the Gospel without thinking of party benefit or honour. So much was this the case, that any one really engaged in Christian Missions was as welcome to participate in their little funds, as those of their own persuasion who by and by presented themselves as candidates for the honourable work. The Moravians, for example early shared in their small but cordial bounty. True liberality never loses its reward; and, so much was that of the Fullers and the Rylands appreciated throughout the United Kingdoms, that never was a Missionary Society instituted by one denomination, so freely or so largely sustained by the liberality of others, as the Baptist by members of Pædo-baptist churches. Right glad were we to hear the frank and generous terms in which this fact was acknowledged by the Rev. John Aldis, in his splendid speech at Exeter Hall. Nothing could have been better timed; and we unfeignedly believe that he spoke the voice of the great body of his brethren. We fervently trust, that the admirable spirit which has pervaded these Jubilee services will not only prove auspicious to the interests of the Body more immediately concerned, but will tend also, along with other synchronic influences,—such, for example, as Mr. James' call to union,—to put an end to all interdenominational jealousies and misunderstandings, and to unite all evangelical Christians in the bonds of that brotherhood, without the visible exhibition of which, as we are taught by Christ himself, our missionary exertions cannot receive the crown of complete success. As the Jubilee of the Baptist Mission has happily witnessed the perfect healing of that unhappy division which once threatened sore disaster to its most important interests, may its Centenary be long anticipated by the entire removal of every cause and symptom of difference among the various branches of Missionary agency, and the year Eighteen Hundred and Ninety-two be observed by the coming generation of all our churches, not as the Centenary of this or the other Society, so much as the Centenary of the year in which the Christians of England woke to the duty of attempting the conversion of the world.

But we hope we shall not have to wait another half-century before the churches are again called upon to sound the trumpet of Missionary Jubilee. That noble institution, the London Missionary Society, has nearly completed the tenth decade of its existence. Although it owed its birth to the Baptist Society, it has in some respects outstripped it in its career; and, in some aspects of its achievements, might tempt a partial admirer to the pardonable exclamation, O matre pulchrâ filia pulchrior! But we discard all invidious comparisons. The two Institutions were brought into being by one common impulse; or, if there be a question of parentage between them, the nearness of their ages may remind us of one of those phenomena in real life, in which relationship in different degrees is reduced, in sympathy as well as seeming, to that equality of circumstances which results in the delightful associations of a sisterly companionship. But to come to the point. If there be any truth in either of these views, we may be permitted to anticipate the celebration of the Jubilee of the London Missionary Society. Our Wesleyan friends allowed the first half-century of their existence to pass away without any celebration, preferring, it would seem, to wait the completion of a century before they took a jubilant review of their useful career. We trust our friends in Bloomfield-street will follow the example of their Baptist brethren. Assuredly, they need wait no longer for matter of adequate rejoicing. If the Baptist Missionaries have been distinguished by their indomitable perseverance, those of the London Society have been equally remarkable for their untiring activity. What the former have accomplished in the way of translation for one-half of Asia, India, that have the latter effected for the other half of that continent, China; in the abolition of slavery, the successes of the one at the Cape, correspond to those of the other in Jamaica; while, if these can reckon by tens of thousands their converts in the Islands of the Atlantic, those can keep pace with them in the Islands of the Pacific. But that which distinguishes the London Missionary Society above all kindred contemporary institutions, is the far-reaching hand with which it has scattered the seeds of Christian civilization. Its voyagers and travellers have traversed more seas, and penetrated far deeper into the wilds of barbarism, than any other messengers of truth and mercy; and, in Missionary Literature, its trophies are without a parallel in number, splendour, and importance. These are our honest convictions; and we doubt not, that, when the Jubilee of the London Missionary Society is celebrated, we shall have to record it as the universal acclaim, not only of its own adherents, but of the whole Missionary Republic, "Many daughters have done virtuously, but thou excellest them all!"

HYMN FOR THE MISSIONARY JUBILEE.

BY JAMES MONTGOMERY.

O be joyful, every nation!
Hail the day with sacred mirth,
When the trumpet of salvation
Sounds the Jubilee of earth,
And creation
Travails with the world's new birth.

Then the north in darkness shrouded,
Jacob's rising star shall bless;
And the eastern morn, unclouded,
Bring the Sun of Righteousness,
Cheering, healing
Sin-sick souls in heart's distress.

Then her swarthy sons and daughters,
Afric to the Cross shall bring;
And the angel of the waters
Hear the coral islands sing
"Hallelujah!"
Till the whole Pacific ring.

O thou everlasting Father,
Give the kingdom to thy Son!
He that died that he might gather
All God's children into one;
For the travail
Of his soul, let this be done.

Yes, it must be; Thou hast spoken,
And thy covenant shall last;
Though the arch of heaven were broken,
And the earth's foundations cast
Down the abysses,
Yet thy word, O God! stands fast.

On thy holy hill of Zion,
Hast thou not ordain'd his seat?
Now, as Judah's conquering lion,
Lay all foes beneath his feet,
Till his armies
In eternal triumph meet.

We have joined their marching legions;
Where our fathers fought, we fight;
Slavery's cane-lands, Brahma's regions,
Are exulting at the sight;
Freedom, freedom
Comes with Gospel life and light!

All the languages of Babel
Weapons for this warfare yield;
And with thee we well are able,
By the Spirit's aid, to wield,
In the battle,
Truth's sharp sword and faith's strong shield.

Thus through fifty years victorious,
Thou hast led our brethren on;
Arm them now for deeds more glorious,
Till the latest field is won;
And all people,
Bow the knee and kiss the Son.—Pat.

MISCELLANEOUS.

STATUE OF THE LATE DUKE OF GORDON.—We understand that Mr. Campbell, of London, the distinguished sculptor to whom the execution of this work was confided, has just paid a visit to this city, for the purpose of giving this most successful achievement of his talents and skill those finishing touches which no hand save that of the artist can effectively impart. The statue, which is of Aberdeen granite, is ten feet in height, and will be placed on a pedestal of equal elevation. His Grace is represented in military costume, leaning on his sword, and with one foot resting on a piece of ordnance. Around his shoulders is thrown a cloak, the folds of which are managed in the most graceful and effective style. The likeness of the lamented Duke has been preserved with singular fidelity; and every, the minutest, detail is given with extraordinary freedom and truth. This, we believe, is the first statue that has been executed in granite, in modern times. The experiment was, of course, rather hazardous, but it has been attended with complete success.—Aberdeen Paper.

LORD MORPETH AND THE AMERICANS.—It is said that Lord Morpeth is preparing his observations on the Americans for the press. The opinions of so distinguished a statesman, so honest a politician, and so good a man, with regard to the Americans and their institutions, would be particularly useful at this period. All classes of politicians would look with anxiety, and be prepared to receive with reverence, his lordship's opinion with regard to the working of the ballot and "the man suffrage" in America—points that will inevitably be brought forward and discussed in the next session of Parliament.—Sheffield Iris.

THE DUCHESS OF SUTHERLAND, in order to co-operate with the Noble Duke in his efforts to extend education on His Grace's vast estates in Scotland, has given direction that the various schoolmasters should be sent to Edinburgh at her expense, for the purpose of being instructed in the system of education adopted at the Normal Schools there.—Pat.

THE COURT.—The two foreign "creatures" of King Leopold left in the family circle of the Court of St. James's—the Baroness Lehzen and Baron Stockmar—have left in what may be called disgrace. On this subject, I possess some very curious information, but the time to reveal it has not yet arrived.—Hants Independent.

RE-OPENING OF ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL.—This splendid edifice, which has been closed to the public since July last, is now reopened for Divine Service. During the time it has been closed, the interior, which had become in a most dirty state, from the effects of the carbonic atmosphere and dust, has undergone a thorough cleansing. The choir, which is constructed of solid old English oak, has been well scrubbed and newly varnished, and the drapery of the pulpit and the seats renewed. Many of the monuments had become nearly covered with soot, so as to prevent the public distinguishing the beauty of the sculptor's talent. They have been so well cleansed, that they have the appearance of just coming from the statuary's. The whispering gallery, the interior of the dome, and the magnificent bassi relievi are now seen to the greatest advantage, which previously presented but one mass of dust and black. The fine columns now have the appearance of their masterly architecture, which had been for years lost to the view. The whole of the centre and the aisle, which had been enclosed with bars, is thrown open to the public gratis during Divine Service, from 10 to 12 A. M., and 2 till 4 P. M. A notice has been put up, requesting visitors not to write their names on the monuments, or otherwise deface them, under penalty of the severest punishment the law can inflict against Vandalism. Great complaints are made that the charge of 2d. entrance is exacted at the door, except during service.—Pat.

HOBHOUSE AND CO'S (BATH) BANKRUPTCY.—Saturday's Bath Herald states, that meetings of the creditors of the separate estates of Mr. H. W. Hobhouse and Mr. Phillott were held at the White Hart, in that city, on Saturday and Wednesday; when the Commissioners declared a dividend of 20s. in the pound under each estate. After these dividends are paid, a handsome surplus will be left for the benefit of the creditors of the joint estate. We are informed, however, that the creditors under Mr. Lowder's separate estate are not likely to receive more than a moiety of their claims, several of the charitable Societies for which Mr. Lowder was treasurer having proved against his private estate, in the not unfounded hope of thus securing a larger dividend than from the estate of the late firm. We are happy to add, that the Victoria Park Committee, the whole of the Bath and Wells Diocesan Societies, and some other charitable Institutions, will be paid in full, having proved against the separate estates of both Phillott and Lowder, and thus been enabled to make their election.—Record.

EBENEZER ELLIOTT AND THE CHARTISTS.—The following is a letter from Ebenezer Elliott, of Sheffield, the author of the Corn-law Rhymes, to the Chartists of Dunfermline:—"Sirs,—Your letter of the 24th of August last reached me this day in my fortnightly parcel from Sheffield. You ask me 'if cessation from labour would be useful as a means of procuring the Charter?' Can any man, in his senses, seriously put such a question to any man out of Bedlam? Universal cessation from labour is revolution; but it is necessarily involuntary—hence its unresistible force. You could not command it if you were mad enough to try; and voluntary cessation from labour being necessarily partial, would leave you further from your object than you are, if it is an honest one; for the less you labour the less you will have; and the less you have, the less able you will be to contend with your cunning and merciless foes. The idea of obtaining the Charter by refusing to labour, is about as wise as the plan of T. C. Salt, of Birmingham, to procure it by abstaining from the use of tea and coffee, for which there are no substitutes in bread-taxed England; or as that of the O'Connorites, to destroy class-legislation by supporting the food-tax, its main bulwark! If your oppressors care one straw for any number of such strategists, they are as senseless as yourselves; for your strike has taught them, if they knew not before, that it is easier to cut down square miles of you, than to mow an equal breadth of oats. The bread taxers, I suspect, originated your strike; and from the way in which you use the name of Sturge, I suspect you too, of treachery to the people. Surely, in bread-taxed Britain, the manufactories are likely to stop quite soon enough of themselves. When they so stop, the conservators of wrong will have to deal, not with the mob refusing inadequate wages, but with a mob necessarily rioting everywhere at the same moment because wages cannot be obtained at all. Then will come the beginning, of which not one in three of you or them will see the end; and if such a result would please you, you are as base and blind as they; for though a people universally unemployed is necessarily a nation revolutionised, it by no means follows that the Charter would be obtained through revolution. The first French revolution terminated in total non-representation; and the second, in a constituency of two hundred thousand, out of a population of thirty-two millions.—I am, Sirs, your oppressed fellow-countryman, EBENEZER ELLIOTT.—Hargit-hill, Sept. 11, 1842."—Record.

LIVE GEESE FROM NORWAY.—Amongst the novel imports under the new Tariff, there was this week an importation of 137 live geese from Norway. They were quickly disposed of at 3s 6d. each.—Pat.

THE MORMONS IN IRELAND.—The Ulster Times states, that some of those wretched fanatics have made their way into the northern province, and that they have succeeded in obtaining some dupes, especially in the inland towns of the County of Down.—Ibid.

FRANCE.—A great many new consuls have been named of late years by French Governments, and especially by M. Guizot. The greater part of these nominations are evidently for political, not commercial purposes: and the French Consuls at Mosul and Bagdad have ever had recourse to religious propagandism, in order to extend the influence of their country and Government.

French consular agents are obliged to have a political education. They go through the French Foreign-office, where they spend at least two years as clerks; and thus initiated in the mysteries of French politics and imbued with the diplomatic spirit, they are sent upon their mission.

Our choice of consular agents is known to be directly the reverse. We look upon their duties as almost altogether commercial, and the selection is generally confined to officers, especially those who have served in the navy. Hospitality and kindly feeling to navigators and travellers of all countries are generally the characteristics of the British consul. But if the French persevere in their present system, we must, perhaps, follow their example, and select agents of the bull-dog species, to bluster and to quarrel, and to put forth such absurd and arrogant pretensions as Messrs. Loeve, Weimar and Co.

We regret to observe by an article in the National that extreme distress presses at this moment on the trading classes of the French capital. The Journal states, that during the first 8 days of the present month more than 60 sales, under decrees issued from the Courts of Law had taken place in Paris amongst the commercial classes. "In this avalanche of commercial disasters," says the National, "is comprised the celebrated Cafe Anglais, one of the oldest and most celebrated establishments of the Metropolis. The extensive as well as small establishments fall. Affairs in general are under the influence of an alarming crisis. Every day are seen new shops closed on account of bankruptcy, particularly in the fashionable quarters." —Pat.

PORTUGAL.—We have advices from Lisbon to the 3rd inst. The guarantees (analogous to our Habeas Corpus Act) had been suspended in the district of Marvao, public tranquillity was entirely restored, and the arms and accoutrements of the thirty rebellious soldiers had been given up on the frontier by the Spanish authorities.

Assassination was rife in Portugal, and the life of Costa Cabral was said to be threatened. The administration of justice was altogether deserving of contempt.

The accounts speak of the active exertions of the Papal Internuncio, M. Cappacini, and the religious intrigues which are now rife in Lisbon.—Ibid.

A COMET.—The National announces that M. Laugier, a young astronomer attached to the Observatory of Paris, discovered, about seven o'clock in the evening of the 28th ult., the existence in the constellation Dragon of a comet, extremely weak, and without the appearance of a tail. At ten minutes past ten o'clock, Paris time, the right ascension of this star was 16 hours 51 minutes, and the boreal declension 68 degrees 44 minutes. The right ascension increased in 6 hours by 3 minutes 33 seconds time, and the declension diminished twenty minutes in the same interval.—Ibid.

THE RUSSIAN EMBASSY.—Intelligence was received at Ashburnham house, yesterday, of the death of Prince Galitzin, at Paris, on Friday last. The Prince was well-known in the highest circles at Paris and this country, and held a commission in the Imperial Guards.—Ibid.

WILL OF CARDINAL FESCH.—A letter from Ajaccio gives the following account of the will of the late Cardinal Fesch, and the proceedings to which it has given rise. Among the specific and pecuniary legacies was one for founding at Ajaccio, the Cardinal's native city, an institute to be under the direction of a religious community. For this purpose he bequeathed large estates in Corsica, considerable sums of money, and innumerable statues, busts, paintings, and other works of art. The testator further directed the erection of a convent and church at Ajaccio, within which was to be formed a tomb for the interment of the Buonaparte family. By a Royal ordinance, dated the 3d of September, 1841, the city of Ajaccio, was authorized to accept this bequest. However, on an investigation of the will preparatory to the carrying of these intentions into execution, it was discovered that there were certain technical informalities which prevented Ajaccio from receiving the bequests and carrying the munificent intentions of the testator into execution. The will of Cardinal Fesch nominated his nephew Joseph, ex-King of Spain, as his residuary legatee, and to whom all this valuable property consequently lapsed. Under these circumstances the city of Ajaccio made an appeal to the liberality of the Count de Survilliers, who met it with a truly noble spirit. On the 2d of September last he executed an act of donation, whereby he secured to the native city of his uncle nearly all the late Cardinal intended to endow it with. He, besides, gave a full length statue of Napoleon, and further granted, out of the vast gallery bequeathed to him by his uncle, numerous additional paintings, to be distributed among the great towns of his native island, viz.—100 to be placed in the Royal College of Bastia, fifty in the town of Corte, in which he himself was born, and 150 to be divided by lot among other towns. But with regard to the church in which was to be constructed the tomb for the Buonaparte family, he deferred its completion as long as that family should remain proscribed from France, considering it to be useless to erect a receptacle which might never be occupied.—Record.

AUSTRIA.—The Austrian Government has issued an order relative to the employment of children in manufactories. No child is to work younger than nine years old, and none then, unless they have been three years frequenting school, and receiving religious instruction. From nine to twelve years, children must not work above ten hours. From twelve to sixteen, children must not work above twelve hours, with one hour's interval. No boy or girl under sixteen to work at night.—Pat.

DAMASCUS.—Among the appointments of Consuls lately signed by M. Guizot, we must particularly notice and praise (says the Univers) that of Count De Ratti Menton, who is transferred from the Consulate of Damascus to that of Canton. The latter is worth 40,000f. a-year, and has acquired a great political importance, since the commencement of the hostilities of the English against China. By this distinction, M. Guizot, has proved that he shared the opinion publicly expressed by M. Thiers, respecting the propriety, courage, dignity, and perseverance, evinced by M. Ratti Menton, in the affair of the Jews who murdered Father Thomas. In sending our Consul at Damascus to serve France in a more important post, the Government avenges him, in a becoming manner, for the attacks of the Journal des Débats, which, in the affair of the murder of Father Thomas, so unworthily betrayed the interests of religion and our nationality.

THE NEWSPAPER PRESS IN THE UNITED STATES.—Schools may be erected, east, west, north, and south, pupils be taught, and masters reared by scores upon scores of thousands; cottages may strive, churches may be crammed, temperance may be diffused, and advancing knowledge, in all other forms, walk through the land with giant strides; but while the newspaper press of America is in, or near its present abject state, high moral improvement in that country is hopeless. Year by year, it must and will go back; year by year, the tone of public feeling must sink lower down; year by year, the Congress and the Senate must become of less account before all decent men; and year by year the memory of the great fathers of the Revolution must be outraged more and more in the bad life of their degenerate child. Among the herd of journals which are published in the States, there are some, the reader scarcely need be told, of character and credit. From personal intercourse with accomplished gentlemen connected with publications of this class, I have derived both pleasure and profit. But the name of these is Few, and of the others Legion; and the influence of the good is powerless to counteract the mortal poison of the bad.—Dickens's American Notes.

GOVERNMENT NOTIFICATIONS.

GENERAL ORDERS BY THE RIGHT HONOURABLE THE GOVERNOR GENERAL OF INDIA.

Camp Ferozepore, 27th December, 1842.

The Governor General is pleased to appoint
His Excellency GEORGE CLERK, Esq., Envoy to the Maharajah Shere Singh;
Major General LUMLEY, Adjutant General of the Army;
Major General SMITH, Adjutant General H. M. Forces;
Brigadier MONTEATH, C. B., and Brigadier WYMER;
to be a Court of Enquiry into the conduct of Major Pottinger, subsequently to the death of Sir William Macnaghten, until he became a prisoner to the Affghans.

The Court to have the power of sending for persons, papers and records, and to appoint its own Secretary, and any writers who may be required.

The Secretary to the Government of India will place before the Court, on its assembling, all the papers which are now in the office, apparently bearing upon the matters to be subjected to enquiry.

All evidence taken is to be recorded and reported.

The Court will communicate its opinion upon the question whether the conduct of Major Pottinger, from the death of Sir William Macnaghten, until he became a prisoner, was under then existing circumstances best calculated to secure the safety of the British army at Caboul, and to maintain the honour of the British arms.

The Court will also report their opinion upon the question, whether the bills drawn by Major Pottinger upon the British Government, within the period above mentioned, were drawn by him in the exercise of legitimate authority and of due discretion; and whether the circumstances under which, and any conditions upon which, they may have been drawn and made payable, were duly made known to the several persons to whom they were delivered or by whom they were negotiated.

The Court will assemble on the day subsequent to the date of this Order, at the tent of His Excellency the Envoy to Maharajah Shere Singh, who will act as President of the Court.

By order of the Right Honourable the Governor General of India,

As the members of the present Christian Community at Lucknow form but a small portion of Colonel Low's friends, and there are many in different parts of India who would gladly avail themselves of any opportunity of showing the estimation in which he is held by them, the Committee appointed by the subscribers at Lucknow beg to circulate for their information the proposal which was generally approved of by the Lucknow Community, and to assure those who may wish to subscribe, that they will have much pleasure in receiving their contribution to the Portrait.

"To the Community at Lucknow.

As Lieut. Colonel Low, C.B. Resident at Lucknow is about to leave India, it is proposed that a subscription should be opened for the purpose of obtaining a Portrait of him to be executed by George Beechey, Esq. and kept in the Banquetting Rooms at Lucknow, in order to perpetuate the recollection of the many virtues which have adorned his public and private character, that have caused him to be universally esteemed and respected, and have enabled him to conciliate the good opinion of every one who has had the happiness of knowing him.

Persons desirous of subscribing are requested to put down their names with the amount of their subscriptions, and to vote for a Committee who will prepare and present an Address to Colonel Low, C. B. previous to his departure."

In accordance with the above proposal a Committee was formed at Lucknow, and an Address presented—and although before Col. Low's departure it was impossible to ascertain the probable amount of subscriptions, Mr. Beechey very handsomely undertook to paint the picture.

By order of the Committee,
J. SPENCER LOGIN,
Lucknow, 28th Dec. 1842. Secretary.

MR. PARKE PITTAR

HAVING arranged the formation of an Agency, the particular object of which will be the transaction of affairs, connected with this country and Europe, begs to offer his services to the community of India, in any way they can be rendered available.

A peculiar and important feature in the Agency now established, will consist in the annual return of Mr. P. Pittar to India. Taking advantage of the Peninsular and Oriental Company's Steam Vessels, he purposes re-visiting Calcutta about the latter end of every October, and returning to Europe about the middle of the following February, thus affording to persons entrusting the management of their affairs to his care, the opportunity of a personal conference and explanation of their views and intentions,—an advantage in the transaction of affairs of a complicated delicate or family nature, the greatness of which need not be commented upon.

A long residence in India, combined with an intimate knowledge of almost every description of manufactured article, and its various manufacturers, rendering him peculiarly fitted for the office of Agent to persons procuring their supplies or other articles, such as Table Equipages, Philosophical and Optical Instruments, Books, Maps, Sporting Apparatus, Musical Instruments, Military Equipments, Wines, &c., &c., direct from England or the Continent, he offers them his services with every confidence that his selections will give the most perfect satisfaction, whether as regarding quality, cheapness, or adaptation to the climate; but in the execution of these commissions, a previous remittance for their full amount, or reference for payment, will invariably be required.

Every article purchased through this Agency will be most minutely examined previous to its being packed and the same care under every circumstance, taken, as if persons were themselves individually present and superintending. Packages of a large size will, as usual, be shipped by fast-vessels to their destined port; but those of smaller dimensions, will, (unless otherwise instructed,) be sent through the Peninsular and Oriental Company's Office, Overland: thus enabling persons in most instances to receive their orders fully executed within four months from the date of the transmission of their instructions.

In transactions of a private and confidential nature a fair remuneration, according to circumstances, will be expected; in those of the ordinary nature of Agency Business, the Commission will be regulated by the customary rates; and for the selection, purchase and shipment of goods, a Commission of 5 per cent. on the gross amount will be charged.

Mr. P. Pittar has taken his passage in the India Steamer, to sail on the 10th February, for Suez and, therefore, requests for the present, that all letters intended for him may be directed to his residence, No. 36, Dhurrumtollah, Calcutta; but after her departure, to the address of MR. PARKE PITTAR, EUROPEAN AND ORIENTAL AGENCY OFFICE, LONDON, where they will meet with the most prompt attention.

THE HAIR.

ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL.

A VEGETABLE PRODUCTION.

THE only article that produces and restores HAIR; also WHISKERS, MUSTACHIOS, and EYE-BROWS; prevents Hair from falling off or turning grey to the latest period of life; changes grey hair to its original COLOUR—frees it from scurf, and makes it beautifully SOFT, CURLY, and GLOSSY. In dressing HAIR, it keeps it firm in the curl, uninjured by damp weather, crowded rooms, the dance, or in the exercise of riding. To Children, it is invaluable, as it lays a foundation for a BEAUTIFUL HEAD OF HAIR.

ON PURCHASING, (Beware of Counterfeits!.!) ask for "ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL"—and see that those words are on the envelope, with the Signature and Address, thus,—

A. ROWLAND & SON, 20, Hatton Garden, London, Counter-signed ALEX. ROWLAND.

To ensure the genuine article, see that the words "Rowland's Macassar Oil" are engraved on the back of the envelope nearly 1,500 times containing 29,028 letters—WITHOUT THIS NONE IS GENUINE. Price 3s. 6d.; 7s.; Family Bottles, (containing four small,) 10s. 6d. and double that size, 21s. per bottle.

In every civilized country throughout the world the human hair is always found to be a subject of peculiar attention. Of the numerous compounds professing to promote or reproduce the hair, few have survived—even in name, whilst ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL, with a reputation already unparalleled, is still on the increase in public estimation; which fact, together with innumerable testimonial's (for perusal at the proprietors) is sufficient to satisfy the most incredulous as to its sovereign virtues so repeatedly shown, in restoring, preserving, and beautifying the human hair.

In Dressing the Hair, nothing can equal the effects of "ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL," on either Natural or Artificial Hair, rendering it so admirably soft, that it will lie in any direction: it produces beautiful flowing curls, and, by the transcendant lustre it imparts, renders the head dress truly enchanting! It preserves the coiffure in the heated atmosphere of the ball room, and neutralizes the effects of a damp atmosphere, or violent exercise.

STOCK MARKET.—Company's Paper in the 4 and 5 per cent. loans—SHARES in the Bank of Bengal and Union Bank—BILLS on H. M.'s Treasury at 30 days' sight—Navy Bills—Colonial Bank Bills on the Directors in London—Bills under Letters of Credit—and other good Commercial Bills of Exchange, at the rate of the day.

Lord Ellenborough's Simlah Proclamation has not only found favour with the leading journals in London, the Chronicle and the Globe excepted, but is described in terms of extravagant praise. "It is a thoroughly English document, straight forward, manly, unreserved." "It is an admirably written and truly eloquent proclamation—as a state document it is one of the most concise, able and eloquent we ever read. There is not one word too much, not one comma too little." "Few state papers have so concisely enunciated such important principles, or arrested such general attention." "The proclamation is one of the most remarkable specimens of sound political good sense we have ever noticed." Yet this proclamation was, with a very few exceptions, universally condemned in India, by men of all parties, by Whigs and Tories, by those who were diametrically opposed to the occupation of Affghanistan, and by those who traced it up to the demands of self preservation. It is difficult to account for this laudatory strain, except on the supposition that the sudden announcement of the victorious close of a campaign, in which the sense of past disasters was rendered more keen by the anticipation of future embarrassments, has so dazzled the eyes, and captivated the minds of public writers as to make them insensible for the moment to the true character of the Proclamation. The dissatisfaction which this document created through the community in India, was not occasioned in the slightest degree by any regret that the war had ceased. Here its termination was hailed with feelings approaching to ecstacy. The liberation of the prisoners diffused a sentiment of joy through the country, which had never been before experienced. If the resolution to shake off Affghanistan, which the Proclamation distinctly announced, was received with less enthusiasm in India than in England, it was only because it had long been anticipated; and because we knew, not only that Lord Ellenborough had determined to have nothing farther to do with the countries beyond the Indus, but that if Lord Auckland had continued at the head of the Government, this consummation would have been brought about at an earlier period. The Proclamation was censured because it was felt that the position of a Governor General at the head of a vast empire, composed of the most heterogeneous materials, imposed on him the necessity of abstaining from the expression of any sentiment which could be identified with political animosities. It was felt, that while every Governor General was bound to correct any errors he might discover in the measures of his predecessor, it was highly impolitic openly to condemn them in a state paper which was intended to be read by the various chiefs of the country; and thus to break up the impression of that general identity of administrative policy which has characterized our Government, amidst every mutation of rulers, and constituted in the eyes of the natives one of its firmest safeguards. That impression was for the first time interrupted by the Simlah Proclamation; and we think it would be difficult to discover any advantage in this novel course of procedure sufficient to counterbalance its imprudence. The allusion to Sir W. Macnaghten, and his unparalleled errors, appeared in India in the light of an ungenerous reflection on the deceased Envoy, who, whatever might have been his faults, had himself fallen a victim to them. Notwithstanding this unity of opinion at home among our public writers of the present day, there is no reason to apprehend that their views of the propriety of gibbeting a previous administration, or of reflecting on the dead, will meet with any tenderness at the hands of the future historian.

Of all the opinions which have been delivered by the London Press on this celebrated Proclamation, those which we find in the Patriot appear to possess the greatest weight for their calm and discriminative character. The Editor of that paper has been invariably opposed to the policy of the war. His observations have therefore the merit of impartiality, as well as of a sound judgement, and we recommend them to the perusal of our readers.*

We fear it will be found rather an unfortunate circumstance that Lord Ellenborough's Proclamation has attracted so much notoriety. His subsequent notifications will thereby be brought more prominently under examination than they would otherwise have been. There are three Proclamations yet to be commented on; the order regarding the release of Dost Mahomed, the Somnath Gates, and the thirty tons of sweetmeats. They will give rise to much animadversion, and will assuredly be condemned by all those who have not allowed their judgements to be warped by party feelings. To such an extent however has this party spirit been allowed to influence the minds of the Conservative Journalists, that we should not be surprized to find it said, that the exhibition of Dost Mahomed at the victorious tournament of Ferozepore, was dictated by thoroughly English feelings; that the procession of the Somnath Gates was most eminently proper, both in a political and a religious point of view, and that the announcement of the mehtaye, was perfectly consistent with the dignity of a great Government.

The Appointment of Moonsiffs.—The Hurkaru has fallen into an error regarding the Orders issued to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut by the Deputy Governor on the nomination of Moonsiffs. He says, "an opinion seems to have been entertained of late by those who have the ear of the Governor that the selections of the Sudder were not altogether impartial. The expedient hit upon to remedy the supposed defect was to require that six names should be sent to the Governor every half year, with notes of the date of appointment and character of each officer." The requisition of the half yearly report did not, however, originate in any suspicion that the nominations of the Sudder were chargeable with partiality. If it had, the "expedient hit upon" to remedy the defect bespeaks little wisdom, for it consists simply in ordering the Court to make a half yearly report of the six best qualified Moonsiffs, instead of making the same report, on the spur of the occasion, whenever a vacancy occurred. And how the requisition of periodical reports should secure more impartiality than that of occasional reports, we cannot comprehend. The fact is, that the system of requiring a separate report for each vacancy, was found to be attended with inconvenience and delay, not only as it regarded the promotion of Moonsiffs from the second grade to the first, but also in the appointment of Sudder Ameens and Principal Sudder Ameens. The Government therefore 'hit on the expedient' of remedying this defect by directing that four half yearly nomination lists of officers, one for the higher, and another for the lower grade of Principal Sudder Ameens, the third for the Sudder Ameens, and the fourth for the first class of Moonsiffs, should be submitted to the Deputy Governor by the Sudder Court. The Executive Government is thus enabled without the delay or complication of a separate reference to that Court, to fill up offices which may have become vacant.

Our contemporary has also been mystified on another point. He says "all that they,"—the Government—"have gained," that is by having half yearly reports instead of reports drawn up on each vacancy, "is the privilege of passing over as many times as they think fit, the officer whom the Court place at the head, and promoting him whom they place at the bottom of the list." But had not Government this privilege before the establishment of half yearly reports; and indeed on every occasion on which a nomination list was forwarded to it? What our contemporary intends by the following sentence, we are unable to comprehend: "The subordinate officers cannot but be discouraged, therefore, when they perceive that the recommendations of the Sudder on their behalf are disregarded, or postponed to any considerations unconnected with the public interests." If he means to insinuate that the Deputy Governor has been governed in the selection of officers by "considerations unconnected with the public service," he ought to adduce the instances in which the head of the Government has been thus forgetful of the responsibilities of his station. In the present instance this allusion is peculiarly unfortunate, for Mr. Weston, the successful candidate, stood at the top of the Sudder Court's list.

The Press of India.—It was remarked some years ago by the Editor of the Hurkaru, then under the able management of Mr. Sutherland, that the support given to the Press of India had for many years been stationary, and that the increase to the subscription list of any particular journal, was generally occasioned by defections from its contemporaries. That remark will no longer hold good. The increased circulation of newspapers, generally, is established beyond controversy by the facts which have been disclosed by the Editors. There was a time, when a paper with a thousand subscribers was a phenomenon. At the present time,—if the circulation of the Hurkaru equals that of some of its competitors,—there are five journals in India with a circulation exceeding that amount. During the past year, the Delhi Gazette has gone ahead by the assistance of four hundred additional supporters. The Bombay Times had already reached the limit of its expectations, though not perhaps of its ambition, on the Continent of India, but its home circulation has been increased to an unprecedented extent. And the encouragement afforded to journalism in India by the smiles of the public, has this year enabled the Calcutta Star, the Bombay Courier, and the Madras Athenæum to enlarge their borders, and increase their attraction.

We trace this increase of the market for our commodities to three causes. First and foremost, to the Liberty of the Press granted by Sir Charles Metcalfe six years ago, which has emboldened those who write for the public to take a wider range of observation, and to discuss without fear, every domestic question in which their supporters were interested. Secondly, to the monthly steam communication established between India and England, and to the receipt by its agency of periodical intelligence from our beloved country and from the nations of Christendom, by which a new interest has been given to the movements of the civilized world, from which we were comparatively shut out by distance and uncertainty. The interest thus kindled has given additional attraction to the local journals by which this intelligence is diffused through the community. Lastly, the impulse which the journals have received within the last four years, and more especially within the last year, may be traced to the unexampled anxiety felt respecting the movement of our armies and the safety of our prisoners beyond the Indus. It is to this cause that the increased support of the Delhi Gazette may be ascribed. But it is to be hoped that the impulse which has thus been imparted to the periodical press of India, will survive the temporary cause which has given rise to it, and that our Editors will be enabled, by a judicious use of the resources derived from the monthly communication with England, and by their fearless and unbiassed discussion of local topics, to maintain the position they have attained. Lord Ellenborough's proclamations have lately afforded such abundant food for remark, that we have not as yet been permitted to feel the want of that stimulus which the news from Affghanistan used to supply; but whenever we may be deprived of this source of interest, the pursuits of peace, and the improvement of the country will, it is to be hoped, furnish topics of sufficient importance to retain the patronage which the Press now enjoys.

The Press of India has at length become a power of no small magnitude, and its influence on the public councils of the Empire, can no longer be questioned. Many are the improvements in the public administration which are to be traced up to its perseverance. At the same time, it is difficult to estimate the negative good of which it has been the instrument, by discouraging the adoption of doubtful or injurious measures. By its important discussions, it has contributed gradually to impart a healthful character to the minds of those who are successively taking the lead in public affairs, as the older functionaries pass off the stage; and in this respect the liberty it has enjoyed, and the good use made of it, have been of incalculable benefit. It has originated and given a specific direction to public opinion in this country. And, with the aid of a monthly steam communication, it has now extended its influence over the Journals of England and Europe, and by keeping up an interest in the progress of Indian affairs, has assisted in bringing the independant opinion of the European world to bear upon the public administration here. We have thus a fresh guarantee for good government in the East. In former times the public authorities acted only under the eye of their own masters in Leadenhall Street; at present they are constrained to feel that they act in the presence of the civilized world, and that any attempt to govern upon arbitrary or pernicious principles would bring down upon them the scorn of Europe. At no time has the Press of India occupied a more important or more responsible position than at the beginning of the year 1843, and at no period has it exhibited greater independence of character; for it is a fact not less true than singular, that at this present moment there is not a single newspaper, out of the twenty-two which are published at the various presses in India, which is not opposed to the general policy of the Governor General, and does not openly avow an entire want of confidence in his administration.

SCHEME FOR UPROOTING THE PRESBYTERIAN ESTABLISHMENT.—The papers received by the last Mail are filled with information which seems to portend the approach of some great religious crisis in our native land on both sides the Tweed. The dissensions in the General Assembly which appear to threaten the very existence of Presbyterianism as an established form of religion, and the rapid strides which Puseyism is making, under the auspices of the Bishops of Oxford, Salisbury, Exeter and London, forbid us to suppose that matters can long remain in their present position. A change almost as radical and organic as that which marked the beginning of the fifteenth century, seems to be approaching; and the country, already assailed, at the very source of its prosperity, by the rivalry and hostility of foreign nations, seems likely to fall a prey to internal discord on the subject of religious observances, and of sacerdotal power.

At present we confine our remarks to the perilous state in which the Presbyterian Church of Scotland is placed. From the extracts we give below, it would appear that it has long been the hope, and is at present the aim of the Episcopalians to root up John Knox's Establishment and transfer all Church property in Scotland to their own body. This will probably serve to explain the reason why every measure of the State has been directed, not to conciliate Dr. Chalmers and his associates, but rather to drive them to the extremity of resigning their livings. The object has been to weaken the Kirk, so as to render it an easier prey to those who are longing for its endowments. It is expected that the secession of so large a body of its ablest, most pious, and most energetic ministers, as the non-intrusionists, will dispose the minority to accept the form of episcopal polity, and thus blot out the anomaly of an unepiscopal establishment in the British isles. The design unfolded in the letter we publish, is so startling, that we should scarcely have given credit to it if we had not met with similar disclosures in a sermon recently published at Rome by the Reverend Mr. Grey, an extract from which we have found in our papers and subjoin to this article. These concurrent testimonies leave no room to doubt that the entire eradication of the Presbyterian Establishment, and the substitution of an Episcopal polity in its stead, is the object to which the energies of the Episcopalian body are at present directed. The organization of an Episcopal College at Perth, is evidently connected with this design. The difficulties of the Scottish Kirk may therefore be considered as only begun. It has a long and arduous struggle before it; and it will require all the sturdy virtue and resolution of the Covenanters to baffle the designs of its adversaries, and again to resist the imposition of Bishops by the State.

Should the Presbyterian Church fall in this struggle, it will be succeeded, to all present appearances, by the most bigotted Puseyism, if indeed Puseyism should so long continue to exist distinct from Romanism. It is well known that the Bishops and Episcopal Ministers in Scotland are, with few exceptions, enlisted under the banner of this sect, and are among its most strenuous advocates. Their hatred of Presbyterianism, and for very obvious reasons, exhibits the odium theologicum in its most acute form. With all their apostolical genealogy, and their sole right to administer the sacraments, and to grant admissions into the kingdom of heaven, they are still by law no better than Dissenters in Scotland, while a body of men, whom they refuse to recognize as ministers, enjoy the alliance and the endowments of the state. While therefore the feeling of the Puseyite to the Dissenter in England, is that of contempt,—sovereign, indescribable contempt, it is true, but still only contempt—the feelings of the Puseyites across the Tweed towards those who usurp the authority which belongs by apostolical descent to them, is one of intense hatred. If it be asked what kind of religious truth the Episcopalians are likely to inculcate when they have obtained the Parish Churches, and substituted the imposing ritual of the Church of England for the naked forms of Presbyterianism, the answer is lamentably furnished by the papers now received. Two instances will suffice. We find that Mr. Drummond, a "man of unblemished reputation, preaching the pure word of the Gospel," has been in the habit of holding a weekly prayer-meeting with his congregation in a room or hall which he had rented for that purpose, also a Bible Class meeting and a Missionary prayer-meeting. His diocesan, Bishop Terrot, has prohibited the meetings, and Mr. Drummond has resigned his charge. On the other hand, we find that the Bishop of Aberdeen, just before the celebration of the Lord's supper, planted, not a simple cross, but a crucifix, on the 'Altar;' but his congregation refused to kneel to it, and he was obliged to remove it, with the awkward explanation that it was the gift of a friend and had been placed there only for ornament.

PROSPECTS OF PRELACY IN SCOTLAND.

The conviction gains ground that the Anglican party are cherishing the hope of restoring Prelacy in Scotland. Of this the projected College at Perth is one indication; and, although, in resisting the claims of the Non-intrusionists, the present Government are only acting upon the policy of their predecessors in office, yet the manner in which they have carried themselves towards the claimants has been ominously significant, and such as bodes no good to Presbyterianism. In our last Number, we saw the view taken by the Non-intrusionists of Glasgow on this subject. The "Convocation" lately sitting in Edinburgh comprises the strength of the Presbyterian clergy, and hitherto they have evinced no disposition to retain their emoluments by means of any unworthy compromise. The Moderate minority, who justly conclude that State support and State control are inseparable, reiterate that proposition, however, with the air of men who would face about at the word of command from Presbyterianism to Episcopacy, with an obedience as instinctive as a troop of soldiers.

A communication in the Witness supports this view. It is from "the son of an Elder," residing in the South, who, being frequently thrown into clerical circles, is in the habit of hearing what Bishops and other clergymen think of ecclesiastical affairs in the North. He gives the substance of a conversation with one Bishop whom he describes as a member of the House of Lords, and a subscriber to the Perth College.

The Right Reverend person is represented as having stated, that a measure would shortly be introduced by Government to place the Scottish Bishops on the same footing in every respect with the English; that, when certain measures (which he did not specify) were sufficiently matured, he had no doubt a very large body of the most influential classes would at once adopt Episcopacy, "in addition to those already calculated upon;" that this opinion was formed on the very best information from Scotland; that the Government, by refusing to grant the wishes of the dominant party, and keeping the question unsettled, would disgust many of the nobility and gentry with the Scots Church, while the present majority among the clergy would become gradually less when they saw they must give up their incomes; that, when the more violent had become Dissenters, those that remained, having by so doing admitted the full power of the law, would be "more tractable in future;" that the principal part of the nobility and gentry, or their ladies, belonged already to the Church of England, or preferred its service, and most of them educated their sons and daughters in English schools; that, besides these, they calculated upon all retired officers of the army and navy, with persons who had been in the East Indies and the Colonies; that they relied mainly on the great power that would emanate from the establishment of the Perth College; that, as to the determined opposition of the Scottish people to a similar attempt in former times, the Stuarts were politically hated, while our present Queen is idolised; that, besides, other means would now be used, not so much calculated to alarm the vulgar; and he concluded by observing, that no thorough amalgamation of the two nations could be effected, until a similarity of religion was established by law, even though it should be maintained for a time, as in Ireland, by the upper classes alone, until the superior intelligence and loyalty of the Scots would induce them peaceably to adopt it. "The same sentiments," adds the writer, "in almost similar words, have been repeated to me over again by clergy of all grades, whose names I can give."

A very sanguine clergyman connected with a certain College, told him, "that money to any amount should not be wanting to carry it out,—that it was in contemplation to divide Scotland into districts, to which itinerant lecturers and catechists, natives of the country, would be appointed, to catechise and distribute tracts, and hold meetings to explain the trifling difference between the standards of faith belonging to the two Churches; and, when a few families were gathered, a Church properly consecrated for their use would be obtained." He adds his own conviction, that a means of obtaining information, or a clerical spy system, is at work in Scotland; otherwise, men who have never been out of the south of England could not acquire such a knowledge of the private concerns and opinions of a gentry resident 500 miles from them, as was evinced; but he himself explains how this may be, when he states, that "the livings of the Church of England, the schools, particularly the chief one at Westminster, and every engine designed for the spread of Prelacy, are filled with renegade Scotchmen."

We would not lay over much stress upon an anonymous detail of conversations with unknown parties; but the statements above given have the air of truth, and are in perfect harmony with daily occurrences.—From the Voluntary.

"Of all the national forms of Protestantism, the Presbyterian Establishment in Scotland is the farthest removed from us; and yet we cannot help regarding it as more than possible, that the pressure of circumstances may, ere many years are over, lead it within the pale of our communion. If the party at present dominant in the Kirk and opposed to the State, act with consistency, we cannot but regard as probable their speedy secession from the Establishment, accompanied by considerable weight in numbers, energy, and zeal. While another strong body will thus be added to the numerous Presbyterian Seceders already existing, the Establishment is even now frequently abandoned, on the other hand, by many of the higher and better educated classes, who seek in the bosom of the Church, that quiet of which the turbulence of clerical agitation has for some years deprived them. It may be observed also, that, to the Church, at least one-half of the Scottish nobility and landed gentry have always belonged. By this two-fold secession, the Establishment will be much reduced in its numbers, and weakened in its energies. The more violent Presbyterian partisans will have left it, and those who remain in possession of its endowments, though perhaps not actually penetrated with a sense of the necessity of Episcopacy, will have been taught, by their late storms and troubles, the disadvantage of Presbyterial parity, and the benefit of ruling authority.

"Thus diminished to an extent which will render its claim to usefulness, as the National Establishment, at least very questionable, and assailed by the fury of sectarian assaults, it will not be wonderful if the Kirk, in its distress, is led to entertain the idea of uniting itself with the Church, which it once supplanted, but which has continued, unextinguished by penury, unwithered by persecution, and unharmed by contumely, in her quiet Christian course, blessing and cursing not, and is now rewarded for her meek endurance, by returning prosperity. As the majority of the tithe or teind payers are already Episcopalians, and as their number is increasing, it may be supposed that they would gladly see the national endowments possessed by those of their own communion. The more moderate of the Clergy, who will then be left in possession of those endowments, are likely rather to favour than oppose a union. And the prejudices of the people, who once regarded Prelacy with as great horror as Popery, are rapidly diminishing, and, in the large towns at least, will soon be extinct. . . . . It may be, too, that the Church in Scotland, with a view to accomplish so great an end as that of spreading its Catholicity over the troubled national Establishment, might consent to make some concessions of ritual and form, which did not involve any vital principle, and which might facilitate the adoption of essential ecclesiastical truth. And thus we are led to regard, as an event not very remotely future, the transfer of the endowments of the Scottish Establishment to the Scottish Church, and the happy admission, within the pale of our catholicity, of many sound, sober, and pious divines, whom we should gladly hail as brethren; while the people, no longer distracted and agitated by the assertions of spiritual tyranny and the unchristian violence of party strife, will once more be led by their true shepherds along the old paths, to the green pastures and still waters of life."—From "Sermons in Rome during Lent," by John Hamilton Gray, M.A., of Magdalen College, Oxford, and Vicar of Bolsover and Scarliff.

INDIAN COAL.—Perhaps there is no subject more intimately connected with the welfare of this Presidency and of its means of internal intercourse than that of Coal, and in nothing does the indifference of Government to the improvement of steam communication on our rivers appear more evident than in the neglect of every attempt to obtain a more advantageous supply of fuel. Eight years ago the Coal consumed by the steamers was brought down the Damoodur, to a point considerably below Calcutta, and transported at a heavy expense up to Allahabad; thus doubling the expense of fuel. The same circuitous route is still in use; and although it has been demonstrated that there are beds of Coal in the vicinity of the river between Calcutta and Allahabad, which if brought into use, would save Government the expense of six hundred miles of carriage, the steamers on the Ganges in the immediate neighbourhood of these rich veins are actually obliged, on many occasions, to use wood; which will not keep up a sufficient power of steam to stem the rapid current of that river. It is time that this apathy to the best interests of the country should be broken up, and that energetic measures should be adopted to bring the mineral resources with which the Gangetic valley abounds into the service of the country.

The last number of the Calcutta Journal of Natural History contains two very interesting articles on the subject of Indian Coal. The following extract shows that nothing is wanting but a spirit of enterprize in Government to secure a regular supply of Coal from the numerous beds which lie in the vicinity of Rajmahl, and thus to give a new impulse to internal steam navigation. The Coal Committee, as it would appear, on seeing the sample of Coal obtained from that locality, decided that it was hopeless to expect any farther information from that quarter till an experienced officer or practical miner should be deputed thither, but the researches which Mr. Pontet has subsequently made, shew that the field would not be explored in vain.

"A subsequent intimation having been received of the arrival of another sample of coal from Doobradgepore, dispatched by Mr. Pontet, consisting of 130 maunds, it was distributed by the Committee to the Mint, Cossipore Foundry, and the Laboratory of the Public Dispensary, for trial. Upon which Major Forbes reported from the Mint, that this sample was inferior to the last, and that it would not keep up steam. The report from Cossipore Foundry describes this sample to be of a dull brownish colour, with thin bright layers, and that it was evidently a crop or surface coal, and that twenty and a half maunds were required to do the work of ten maunds of Burdwan coal. The appearance of this sample indeed shewed, that it should not have been selected, and that the persons by whom it was raised, were ignorant of the properties and appearance of coal. The Committee therefore considered it quite hopeless to expect any further information from this quarter, until a qualified officer, or practical miner, should be deputed to Doobradgepore, for the purpose of examining the district, and of deciding from amidst the numerous beds of coal, no doubt there to be found, the particular one, which, from its qualities and position would afford the best return in working. In the meantime, Mr. Pontet finding the steamers on the Ganges using wood, had a quantity of Doobradgepore coal delivered in January last at Bhaugulpore, for their use. To his disappointment, however, the Captains would not buy his coal; not that it was bad, but that they had nothing to do with the matter, further than to receive on board such fuel as the contractors for the supply of that article think proper to furnish. Unable therefore to obtain any remuneration for his expences, but at the same time anxious to have the quality of the coal tried, Mr. Pontet delivered it for nothing to the Captains of three of the steamers, who gladly accepted it on these terms, but only two of them granted receipts, and one only of three furnished Mr. Pontet with a statement of the result of the trial: but this report was so favourable, as to leave no doubt whatever as to the useful quality of the coal. The report stated the sample of Doobradgepore coal, supplied by Mr. Pontet, to be equal in quality to Burdwan coal, and to be fifty per cent. better than the wood, which they were then using.

"Coal, however, may now form too inconsiderable an item in public expenditure to render its supply a subject of much importance. In no other way can we account for its unnecessary transmission from the Damoda river (the lowest confluent of the Hooghly) up to Allahabad, a distance of 600 miles against the strong currents of the Ganges. If the labour and money thus fruitlessly thrown away year after year, were only to be directed for a short time to the Rajmahl and other coal districts on the upper parts of the Ganges, the result would not only be attended with much local improvement in several deserted tracts where coal is abundant, but would, after a time, lessen its expense very materially."

The second extract we give is in the words of Mr. Murchison, the President of the Geological Section of the British Association, in a letter to Dr. McClelland, and enforces the necessity of employing scientific research as well as practical experience in every attempt to develope the mineral resources of this empire.

"I have for a long time been thinking with surprize (whenever my thoughts have been turned to that region, of the apparent apathy with which the subject referred to in your letter, 10th February 1841, to the address of Mr. Lyell, has been treated by those who govern India. I am happy to find by your letter, that more has been done than I supposed; still it is a marvellous and lamentable fact, that whilst very large sums have been spent upon inquiries into the botanical productions of Hindustan, and eminent botanists have been liberally employed (to see which, no one can rejoice more than myself,) no geologist has been engaged, regularly and systematically, to work out the relations of the rock masses, containing various mineral substances useful to man.

"No great country save England has been without geologists employed by the State during the last 10 or 15 years, and in the appointment of Mr., now Sir H. De la Beche, to the office of geologist of the Ordnance Survey, the English Government has at length recognised the principle. In our own country, however, the great enterprise, and spirit of the Geological Society have worked out the leading data for which foreign Governments, even the United States, are glad to pay. It seems singular too that the President of the Geological Society of London, should be invited to Russia, and should, under the auspices of the Emperor, have prepared a geological map of that region (with special reference to coal tracts) whilst in regard to British India no information whatever has been sought at our hands by your rulers, and no advice of course has been tendered. You have evidently taken the right course, which is, to bring public opinion to act upon our Indian Government, which sooner or later must subscribe to the necessity of employing well informed geologists under a skilful chief. The points to which you direct attention in search of coal seem to be judiciously selected, as far as I am competent to judge; and assuring you that I will at all times afford you any support in my power in prosecuting the praiseworthy, and truly national objects, &c."

(Signed) R. J. MURCHISON.

"Upon this we would merely remark, that whatever be the character of the British Government in India in other respects, the world will estimate its policy in regard to these things, according to the opinion of Mr. Murchison. Although not yet in possession of the sentiments of Sir J. Herschel and Mr. Lyell on this subject, we hope to be so before long, when we shall not withhold them from our readers."

It is somewhat singular that a Government like that of Russia, which we are accustomed to regard as so greatly behind us in civilization, should have taken a step in reference to the coal tracts in its dominions, which the Government of India has never had the public spirit to undertake. We boast of being better able to govern this large empire than the Russian; yet one of the first results of a transfer of empire from our hands to that of Russia, would in all probability be the appointment of the ablest geologists to explore the mineral wealth of India, and to make it subservient to the improvement of the country. But, say the Government, we have patronized such researches and they have failed, after costing us a mint of money. We have actually lost 50,000 Rupees on the Tenasserim coast, by working a wrong bed. What then? Are the mineral resources of India to remain buried under ground because Government has on one or two occasions found its money squandered by incompetent individuals? This may afford a strong argument for employing men of scientific experience in these researches; but it surely affords no ground for relinquishing all attempts at improvement. Supposing ten times this sum, or five lakhs of Rupees, to be thus laid out in attempts for the discovery of coal in the East; and supposing it to be entirely lost to every useful purpose,—which no man will have the hardihood to assert,—yet it would be but the loss of four and twenty hours' revenue; a small sum for the Government of such an empire to risk, upon such an undertaking. If private individuals had been scared from an outlay which bore a similar proportion to their resources, by the uncertainty of the enterprize, where would have been the miracles of modern improvement? Such faint heartedness is the opprobrium of our Government, and it cannot be obliterated too soon. Now that we have peace in Asia, and the drain upon our public finances has ceased, and our pecuniary prospects begin to look bright, is it not among the first duties of Government to consider the long neglected coal beds, with which Providence has enriched this land, and to employ men of scientific acquirements, of which there is no lack in its service, to explore these mines of wealth, and turn them to public account?

THE EXAMINATION OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY'S INSTITUTION, of which we gave the Programme last week, was, if possible, more gratifying than any previous exhibition of the proficiency which its higher students have attained. The wide range of subjects embraced in their studies and the depth and solidity of their acquirements, attest the indefatigable industry of the Presbyterian Missionaries, who preside over the Institution, and afford a delightful proof of the success which has attended their labours. In one respect it affords a superior education to that which the best of the Government Institutions can impart. It is unfettered in the choice of its studies, and is thus enabled to introduce its students to those higher and more ennobling truths which are connected with our moral and eternal being, and which possess so peculiar a value in a country buried in heathen superstition and ignorance. The investigation of these subjects has a natural tendency not only to improve the heart, but also to strengthen the powers of the mind, and to impart a freedom and elasticity to the exercise of them. It is impossible that a youth who has been accustomed to weigh the principles of religious belief, to detect the errors of pantheism, and to examine the evidences on which the Sacred Scriptures claim the submission of the human mind, should not enjoy advantages over a youth from whom this large and important class of truths has been shut out. The neutrality which Government is constrained to observe in all its institutions on the subject of religion, is undoubtedly a great drawback on their usefulness; and we turn with delight to an establishment in which no such restriction is imposed, and in which the same extent of intellectual knowledge is given, and in addition to it the higher advantages of religious instruction.

But what becomes of the youths who quit the institution from year to year with their minds enriched with the most valuable acquisitions? What means exist for turning the abilities they have acquired with so much labour to the general improvement of the country? What sphere of influence are they expected to occupy, in which the light they have obtained may be made instrumental in dispelling the darkness of their fellow countrymen? It is a melancholy reflection that no adequate means have been devised for turning their talents to public account, and that in too many instances they are obliged to resort to the mechanical exertions of their pen to obtain a livelihood. It is desirable that some scheme should be devised, by which Government might be enabled to avail itself of the superior ability of these youths for the benefit of the public administration, and thus afford an additional stimulus to exertion on their parts, and at the same time improve the character of its own native service. The boundless influence connected with the public establishments through the country, is monopolized by men who have not a twentieth part of their knowledge. We have reason to believe that some arrangements will shortly be made, which will afford to the higher students of the General Assembly's Seminary, in common with all other institutions, official or non-official, an opportunity of employing their abilities in a sphere of extensive usefulness, and of rising to stations of honour and distinction in their own native land. Whenever such prospects shall be opened to the alumni of our schools and Colleges, we are confident that the Institution in Cornwallis Square will furnish its full quota of successful candidates for the public service.

THE MEETING IN HONOR OF MR. GREENLAW.—The meeting which had been convened to offer some testimonial to Mr. Greenlaw, for his persevering endeavours to establish a direct steam communication between Calcutta and London, and was prorogued on the arrival of the Mail, was again assembled on Saturday last, when it was resolved that a piece of plate should be presented to him, and that if the subscription was sufficiently large, a statue or a portrait of him should be procured to be placed in the Town Hall. Among the speeches made on the occasion, by far the most interesting and eloquent was that of Mr. George Thompson. We have been endeavouring to discover in what language we could most correctly describe its excellence; but every attempt has only given us increasing dissatisfaction; and we therefore beg the reader to peruse it for himself, and he will then feel what we find it so difficult to embody in words.

We are happy to find that Mr. Greenlaw's merits have been so generally and so honourably recognized by the community. Whatever quarrel we have had with him, arose not from any doubt of his ardent zeal in this cause, but from a conviction that, his wishes required to be "coined into action." It was because we felt that unless some active exertions could be made to begin operations, we should never obtain the fulfilment of our wishes, that we gave our humble but hearty support to the 'Precursor.' On such an occasion as the present, when the great object has been accomplished through the instrumentality of the Oriental and Peninsular Company, and the question is to reward with some token of public approbation the individual whose name has so long been identified with this Steam communication, we will cheerfully bury in oblivion every feeling connected with past discussions, and cordially unite with those who have resolved to perpetuate the memory of Mr. Greenlaw's exertions.

WEEKLY EPITOME OF NEWS.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 26.

— The Delhi Gazette received last evening, gives the result of the Court Martial on Captains Anderson, Boyd, Eyre and Troup. They were charged with having abandoned the English forces on the march from Cabul and sought the protection of Akbar Khan. They have been honourably acquitted, and the Commander-in-Chief has fully concurred in the acquittal.

— Mr. Bonham, the Governor of the Settlements in the Straits, has come round to Calcutta in the Queen Steamer, and it is believed to be his intention to retire. The Penang Gazette says, that Mr. Torrens, the Secretary of the Board of Customs, Salt and Opium, and Col. Monteith have been mentioned as likely to succeed him. Others have mentioned Mr. Blundell, the present Resident at Moulmein; but there does not seem any great probability that any of these appointments will take place.

— Last evening's Calcutta Gazette announces the appointment of Major Broadfoot, as Commissioner of the Tenasserim Provinces from the 1st of January. No man begrudges the reward now bestowed on Major Broadfoot, which his extraordinary exertions have so richly earned, but a pernicious precedent is hereby created of forcing a public officer out of a public office, upon other grounds than those of public incompetency. Mr. Blundell was refused permission to resign his post when he wished to resign, and is now compelled to relinquish it when he does not wish to do so.

— The report of the death of Col. Rich, who has been twice booked off, is contradicted.

— A serious accident occurred to Mr. W. P. Grant, the Master in Equity, the night before last. His carriage was crossing the plain, about eleven at night, and as it was dark and foggy, the coachman drove into the tank north of the Ochterlony monument. Mr. Grant and those in the carriage were saved by throwing themselves from the vehicle; the carriage was dragged out the next morning, as well as the bodies of the two horses who had perished.

— An action, the second of its kind, was tried yesterday in the Supreme Court, brought by one Native against another for crim. con. with his wife. The evidence of the plaintiff being insufficient to convict the defendant, he was acquitted.

— Government, it is said, intends to introduce some change in the Preventive Service. Thirty of the present extra hands will be selected and placed on the permanent establishment in an inferior grade at 60 Rupees a month.

— The other news of the day is, that Dr. Duff and Mr. George Thompson have visited the Parental Academy—that a child of six years old belonging to an individual in the Pilot service was enveigled out of the house by a Native, thrown into a drain, gagged and robbed of gold ornaments of the value of 80 Rupees—that there has been a grand tiffin and fine speeches on board the Prince of Wales, and that Mr. Montague's last lecture at the Mechanic's Institute was remarkable for his excellent delivery and the choice elegance of his language.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 27.

— The Agra Ukhbar states, that the Agra Presidency is not to be abolished, but to remain in a state of suspended animation till next January, when it will again become the seat of Government, with the addition of the Sudder Court and Board of Revenue, which are to be transferred to it; and that it will then rival Calcutta in every respect except in being a seaport and possessing a Queen's Court. It has been for some time rumoured that Lord Ellenborough was anxious to transfer the seat of the Supreme Government to this city; but since the dissolution of our connection with Affghanistan, the necessity for any such a measure has been removed; and it seems improbable that Calcutta will cease to be the capital of India.

— There is to be a strong gathering of Hindoo and Rajpoot chiefs to meet Lord Ellenborough at Delhi. The Rajas of Kotah, of Jhalra Patum, and of Bhurtpore, have already started for the city. The Governor General will be escorted, it is said, by Eight Thousand troops, and thus be enabled to enact the part of the Emperor of India on a grand scale.

— On the 4th of January, the Hon. Mr. Robertson resigned the administration of the Agra Presidency to Lord Ellenborough, and afterwards received with much grace and cordiality a deputation from the uncovenanted service.

— The accident which happened to Mr. Grant the other night, by the submersion of his carriage and horses in the Durrumtollah tank is likely to be the occasion of a public benefit. The Chief Magistrate is about to apply to Government for the means of railing in the tank. It is doubtful whether a similar accident to a common hackney coach would have produced the same anxiety; and it is advantageous, therefore, for a Master in Equity occasionally to run the risk of being drowned.

— The Agricultural shew of vegetables yesterday morning, is said by the reporter of the Hurkaru to have been much superior to that of the past year. A brief notice on the subject will be found among our extracts. In the evening, the members of the Society sat down to the discussion of a substantial dinner enriched by the Prize vegetables. The event of the evening was a noble speech from Mr. George Thompson, interrupted twice by Dr. Huffnagle, when the orator touched on the subject of the two millions and a half of slaves held in bondage in the freest country under the sun.

— Col. Palmer's trial has ended in his acquittal. He is said to have adduced in evidence his own journal of the privations endured by the garrison. This was said to be tantamount to instituting an invidious comparison between the sufferings of the "Illustrious garrison" and his own; but the journal written during the siege could have contained no such comparison with events of which he was ignorant. We hope Col. Palmer will give his journal to the world. From the letter of Lieut. Crawfurd, one of the garrison, which has already appeared, we augur that it will contain a narrative of active exertions, and patient endurance of sufferings of as deep interest as any journal of occurrences during that eventful period.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 28.

— The honourable acquittal of Col. Palmer, for the surrender of Ghuzni is at length officially published. The Court acquit him of all and every part of the charges preferred against him, and the Commander-in-Chief "heartily concurs in the justice of this honourable verdict." The circumstances, adds his Excellency, under which Col. Palmer surrendered Ghuzni, were such as he could neither control, alter, or alleviate. As we hear nothing of any trial of the other officers who fell into the hands of the enemy, at Ghuzni, we suppose that the acquittal of Col. Palmer is the acquittal of them all.

— At the last meeting of the Magistrates of Calcutta, a Mr. John Jenkins appealed against the assessment of a piece of ground near the Durrumtolah Bazar. It had been assessed at 50 Rs. a month. The assessor however discovered that it had been let for 265 Rs. a month. It was eventually assessed at 200. The reporter proceeds to state that Mr. John Jenkins then asked the Magistrates to buy the Durumtolah Bazar of him for the town, and said that if it did not yield them more than a thousand Rupees a month, he was mistaken. It is not often that we are permitted to witness such an instance of public spirit and generosity, as a man's voluntarily offering to give up,—we suppose for a small sum—a concern that yielded him a clear profit of a thousand Rupees a month, in the hope of benefitting the general interests of the town.

— In consequence of the close of the 5 Per Cent. Loan, the Agra Bank has closed its six per cent. deposit, and will in future allow only five Per Cent.

MONDAY, JANUARY 30.

— The arrangement which has been for some time on the tapis for the appointment of a Secretary of Finance, an Indian Chancellor of the Exchequer, has been at length completed, and the last official Gazette announces the elevation of Mr. Dorin to this new, arduous and important post. A fitter selection, whether we regard the natural or acquired qualifications of the individual, could not have been made.

— The native Artillery men of the 2d Company 6th Battalion of Artillery, lately commanded by Major Abbott, have expressed an earnest desire that whenever they may be again called into active service, they may have the same guns with which they served at Jellalabad. The Governor General has acceded to their wishes, and further directed that the guns shall have the word "Jellalabad" inscribed on them, and be henceforward considered as belonging to that Company.

— Messrs. Currie and Co., the proprietors of Jack Hinton and the other popular works of Mr. Lever, have issued an address to all land pirates in the British Colonies, announcing to the Newspaper proprietors in the East and elsewhere, who are in the habit of reprinting those works, that it is their intention to prosecute them for infringing the Copyright. The bibliopolists will find, as the Hurkaru justly says, that they have been cutting their own throats. These republications are the cheapest and best means of advertising these books, and for one instance in which they arrest the sale of the work, they promote it in ten.

— The last accounts from Bundlekund, published in the Agra Ukhbar, are any thing but satisfactory. The fugitive Rajah of Jeitpore has taken refuge with the Rajah of Tehree, who can bring 20,000 men into the field, and a well appointed artillery. It is said that our troops now in that country are not equal to the task of subduing them in their mountain and jungle fastnesses as the hot winds are approaching; but it must be evident that to allow a disaffected power of such magnitude to exist in the heart of our own territories would be the heighth of imprudence. The article will be found among our extracts.

— As every thing connected with the Somnath Gates possesses a particular interest, we record, on the authority of the Delhi Gazette, that these inauspicious gates, the emblem of Mahomedan humiliation, are to be pompously paraded through the streets of Delhi; where the scarlet and gold trappings for the car are now in progress. Our contemporary designates it the 'scarlet' abomination.

— At the meeting held at the Town Hall on Saturday last, it was resolved to present an address to Mr. Greenlaw, the indefatigable promoter of steam communication between Calcutta and England; as well as a piece of plate with a suitable inscription, and if the funds allowed of it, to procure a statue or a portrait of him. Mr. George Thompson addressed the assembly in a speech, such as was never before heard within the walls of the Town Hall. We have not room for the whole of the proceedings, but we have given his speech entire from our contemporaries.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 31.

— A charge of Forgery has been brought against the Editor of the Englishman, and he has been held to bail to answer any Bill which might be found against him by the Grand Jury. The charge appears from the proceedings in the Supreme Court yesterday, utterly groundless. Indeed, the Chief Justice himself said that there was not enough to commit on such a charge. It appears that a Native sirkar took a Bill drawn by Mr. Stocqueler and accepted by Mr. Hurry, to this latter gentleman who declared it a forgery. The native went to the Police, and the Magistrate without sending for Mr. Hurry or Mr. Stocqueler, issued a warrant for the apprehension of the latter. Mr. Stocqueler had written Mr. Hurry's name across the bill in the presence of the native, in consequence of permission which Mr. Hurry had given him to that effect. Mr. Hurry, who subsequently paid the Bill, confessed that he might have given Mr. Stocqueler leave to sign for him as acceptor.

— The accounts from Scinde received through the Bombay Times, extends to the 9th of January. Major Outram, who had been summarily dismissed from his appointment in Scinde, the tranquillity of which he had maintained at a time when Affghanistan was boiling with rage against us, had been permitted temporarily to rejoin the appointment, though under what arrangement, we know not. His arrival at once turned the tide of affairs. The prospects of war have vanished; and there is a certain hope that the Ameers will accede to all the demands of the Governor General.

— The Editorship of the Medical Journal, so long in the hands of Dr. Corbyn, has been transferred to Mr. Grant, the eminent artist.

— The Ceylon papers state, that a Medal with representations of a Lion, an Elephant, a Mountain and a Cocoanut grove, and an inscription splendidly executed, had been presented at a large meeting held at the Queen's House by his Excellency the Governor, in the presence of Lord Elphinstone, to Don Solomon Dias Abeyewikkreme Jayetilleke Senewiratne Bandarenayeke, Esq. Modliar of the Governor's Gate, and Modliar of the Udugaha and Gangeboddle Pattoos of the Cina Corle, &c. &c. by the inhabitants of the two Pattoos in testimony of his exemplary conduct.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 1.

— Major Eldred Pottinger has been honourably acquitted. The Court of Enquiry has expressed a "strong conviction that throughout the whole period of the painful position in which Major Pottinger was so unexpectedly placed, his conduct was marked by a degree of energy and manly firmness, that stamps his character as one worthy of high admiration." Bravissimo! We wish Mr. Maddock had told us that the Governor General, had much satisfaction in directing the publication of this paragraph.

— By a Proclamation dated the 19th of January, the Governor General directs the concentration at Agra of the public offices connected with the administration of the North West Provinces, and orders that the Sudder Board and the Sudder Court shall be permanently fixed at Agra. The only objection to this movement is, that Agra is not so centrical as Allahabad. Still however, the extreme station to which the jurisdiction of the Western Court extends, is less distant from Agra, than the limit of the Court in the Lower Provinces is from Calcutta.

— The Hindoostan has reached Madras speedily. She left the Sandheads on the 17th at 2 P. M. and anchored in Madras roads on the 20th at 8 P. M. performing the voyage in seventy-eight hours.

— The latest account from Assam is to the 22d of January. The Singphos are coming down, says the letter, and the troops are moving up. A Native letter describes them as amounting to 5 or 6000 men.

CONTEMPORARY SELECTIONS.

MR. GEORGE THOMPSON'S SPEECH AT THE MEETING IN HONOUR OF C. B. GREENLAW, ESQ.

Mr. Archdeacon and Gentlemen,

I beg to thank the Committee who have arranged the business of this meeting, for the honour they have done me, in appointing me to move one of the resolutions on the present interesting occasion. As a stranger, equally unconnected with the Commerce and the Government of this country, I am destitute of any title to the distinction thus conferred upon me. But, as a friend to both, and a most ardent well-wisher to the prosperity of British India, and, more especially, as a large participator in the benefits which have resulted from Steam Navigation, I feel that I am not wholly out of place, in an assembly like the present—convened for the purpose of recording, in some enduring form, the gratitude of those around me, to one who for twenty years has laboured, with a zeal undaunted by ridicule in the first place, and difficulties of every description afterwards, to effect those marvellous changes which we see around us. (Cheers.) I could wish I were more intimately acquainted with the history of the anxieties and trials of the gentleman to whose public worth and services you have met to do honour. For, Sir, in the study of man, if there be one thing which I desire to know more than another, it is, what passes in the bosom of him who is the solitary originator of some great movement, upon which the world frowns with coldness, leaving him for years to prosecute in loneliness and helplessness his high career. I would know, if I could, what were his feelings when the thought first burst upon him; what were his early trials and agonies during the period of obstruction and opposition; what his feelings when the first glimpse of success is vouchsafed, and what his feelings in the hour of final triumph, when the whispers of ridicule are changed into the shout of applause (loud cheers.) It may be sufficient however for me, in the presence of those who possess a knowledge of these things, to have witnessed the maturity and triumph of his labours, and to feel as I do, in common with those around me, deeply indebted for the benefits which have been derived from his extraordinary exertions. It would be both easy and pleasant to dilate upon the general advantages of Steam Communication—on the value of a discovery, by means of which, we of Great Britain, reach the shores of America in ten days, and the city of Palaces in sixty (cheers.) I have myself reaped in no inconsiderable degree, perhaps I may say more than any one else here, the benefits flowing from this discovery. By the aid of Steam, I have traversed again and again, the Forth, the Tay, and the Clyde of romantic Scotland—the Thames, the Severn, the Mersy and the Humber of England—the Hudson, the Mohaw, the Merimack and the Delaware, of America; and, more recently, the Mediterranean, the Nile, the Red Sea, and last, though not least among the achievements of Steam power, the Pomban passage in India, literally passing in a few moments, from the Gulf of Manar into the Bay of Bengal (cheers.) But for Steam Navigation, I should never have ventured to hope for the realization of my intense desire to tread the shores of this ancient and magnificent country. I should not have had the time, even had I possessed the courage, to brave the stormy spirit of the Cape, and come hither by the now antiquated and unfashionable method of sailing on board an Indiaman. As it was, however, gratification of the very highest order was promised me during every stage of the journey, from the moment that I lost sight of the white cliffs of England, until I beheld the low but fertile shores of the Hoogley. Nor, was I disappointed. On board the Oriental, we skirted, in a few hours, the Bay of Biscay, celebrated in immortal poetry and matchless song, for its terrific storms, and fatal shipwrecks—we saw Lisbon—we saw Cintra—we gazed upon the lowlands of Portugal, and the highlands of Spain—we reached the impregnable rock of Gibraltar, where

Europe and Afric on each other gaze!

Land of the dark-eyed maid and dusky moor; we walked the waters of the Classic Sea, "where burning Sappho loved and sung," surveying, the while, the mountains on either hand, resembling giant sentinels of hostile camps—we had ample time to see the far famed lions of Malta, and, in sixteen days we were in Egypt, treading the ruins of the city founded by the Macedonian Hero, and surveying the stupendous fragments of a fallen empire and an older world. (Cheers.) By the aid of Steam, we ascended the Nile, and stood in awe before the everlasting Pyramids. From the deck of a Steamer, we saw the frontiers of the holy land, floating at the time over the spot where the sea disparted, and made a wall on either side for the Exodus of God's chosen people from bondage. From the same vessel we saw a-far off, lifting its head to heaven, the hoary summit of Mount Sinai, where was heard the voice of God in thunder and where was promulgated the Law which teaches man his duty to his Creator and his brother. (Cheers.) Again, we passed along the shores, made famous by the exploits of the Prophet of Mecca—those sandy regions, which poured forth hosts of religious warriors, unfurling the green banner of their leader, and who with the Koran in one hand, and the sword in the other, reached France on the one side, while they crossed the Indus on the other, and descended upon this country, where the sceptre of the Mogul has now passed into the hands of the representative of our beloved Queen, and where the mild mandates of Christianity, will, I trust, take the place of the stern edicts of Mahomet. All these, and other scenes besides, too many to be specified, now appealing to on patriotism, and now to our pity, now firing our imagination, and now filling us with wonder; reviving our historical recollections, embodying our poetical conceptions, and quickening all our religious emotions; all these we beheld in little more than a month, and at last stood in health and safety on these shores, amidst all the evidences of British Supremacy, and the elements of exhaustless wealth. (Cheers.) But, the friendly aid of steam did but desert us here. We again availed ourselves of its power. We passed along the shores of Malabar. We rounded the Cape at its very base, and, instead of circumnavigating Ceylon, we crossed Adams bridge by water, and gave three cheers for the success of the first British Steamer, that had ever shewn the way through the strait of Ramisseram, to the gulf of Bengal. (Cheers.) We visited and viewed the presidency of Madras, we freighted our ship with "Sillor," for the service of the state, and in sixty days we were straining our optics, while looking upon the carcase of the huge alligator, sunning himself amidst the mud and slime of your own river. (Cheers.) We therefore, who feel our obligations to Steam Navigation, without whose aid the privilege would have been denied to some of us, of standing in this hall to-day, cannot hear without respect and gratitude, the name of one, who has been a pioneer in the glorious work, and may be said to have brought the ends of the earth together, by demonstrating, that time and distance may, comparatively, be annihilated, and a journey, once long, monotonous, and perilous, turned into one of almost incredible rapidity, of Oriental ease and luxury, and of the highest intellectual enjoyment to all, who have souls that can admire what is grand in nature, or stupendous in art, or rich in production, or who cherish any desire to look upon the places, where deeds have been enacted, in science, in learning and in religion, in the cabinet, the camp and the forum, the most extraordinary in the history of our race, (cheers.)

Gentlemen, a thousand thoughts crowd upon the mind in connection with the object of this meeting. When we ask ourselves, either what Steam Navigation has done, or what it seems ordained to do, the answer comes from all parts of the globe, and futurity itself replies, that it will be the grand instrument of linking man to man, and nation to nation, of extending commerce, diffusing thought, promoting discovery, and binding the tribes of the earth in common interests, and intimate acquaintanceships, and harmonious agreement together, (cheer.) Take a recent illustration of what I will not hestitate to call, one of the purest blessings emanating from the employment of this mighty agent, for the purposes of communication between persons in distant parts of the world. A few weeks ago, and thousands of families in England were in a state of indescribable anxiety, amounting often to agony, in consequence of the uncertainty hanging over the fate of beloved relatives, engaged in this part of the world, in prosecuting warlike operations either on the one side or the other of the spot on which we stand, (cheers.) It pleased Divine Providence who is the arbiter among nations, to grant success to British diplomacy and British arms in both regions, and to cause the sword to be sheathed, with the prospect of, I trust a long repose, (cheers.) Under these circumstances, suppose the means of conveying the heart-gladdening tidings to England had been such only as we possessed twenty years ago, (hear, hear.) Then, instead of thanksgivings in public, and the gratitude of ten thousand hearts, ascending like incense to God in private—caused by a knowledge of the present and future safety of far distant friends, there would have been two, it might have been three months of additional mental torture, (cheers.) Oh, who can tell the mighty sum of human suffering prevented, and joy diffused, in consequence of the ability, through the agency of Steam, of wafting tidings to England, which made our Queen exult upon her throne, the spirit of the merchant revive on the exchange, the heart of the widowed wife to sing for joy, and the peasant in his cot to thank God for the safety of his soldier son, (great cheering.) Sir, methinks, that if the gentleman we have met to honour had no other reward, it would suffice to compensate him for all his toils and all his vexations to know, that he had been the instrument in any degree of facilitating the transmission of intelligence that had carried hope and joy to the bosoms of all these. Whatever may be the result of this meeting, he will have the thanks and blessings of all who in their grief and desolation, were made glad by the news, which, without the aid of Steam Communication with England, could not have reached them in so short a time, (cheers.) Sir, the vessel that carried these tidings, though it carried neither silver nor gold, carried a more costly cargo than either, in the shape of those slips of paper that proclaimed, that grim-visaged war had smoothed his wrinkled front, and that ere long the wife, the maid, and the aged mother, would clasp the son, the husband and the lover to their breast. And here, suffer me, in one word, to connect the Steam Vessel and the Printing Press together. For, while the one multiplies with almost inconceivable rapidity the thoughts of men, the other carries them over the face of the Globe. Hence, by means of the two, we speak, as it were, in the presence of all nations. What is this day spoken in this hall, will, by the Press of this city, be made to receive a new form—the living voice will be turned into the mute yet speaking characters of the newspaper—the breath of the speaker will not be lost, but make an indelible impression on paper, and the Steamer will carry what we here say to the utmost verge of the blue waters over which it marches. And shall we feel no gratitude to those, through whose genius and perseverance all this has been brought about. Breathes there one man, who does not rejoice in the achievements won in so essential a department of usefulness and power. It cannot be! Our thanks are due, first to those illustrious men, who made known the potency and adaptation of the Steam Engine. And, they have had their reward. The names of our Watts, and Bells, and Fultons, will live as long as Science lives, to shed its blessings on mankind. Our thanks are next due to those, whose unwearied industry—whose constant appeals to the various motives of men around them—have issued in making the genius of the mighty dead available, for every useful and holy purpose to the present and surviving generations. And, if half that I have heard of the self-denying zeal and disinterested industry of the gentleman whose claims are before you, be true—his name deserves to endure in imperishable characters, in company with those who have taken rank among the benefactors of mankind. It is delightful to know, that in regard to this most deserved testimonial, there can be no difference of opinion—no elements of discord. (Cheers.) That it has peculiar claims to the countenance of every man, whatever be the objects he desires to see accomplished. Steam ships are the servants of all The steamer that enters your river, brings a pastor to a congregation, that are as sheep without a shepherd—a wife to the arms of her waiting husband—a man of Science to explore the riches of the country—a capitalist to increase its wealth and extend its commerce—literature for those who read—dainties for the epicure—news for the politician, instructions for the servants of the Imperial Government—and when you wish to send to those you love, some token of your unfading remembrance and affection—or to visit once again the scenes of your infancy and the graves of your fathers—there lies the steamer, who in your service, will carry your message, or convey your persons, —and, defying the winds to do their worst, will triumphantly bear you or your token, to their destined port. (Cheers.)

Let the natives of India come forward in support of the object of this meeting. If I am asked, why they should support it, I am compelled to say, that the benefits which they will eventually derive from Steam Communication are so varied and so vast, that I cannot trust myself to give a reply. Suffice it to say, that through this medium they will learn to know England, and England will learn to know them. Knowledge will beget intimacy—intimacy will lead to friendship—and friendship will ripen into love. Have we not here, a living witness of the power of steam, to bring together and link together, the natives of the two countries. Have we not here, one who has proved the power of this almost miraculous agent, to carry him over the scenes I have mentioned, and to bring him even into the presence of the Queen of our Isles, and into fraternal communion with the good and great of our land. Have we not here, the first fruits of this improved means of communication, and are we not warranted in believing, that Dwarkanath Tagore will not be among the first to visit or the last to return from England, with good tidings of that far country, and proofs, in the enlargement of his views—the friendships he has found—and the kindness he has received, of the benefits of travelling, even to the seat and centre of Government. (Cheers.) We are warranted in believing all this, and much more. In proportion then as we estimate the benefits we have derived, the good we are now enjoying, and the objects we hope to see accomplished through the Agency of Steam Communication, let our gratitude be to the man, who has done so much in the cause. Let our gratitude take a substantial form. Let our motto be, "deeds not words," and on the pillar that commemorates the acts of the best friends of India, and the world, let there be seen the name of—CHARLES BECKET GREENLAW. (Loud cheers.)—Hurkaru.

HORTICULTURAL EXHIBITION.

The vegetable exhibition at the Town-Hall yesterday, was very well attended. There was a large crowd of malees with various products of the season, and no lack of eager customers to buy them, for we observed some of the vegetables selling off, even before the assembling of the Agricultural judges appointed for the occasion. The products of the present season as exhibited on this occasion, were generally superior to those of last year, the season having proved so favourable for the growth of European vegetables.

There were several very excellent specimens of celery, shewing a marked improvement during the last few years in the art of blanching, though still wanting in closeness of stalk. Half-a-dozen samples of that superior but rare vegetable in India, the American Bush Squash, were likewise exhibited, as also a couple of baskets of the English Broad Bean, so seldom to be met with in the Calcutta Market. The Red Cabbage, Cabbage, Lettuce, and Leek were of very fair quality. A few baskets of Pot Herbs (Sage, Marjorm, Thyme, &c.) and some Tenasserim Yams were likewise to be found among the collection.—Hurk. Jan. 27.

COURTS MARTIAL.

Head Quarters, Camp Indgurh, 13*th Jan.*, 1843.

At a General Court Martial re-assembled at Ferozepore, on Wednesday, the 4th day of January, 1843, Captain William Anderson, of the 59th Regiment Native Infantry, placed in arrest by Order of His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, was arraigned on the following charges:—

Charges.—"1st. REMARKS BY HIS EXCELLENCY THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF.

I am most fully convinced, by the evidence produced upon these five trials, that these officers, Captains Anderson, Boyd and Troup, Brevet Captain Waller and Lieutenant Eyre, had, each and all of them, full and sufficient authority to repair to the protection of Mahomed Akbar Khan; and I fully concur in the honourable acquittal pronounced in each case by the Court.

It is equally borne out by the evidence, that Captains Anderson and Boyd could not have returned from Akbar's bivouac to the head quarters of the force, according to the orders sent to them to do so.

(Signed) J. NICOLLS, General, and Commander-in-Chief.

The five officers above named are released from arrest, and directed to return to their duty.

Head-Quarters, Camp Sirhind, 14*th Jan.*—At a General Court Martial assembled in the Camp of the Army of Reserve, at Ferozepore, on Tuesday, the 27th day of December, 1842, Lieutenant Colonel Thomas Palmer, of the 27th N. I., placed in arrest by order of His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, was arraigned on the following charges:—

Charges.—"1st. For having, on or about the 6th of March, 1842, shamefully delivered up to the enemy the fortress and post of Ghuznie, of which he was commanding officer, and which it was his duty to defend.

"2d. For having, on or about the 10th of March, 1842, at Ghuznie, been taken prisoner by want of due precaution.

"3d. For having, on the same occasion, by want of due precaution, and by his authority and example, caused the European commissioned officers of the regiment to fall into the hands of the enemy, thereby leaving the regiment without a proper commander, under circumstances of great danger and difficulty."

Finding.—"The court, upon the evidence before them, are of opinion, that the prisoner Lieutenant Colonel Palmer, of the 27th N. I., is "On the first charge, not guilty.

"On the second charge, not guilty.

"On the third charge, not guilty.

"And the court do, accordingly, most fully and honorably acquit the prisoner Lieutenant Colonel Thomas Palmer, of the 27th N. I., of the whole and every part of the charges preferred against him."

Approved and confirmed.

REMARKS BY HIS EXCELLENCY THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF.

I entirely and heartily concur in the justice of this honourable verdict. The circumstances under which Lieutenant Colonel Palmer surrendered Ghuznie to the Affghans, having been such as he could neither control, alter, or alleviate.

The Lieutenant Colonel is to return to his duty.

DIVISION AFTER ORDERS BY MAJOR-GENERAL M'CASKILL, K. H.

Camp Ferozepore, 10th January, 1843.

The force under Major General Pollock, C. B. having been directed to be dissolved from this day, Major General McCaskill will not deny himself the pleasure of publicly bidding farewell to the division which has been so long under his supervision in times so fertile in important events. To the Officers commanding brigades under him his thanks are due, they shall be offered briefly but sincerely.

Sir Robert Sale's is a name already inscribed on one of the proudest pages of his country's history, and embalmed on its enduring gratitude. To offer praise to him would be redundant. It suffices to say that he was between April 1842, and January 1843, that which he has ever been a leader meriting success by his boldness, skill, and ready zeal in executing the orders of his seniors.

Brigadier Monteath, C. B. has received already the most significant tokens of his sovereign's approbation, and during the campaign now brought to a close, he was entrusted with a separate command in one very delicate enterprize, and at the head of his brigade had, on other occasions, to perform duties before the enemy requiring no ordinary resolution and address. Every where he has been found equal and superior to all that circumstances have demanded.

The gallant conduct of Brigadier Tulloch, at Istaliff, came under the personal observation of the Major General, and he must not fail, very pointedly, to notice it.

If Brigadier Wild's opportunities of distinguishing himself have been less brilliant, this, it must be remembered, is unavoidably the case with some portion of every large force, his attention to the details of his brigade, and solicitude to supply the wants and alleviate the sufferings of his soldiers, when their ranks were fearfully thinned by disease, are worthy of all commendation.

The divisional staff have been all that could be desired. Major Havelock, C. B. Her Majesty's 13th Regiment, Deputy Assistant Adjutant General, has been indefatigable in the discharge of his arduous duties. To his previous experience in Affghan affairs and knowledge of the country and its languages the Major General has been deeply indebted, and his activity in the field, and alacrity in fulfilling, and even anticipating the wishes of his superiors, have commanded his esteem and admiration; he is happy in this opportunity in bearing testimony to his value as a Staff Officer, and claims a further advancement in his profession.

Lieutenant Mayne, 37th Native Infantry, Deputy Assistant Quarter-Master General, has, with this division, been as energetic, gallant and intelligent as in the blockade of Jellalabad, or the former campaigns in Affghanistan, in the course of which his name has so often been placed on honourable record.

Lieutenant Bethune, Her Majesty's 9th Regiment, as Aid-de-Camp, has merited the Major General's best thanks, and his conduct in this his first campaign, has been full of activity and promise. Surgeons Davidson, M. D. 10th Light Cavalry, and Havil, M. D. Her Majesty's 31st Regt. and Assistant Surgeon Harvey, Her Majesty's 9th, have successively given complete satisfaction in the discharge of the medical duties.—Delhi Gazette.

BUNDLEKUND.

"Our lastest intelligence from Bundlekund informs us that the force, which has lately been much broken and divided, is now advancing on Theree with stealthy steps, such as school-boys use, when making approaches on a wasp's nest.

"The Jeitpore man has taken refuge at Theree, and notwithstanding all Major Sleeman's threats, they will give him up at no price. The Agent is in a fix; he fears collision with so powerful a State, and he is fully aware that the forces now at his disposal are insufficient for the job.

"The Thereeman can at any time bring into the field 20,000 fighting men, as well as a large and well appointed artillery; true, one of our battalions on an open plain would be a match for 5,000 of their undisciplined troops; but not so in the jungles, and if they are determined to oppose us, they may do so with such effect in their narrow passes, that not a man of our force would escape.

"If Native report speak truth, it is their intention to show their teeth; they are now endeavouring to strengthen their ties of friendship with the powerful State of Dutteah, and we would advise Major Sleeman to be very cautious how he proceeds. He no doubt finds political work troublesome; principally from its novelty—not so easy, perhaps, as taking the evidence of an approver or tucking up a thug; but should he succeed in eventually tranquillizing Bundlekund, India will owe him much. He has ably followed out the policy of his talented predecessor, Mr. Fraser, with the one exception of making over the Jansi country to the depraved and imbecile Rajah; this was done on the 1st instant, and already has the man shown how unfit he is to govern.

"In the neighbourhood of Saugor, plundering goes on the same as ever. The Madras and other troops in chase have never been able to fall in with the plunderers, nor will they ever meet them; the jungles are such that two large bodies might pass within a hundred yards of each other and neither be aware of the proximity of the other.

"We feel persuaded that the Boondelah Chiefs will keep such of our troops as are in Bundlekund, on the constant move, during the approaching hot weather. It is their season for shikar; having cut and stored their corps they take down their matchlocks and swords from the wall, and go forth to plunder. And why should they not? Did not their fathers do so before them?"—Agra Ukhbar.

SCINDE.

We have intelligence of the 6th inst. from Sukkur, brought by the steamer Zenobia from Kurrachee. The arrival of Major OUTRAM in General NAPIER'S camp, on the evening of the 4th, had entirely altered the complexion of affairs, and dissipated for the present all apprehension of hostilities. It is stated, indeed, that the show of resistance the AMEERS seemed disposed to make was intended alone to cover their honour—to show to their brother Princes that they yielded to our wishes only on compulsion, when our force was overwhelming, and resistance hopeless. It is a striking illustration of the influence of a straight-forward, honest, manly character, even amongst the most cowardly and deceitful—that the mere appearance of Major OUTRAM in the field of diplomacy should occasion a change in the troubled atmosphere of Scindian politics of such magical completeness and celerity. He became at once on his arrival the general referee of all parties—as if he had been invested with sovereign authority to decree their fate, instead of holding a temporary appointment with the most indefinite and uncertain powers. General NAPIER knew that in his hands British honour and interests were safe—that he know the "capabilities" of the country with whose sovereigns we had to deal, and the trustworthiness of those rulers themselves. The AMEERS felt that they had now a diplomatist who understood them; who knew what they could concede, and who would not exact more of them than he considered necessary or just. Such is the effect of personal character; this one man—this single-handed JAMES OUTRAM—lately in such high disfavour with the Governor-General—has, in a few days, apparently made more progress in settling matters with the AMEERS, according to our views, than General NAPIER, with an army of seven thousand men, could accomplish in a couple of mouths! We speak without disparagement to the gallant General—diplomacy was not his vocation—he knew not the people with whom he had to deal, and he could not have known them—no more did they know or confide in him. Had it come to a fighting matter, we have no doubt whatever that he would have carried through a campaign as well as any man. We are glad to learn, on undoubted authority, that the illness of Dr. WIGHT, which had caused so much alarm, was of a temporary and comparatively trivial nature, and that he is now perfectly recovered and in good health.—Bombay Times, January 21.

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.

THE MAGISTRACY.

To the Editor of the Friend of India.

SIR,—I have been able no where to find a full report of the late trial in the Supreme Court, which has been so much discussed in the papers, and in which a Mr. Pittar was the defendant on a charge of felony. It appears however by the comments that have been published, that the prisoner was acquitted on the ground that he was resisting an illegal arrest;—i. e. that the person who tried to arrest him, and who was shot at and seriously wounded in the attempt, had been furnished by his principal with what is technically termed a "general warrant."

Mr. Cockburn, the Magistrate of Jessore, must have acted in this case only as a Justice of the Peace, and under the law of England as enjoined by Regulation XV. of 1806 of our Indian Code; and committed the case through the Clerk of the Crown immediately to the Supreme Court Sessions; and it was his duty to have ascertained through the Company's solicitor (Circular Order of Sudder Nizamut Adawlut, No. 34, of 16th November, 1839,) whether the forms adopted by him were regular, the evidence probably sufficient for conviction, and the charge correctly drawn out according to the evidence, before he made his commitment. He might not have been expected of himself to know that all general warrants are notoriously discountenanced by English law; and that all such warrants had been pronounced by the highest legal authorities illegal and void by reason of their uncertainty, as well as palpably unjust, from transferring the grounds of suspicion and arrest from the Magistrate issuing to the subordinate officer executing the warrant; (Blackstone's Comments, vol. 4, page 291,*) but had he followed up the above mentioned Circular Order, he would have been told this, and learned to frame the several Counts of his charge accordingly.

Having allowed thus much, it must also be admitted that Mofussil Magistrates have no means of learning and are not required to learn even the rudiments of English law, as separate from what may be demanded from them as Magistrates under the provisions of Regulation II. of 1796; VI. of 1803, Section 19; XV. of 1806; XX. of 18[illegible]; Act 53 of Geo. III. Cap. 155 and IV. of Geo. IV. Cap. 81 (the Mutiny Act.) As Justices of the Peace, when dealing between two European British subjects, or when treating European British subjects (not in the army) for other offences than mere petty assaults and trespasses, and inconsiderable affrays, they are taught nothing beyond the bare necessity of taking evidence on oath, and committing the offenders with the evidence so taken to the Supreme Court Sessions in Calcutta; and felonies being (fortunately) extremely rare, even for the limited number of Europeans residing in the Interior, there is little or no chance of gaining experience.

I would now beg to enquire under what English law a person making an illegal arrest is to be resisted with fire arms—and the party so resisting to escape with impunity? If the arrest be illegal, the party so arrested must not only be upon a representation immediately set at large, but has also his action for damages for the false imprisonment however temporary, which he has undergone. By the English law too a constable can, without any warrant at all arrest for wounding where felony is likely to ensue,—(as was I believe the case in this instance when Mr. Cockburn issued his first warrant;)—and any person taking his life or dangerously wounding him in the attempt is guilty of murder;† and this too in cases other than those of Hue and Cry, where no warrant is necessary under either English or Anglo-Indian law:—and this being the case, how is it that a constable for the same offence arresting upon stronger grounds, viz not upon his own suspicion and authority, but the authority of a Justice of the Peace under a warrant not known by him (the constable) to be deficient, should be altogether unprotected?

It appears to me both by law and common sense (and English law is oftener at variance with the attribute than Anglo-Indian,) that undue resistance to the taking or the endangering of life of an illegal arrest ordered by a competent authority and executed bonâfide by an accredited Agent may be a misdemeanour of a high order, and punishable accordingly as a resistance of process as well as an act of unjustifiable violence. The maliciously discharging a deadly weapon at any one must under any slight provocation,—even when that provocation is not under a bonâfide act of authority—surely be manslaughter. The case in question probably broke down from there having been a simple count of "shooting at, &c." independent of the "resistance of process with shooting;" but could not the Grand Jury or the Court itself have thrown out the latter or heavier charge, and left it open to the Government Prosecutor to take up the former or lighter charge? Our Courts of Session can, or even order a commitment of themselves; and under which system the ends of justice are most likely to be attained, is obvious enough.

* The issuing of general warrants, says Christian on Blackstone, was declared illegal by a resolution of the House of Commons of 22d April 1766.

† Vide Blackstone on "warrants," and Regulation XX. of 1817, Section 28, Clause 4, passim.

It is much the custom at the Presidencies to rail at our Anglo-Indian Code of laws: but to my mind, after something more than a superficial examination of them, they are infinitely more plainly just, terse, and comprehensible than those of our own country,* even when proferred to us in their most familiar and unprofessional shape. Presidency lawyers are often in the habit of ascribing to carelessness and inattention in the execution of these laws, errors in the laws themselves where none exist. Where do the Regulations permit general warrants, or arrests without warrant except during presence at the perpetration of felonies, and during a "Hue and Cry?" (Reg. XX. of 1817, Section 25.) No where that I can find; and by Regulation IX. of 1807, Section 5, no Magistrate can issue any warrant or a charge preferred by any one until such person, wishing to prosecute, first deposes on oath to the names of the parties and the whole circumstances of the case; while by a Construction of the Sudder Court of the 8th March, 1833, No. 766, the issue of any general process is declared illegal.

It is to be regretted that there is not greater uniformity amongst the Magistrates in their Rules of Practice, and that there is not greater care in selecting candidates for such offices; but all this does not palliate even the terms employed by people at the Presidencies in speaking of their public conduct. It has been lately seen how a decision of the Supreme Court against an irregular act of a Mofussil Magistrate towards a European British subject was at once reversed on an appeal home on the ground that he had acted bonâfide; and in England the county Justices of the Peace are in the constant habit of exceeding their powers and of escaping with impunity upon the same plea, there having been many statues made to protect them in the upright discharge of their offices. They can be sued for no oversights; and great lenity and indulgence when they act irregularly, without malice, is enjoined by law to be extended to them by all constituted Courts of Justice.

Having shown this to be the principle of the English law with regard to Justices of the Peace in England, it is plain a fortiori that to Justices of the Peace in this country, from their being so very seldom required to act as such, the English Courts should be still more lenient and indulgent. It is decidedly not so however; and when the Presidency Judges and lawyers exclaim against the Mofussil laws and their administrators, and the execution of English law by Mofussil Justices, they speak of what they have taken no pains to acquire any knowledge as to the first, and without statutable leniency as to the second; and they also forget that flaws in indictments, writs, warrants and the like are of daily occurrence amongst themselves, and misdirections of juries and differences of opinion not very uncommon with the presiding Judges.

If you think it would answer a good purpose to discuss the law and practice of the Mofussil as regards summons, attachments, commitments and the like, I should be happy to join with others in doing so; when perhaps by a comparison of opinions much might be mutually gained both in knowledge and uniformity of the law and its execution.

I am, your most obedient servant,

MILITARY AUDIT DEPARTMENT.

To the Editor of the Friend of India.

My dear Mr. Editor,—As I do not think in your line of life, you know what retrenchment is, I will explain it to you; an Officer makes out his monthly pay bill and the Deputy Paymaster of his Division honours it. But some eight months afterwards, when the said Officer gets his draft for payment, in the same envelope with it, it is not uncommon to find, a retrenchment bill, setting forth that he is retrenched so and so, for want of such and such a document. That such things are necessary to the welfare of the state, I allow; still it cannot be denied that great and very unnecessary inconvenience and sufferings, are generally inflicted from the manner in which they are issued. I will mention to you my own case, I am in the receipt of between 4 and 500 Rs. a month, and nearly 8 months had passed, when a bill of retrenchment came and reduced my allowance to somewhat less than 100 Rs. This was an unforeseen evil, and the inconvenience was increased by my being ordered on service, within a few days afterwards, when a host of expenses attend all situated as I am, in these troubled times.

Would it not be equally beneficial to the state, and more consistent with the means of Officers, were bills issued requiring the necessary documents, and headed "objectionable charges?" and allowing, say two months, to elapse, before the bill of retrenchment is issued, which would often be prevented altogether, by Officers sending the required papers, in time to save themselves.

In the Madras side, I understand this is the custom; and why it should not be so in Bengal, I know not. Had it been so, I assure you, I and many I am acquainted with, would have been saved much trouble many times.

Believe me, very truly yours,

January 19th, 1843. FISITIMUS.

* It will be in the recollection of many how the Government was sued with success lately on the Civil side of the Supreme Court for a fraud committed by their Agent; and how the said Agent on the criminal side was acquitted of the very same fraud on the prosecution of their employers, —the Government!

EUROPE.

RELIGIOUS.

PORTUGAL AND THE CHURCH OF ROME.—LISBON, OCT 24.—A spirit of resistance to the encroachments of Rome has been manifested here of late, upon which Monsignor Cappaccini probably did not reckon. If the sentiments of the leading politicians be permitted to prevail, and the Court leave Ministers entirely independent, I am inclined to think that the negotiations with the Holy See will even be suspended, rather than accede to the latest requisition which has proceeded from the College of Cardinals, and which it is impossible to characterize as other than monstrous—namely, to accept three out of the eight episcopal nominations of the Crown, and plant purely Papal selections in the remaining dioceses. Their Eminences are working herein with characteristic shrewdness upon woman's weakness, both the Queen and the Infanta Isabel being known (as I mentioned in my last) to be actuated by a most tremulous anxiety to become reconciled to Rome at the earliest possible period. This feeling has been ably wrought upon by Churchmen here, devoted to Rome, and by their lady instruments. The wholesale robbery of the convent property, the extinction of religious orders, the secularisation of vast numbers of ecclesiastical edifices, and the turning of thousands of religious persons adrift upon the world, with the slender provision which makes the very name of an egresso a synonyme for poverty—all these considerations, with a touch of superstition, an allegation that Donna Maria is responsible for the acts of all her Governments, and a hint that her heroic father's soul may perhaps be in jeopardy for having first put his hand to the wheel, naturally and inevitably produce a strong, an almost irresistible effect. Ecclesiastical management, intrigue, and contrivances, were never in more potent force than they are to-day in Lisbon. Against these forces the powers of resistance to be set off are those possessed by Ministers individually, and their ultimate responsibility to the Cortes. Upon this last, reliance is chiefly to be placed. Whenever the subject was mooted during the last three months' session, it was taken up with such a warmth in all parts of the Chamber of Deputies, and dealt with in so decisive a tone by the leading men, that no set of Ministers daring to fritter away the privileges of the Lusitanian Church, could face the indignant representatives of the nation. Sousa Azevedo, with whose portfolio this subject is more immediately connected, is by no means likely to be easily outwitted. He is a man of considerable ability, of an energetic and determined character (in this respect the very reverse of his predecessor), and as little controlled by scruples as any diplomatist in Europe. Having been a very good Miguelite in his time, he will now, according to all analogy, be very much opposed to high-church principles, to prove the sincerity of his conversion. Again, Gomes de Castro, who is also, Foreign Minister, a high consultant authority, having been a most intimate adherent and adviser of Dom Pedro, is in honour and in duty bound to sustain Dom Pedro's handiwork. The appointment of these two Ministers was not over acceptable in the Rua de S. Felix, where the little ecclesiastical court of the Nunciatura is fixed. It was here one fine morning, while the representative of Rome and his chief aide were reading their breviaries under the shade of the orange grove in the high-walled garden, that the news came upon them like a thunder-clap of the ex-prior of Martyres, the interpreter to the Nunciate, and an Under Secretary, having been arrested on a charge of murder during the Migoelite usurpation. Cappaccini's breviary is said to have dropt into a deep well by his side, and Vizzardelli to have exhibited a pied de nez of unprecedented dimensions. The authorities alleged that the arrest was made in the ordinary course of justice, but this was merely a blind for the public. It was intended, and extremely well adapted, by the clever Minister of Justice, as a pungent hint to the ecclesiastics who, since their arrival in Lisbon, have been playing so deep and hitherto so successful a game for Rome.

Monsignor Cappaccini is of a modest and unassuming character, but, as I mentioned in a former letter, he is "a fox in the fleeciest sheep's clothing." His policy is entirely molework, unostentatious, quiet, but extremely effective. Like most of the dignified ecclesiastics of his country, he is too well acquainted with the fine arts not to know that in the antique Apollos the muscular strength of the arm is veiled under its grace of colour. The internuncio accordingly hits hard without noise or grimace. His church-militant sword is wreathed like that of Harmodius. Imperturbable as Talleyrand, who was as good a hand at a high mass as Cappaccini, he can make the most outrageous requisition without moving a muscle of his face. Witness his late proposal. His habits of life are extremely simple, this being now the fashions amongst the various Papal officers; the example of Geogory XVI. during the twelve years of his Pontificate, having radiated extensively through the Church, and secured a number of imitators. To illustrate the character of this amiable Pontiff, I may mention the fact, not hitherto, I believe, made public, that, when some twelve months since the Apostle of Temperance in Ireland, Father Mathew, forwarded a copy, in gold, of his famous medal to the Holy Father, by way of tribute to the head of his Church, the Pope accepted it literally as binding him to the pledge, and added, that since his elevation to the Pontificate he had never tasted wine. Monsignor Cappaccini likewise observes an almost Turkish abstinence in the use of wines and his cuisine is of the simplest kind, as may be inferred from the following fact:—The son of his predecessor in the house which he occupies in the Rua St. Prior (a young Englishman), having called on him shortly after his arrival here, to ascertain whether he would take at a valuation a very serviceable kitchen range which remained on the premises, the Legate, who attempts the English language, replied, "I tank you ver much, no; my servant make my dinner wid his fingère!" By habits like these a reputation for sanctity is sometimes acquired, and when (which is more than possible) Monsignor Cappaccini shall have attained to the triple crown, he will, perhaps, like Sextus Quintus, elevate his head to a more erect posture, cast off the slough of assumed humility, and attempt to rule the world with a Hildebrand's rod. It is evidently a deep game that the Portuguese Internuncio is playing. If he succeed in resuming the privileges of the Lusitanian Church, he will have done more towards the establishment of ultramontane principles, than has been accomplished since Pius IV. re-opened the Council of Trent, and obtained, through the mediation of Catherine of Medicis, the revocation by the French Prelates of their protest against the pretensions of Rome. Upon his successful return, he will be made at once a Cardinal. His influence will be pre-eminent in the Sacred College, and the chair of Peter will eventually be his. It is understood to have been at his suggestion, that the golden rose was forwarded, six months since, to Donna Maria, as a token of reconciliation and pontifical love. This mark of distinguished consideration was the more valuable, as the House of Braganza had not been so favoured for a period of 800 years; and coming the very week after Cappaccini, in the name of the Holy Father, stood sponsor for the Infanta Don John, and being, moreover, a most splendid specimen of workmanship, it quite turned Donna Maria's head, to the imminent peril of the privileges of the Portuguese Church. For be it remembered, that Donna Maria, like Queen Victoria, is a primate within her own dominions—the former would be a portly figure in the pallium; I wonder how the latter would become the mitre. The College of Cardinals has evinced an unnecessary degree of timidity in placing Monsignor Vizzardelli as a viceroy over Cappaccini—in vulgar parlance, a spy upon his proceedings. It is true that the latter was formerly not only suspected, but known for a Carbonaro. This ebullition of youthful blood has, however, long since past. When Leo XII., in 1824, extinguished Carbonarism in the Pontifical States, Cappaccini speedily saw the error of his ways, commenced the more profitable career of piety and humility, and spoke of no reforms, except those in which he co-operated with the Pontiff, for the remedy of the various abuses which had crept into the Roman Government, especially in the Camara Apostolica. Cappaccini subsequently betook himself to the paths of diplomacy, which that same Pontiff made his moyen departenir, having been Apostolic nuncio in Switzerland, in Dresden, and at other German Courts, and subsequently Ambassador to Louis XVIII. Vimandelli is evidently running a race here with his chief, but his principles are rather too violent for success in the present day. His character is pretty nearly that of Dominic the Inquisitor, and he is understood to have been instrumental in the restoration of the Holy Office at Rome in 1825. But the Internuncio enjoys more than he the favour of Pope Gregory XIV.—Times.

MISCELLANEOUS.

SUMMARY OF THE MONTH.—The summary of the month is the news from India! No topic excites attention but the glorious termination of the war in the East, and hardly any subject is discussed but the probable good results to Great Britain from the success which has attended our brave armies in Affghanistan and China. Political and religious parties unite in considering these events of the most momentous and advantageous character. The Philanthropist rejoices that war is at an end;—the patriot that the fair fame of his own beloved land is amply vindicated from recent disasters and defeats;—the merchant and manufacturer see before them a prospect of once more carrying on successful and greatly extended operations in the vast continent of Asia:—hosts of British families, having connexions and relatives in India, thank God on bended knees that those whom they dearly love, and who have not fallen in the mountain passes, will no longer be exposed to the fierce and deadly attacks of the Affghans and other tribes;—the whole army rejoices at the honour which has been reflected upon it by the deeds of valour performed by a portion of its forces in India; whilst the navy is proud to feel that "Britannia still rules the waves" The lover of his species hopes that from these events will proceed the advance of civilization, and the breaking down of those barriers which still separate man from man and community from community;—whilst the Christian will not fail to thank Him, in whose hands is the event of the battle, for the success with which our arms have been favoured, and the prospects of peace, and of augmented facilities for the introduction of Christianity which are now opened up.

The publication of the intelligence in the morning papers, and its repetition in all the evening journals, created a sensation of joy which it would be impossible to describe. The only doubt which was felt was that which often comes across the mind, even on the receipt of very good news, by private individuals; it seemed "too good to be true." And this natural apprehension that such might be the case, was encouraged by the following passage which proceeded the bulletin in the Times.

The Messager says, "The following intelligence, received by express (the telegraph, no doubt), has been communicated to us." There seemed to be some mystery respecting the source of the news, whether it was official or not. And then the date of "Alexandria, Nov. 5," threw some further doubt about it, inasmuch as, during the progress of the war in the East between Turkey and Mahemet Ali, many wholly incorrect reports and statements of decisive battles, &c. reached England and France from the same quarter.

A second edition of the Times, and one also of the Chronicle on Tuesday morning, happily, however, put an end to all doubts on the subject; for, by an intermediate overland mail, with news from Bombay to the 15th of October, this intelligence, as well as nearly equally satisfactory news from India, arrived; and it soon became known that a TREATY OF PEACE had indeed been concluded with the Chinese Emperor, and a commercial treaty was about being signed.

When the information reached Paris, it was stated "that the British troops had been expelled from Affghanistan." This was a rumour got up by the French authorities to counteract the vexation sure to be produced by the favourable intelligence from China. We are sorry to have to record such facts, as they speak little for the good sense or for the right feeling of the French people. The telegraphic despatch giving the conditions of the China treaty and the news from India, was interrupted by the nightfall on Sunday. It was sent by the French consul at Canton to the French consul at Alexandria. The mail bearing it reached Marseilles on Saturday week last, at four o'clock in the afternoon.

The jealousy and meanness of the local and central French authorities in circulating incorrect reports relating to the fate of the British army in Affghanistan were soon, however, rendered nugatory by the arrival of the intermediate overland mail, which indeed brought intelligence which, whilst it added increased luster to the glory of British arms, was calculated to consolidate our influence and dominion in that portion of India subject to British rule.

The booming of guns and ringing of bells gave an additional zest to the good spirits which persons of all shades of opinions necessarily felt. No one could hear the details without experiencing an individual satisfaction, and, after the first sensation of gratified national pride had somewhat subsided, the better feeling of rejoicing at the liberation of our countrymen furnished a more lasting subject for congratulation. These were the spontaneous feelings of the people; and the press, save one or two disgraceful exceptions, joined in the universal rejoicing. The adverse parties, Tory and Whig, are now at daggers drawn about the policy of the measures, and upon which side ought to fall the glory of our successes. This extreme party feeling at such a moment exhibits bad taste and worse feeling. Surely, if ever there was a time for angry discussion to cease, and political animosity to become silent, it is at such a juncture, when no one with the bluntest feelings or commonest comprehension can fail to add his voice of rejoicing at such cheering intelligence, whose like has not been heard since the French were defeated at Waterloo.

Then followed the proclamation of the Governor General, and The event of this week is most unquestionably the evacuation of Affghanistan. All others are of comparative insignificance. But, as to that subject we have elsewhere specially called the attention of our readers, we shall simply here observe, that public opinion is still greatly divided, and that men of equal integrity, patriotism, and large and general views of public affairs and of our policy in India, are as much as ever opposed to each other on this very interesting and important subject. To the French the intelligence of the evacuation is a matter of great delight, and of spiteful observation and attack. Of course, we are represented, as usual, as blind and savage marauders, who, after having desolated and ruined, ravaged and destroyed crops, women, homes, hearths, and altars, are now retreating, before national Affghan vengeance shall rise to exterminate us! Of course, we are held up to animadversion and reproach for cowardice, and for want of honour! And of course, we are told that, having enriched ourselves by a system of unheard-of spoliation, we now run away from those who, if we remained, would arm to a man against us. But we can smile at these diatribes, and mock such bravadoes.

Before we dismiss in this part of our journal the all-absorbing topic, let us beg that no one Indian reader permits, for a single instant, the thought to cross him that there is an individual in the country who refuses to contribute his share of praise to the universal feeling of congratulation which exists at the bravery and skill of our armies. When reading the strictures passed by the Morning Chronicle on the desire for a general thanksgiving, let him not imagine the writer intends to detract from the merit of the brave troops in the East;—when perusing the bitter recriminations of party journalists, let him believe that it is the unquenchable desire for political controversy, which is the spiteful demon guiding their pens, and adding gall to their ink—let him believe this, for though they blame the policy of the late measures, that cannot lessen the well-earned fame of those who have so faithfully obeyed their orders and performed their duty, and we will vouch that no man of feeling or sense could pen an article in a respectable journal to take one iota from the praise due to our brave countrymen, gained by daring bravery, e'en at the cannon's mouth.—The Atlas.

TRADE.—A beneficial change in our home trade in becoming daily more observable, and the effect is widely extending itself throughout the kingdom. From Lancashire and the north of England very cheering accounts have arrived. The advance in the price of cotton is about a halfpenny per lb, with an active and increasing demand. In the several articles used in the manufacture a decided improvement has taken place, and several vessels have been taken up for China, and more will, of course, be laid upon the station. The wool market at Leeds has been revivified, and the hitherto desponding minds of many of our manufacturers have been cheered by the prospect of a brisk trade during the ensuing winter. At Manchester there has been a surprising change. Some manufacturers, especially of cloths suited to the Indian and Chinese market, and of which cloths there were previously no stocks, asked as much as 9d. per yard advance, which was equal to from 10 to 12 per cent. Some buyers refused these terms but the general opinion is that 6d. may be fairly quoted as the amount of improvement on previous rates. At Liverpool, the fall in trade which began to show itself last week, has received an increased stimulus during the present, and much of hope mingles in the feeling which now pervades the manufacturing and mercantile circles. And independent of the beneficial effects which the restoration of peace cannot fail to have on trade and commerce by removing suspense and uncertainty, a most extensive field for British enterprise has been opened, and the entire Eastern world, with the exception of Japan, is now laid open to our merchants. In fact, it is impossible to estimate the height which trade will attain in the altered circumstances of that populous and productive hemisphere.—Ibid.

BELGIUM.—It is well known to the readers of the ATLAS that General Vandersmissen, a Belgian by birth, and an officer in the service of the King of Holland in 1830 the year before last obtained permission of the King of the Belgians to re-enter the Belgian army, but last year engaged in a conspiracy against the government of his country. For this act he was tried, found guilty, and sentenced to death. This judgment was reversed, and he was condemned to the galleys. King Leopold exercised his mercy, and mitigated the punishment to imprisonment for life. He has, however, escaped from prison, and the following are the details of an event which has set all Belgium in commotion:—Lady Vandersmissen is an English woman, one of the daughters of the late Admiral Graves. It seems that Madame Vandersmissen had obtained permission to enter the prison of the Petit Carmes at ten o'clock in the morning, and to stop till four in the afternoon. It is between these hours that the public are admitted. The General had for some days feigned sickness, which afforded a pretext for his wife to prolong her visits. On Sunday the General was in his room with his wife and his two sons, when about eight o'clock the turnkey saw the three latter pass, and let them go out without suspicion. Soon afterwards, according to his duty, which he only half performed, he opened the prisoner's door, and, to be sure that the General was within, he wished him a good night. The General did not answer, but the keeper heard some one cough This satisfied him, whereas he ought to have convinced himself by examination that the General was there. Our readers will, of course, understand that the person who coughed was Madame Vandersmissen, and that the General, dressed in his wife's clothes, had left the prison with his two sons. The night passed, and the escape of the General was unknown to every one in the prison. In the morning Madame Vandersmissen was going to leave the jail, when the turnkey said to her, "It seems that you have passed the night here?" "Yes; I have obtained permission to do so, my husband being ill:" on which the turnkey opened the gate for her. At three o'clock, as the General did not call for any thing, the officers entered his room, and found that he had escaped. Notice was immediately sent to the Attorney-General, and domiciliary visits were paid to all the houses in which it was thought probable that he might have passed the night. The director and three keepers of the prison of the Petit Carmes have been suspended from their functions in consequence of his escape. A judicial investigation was immediately commenced, and still continues. Circulars containing a description of the fugitive have been sent in all directions. It appears that some persons were waiting for General Vandermissen at a short distance from the prison. They threw a cloak on his shoulders and proceeded to a spot where horses were ready, which the fugitives instantly mounted, and taking the road from Scharebeck to Eva and Westerloo, at half-past eleven on the following day they were in a place of safety, exhausted with fatigue; they had not stopped a moment by the way. The riders were obliged to be lifted from their horses, and the poor beasts immediately fell to the ground. The magistrates have received information that Madame Vandersmissen and her youngst son have arrived at Aix-la-Chapelle. The son, who has been arrested since the flight of his father, is not permitted to see any one in the prison.—Atlas.

THE LATE STORM AT MADEIRA.—FUNCHAL, OCT. 31.—Since the 19th instant we have had the most stormy weather I ever witnessed. Rain, wind, thunder, and lightning: the latter were sublimely awful. How dreadful was it to realise, amidst the crash of the elements, that He who ruled over them and directed them was the same who once visited this world to suffer agonies and death for us, and who is now making intercession for his people! We know that he does not willingly afflict the children of men, yet, it has seemed fit to him that this storm should not be made to pass away without producing very calamitous results. On the night of the 22d, one of the mountain torrents swept away 13 poor people with their houses. On the 24th, the rain descended upon the whole of the island, in cataracts rather than showers. The roads became rivers, and the rivers furious and destructive torrents. Vineyards, houses, with their inhabitants, numbers of cattle, stores, with hundreds of pipes of wine, have been swept away and carried into the sea. Many of the roads, which were admirably paved with large stones, have been scooped out to the depth of five or six feet, and rendered impassable. The watercourses through the city, which had been excavated with great labour to the depth of perhaps 25 feet, and enclosed with strong walls, are now almost choaked up with fragments of rocks and mud; and the result of this must be terrible if another flood should come. In Funchal alone 200 houses are either totally destroyed or greatly injured. Such, indeed, was the violence of the terrific streams from the mountain, that they made a clear breach in the wall of a fort 12 feet thick. The people were running about the streets wild with terror. Two poor families sought refuge with us, and we gave them house-room till the danger was past. The 25th was, if possible, a day of still greater excitement for us. The wind changed to the south, which sent the surf right in upon the town, and we soon found that the six ships at anchor in the bay were in imminent peril. Before four o'clock guns were fired, and signals of distress hoisted; and, in the midst of a dense crowd, we rushed to the pier to witness the melancholy sight. We arrived just after. The "Creole," the vessel which had nearly caused a war between England and America, was dashed upon the rocks, and became a complete wreck, though the crew were saved. Our attention was soon directed to the other ships, some of which were dragging their anchors and pitching in a frightful manner. At this time no words can describe the awful magnificence of the Atlantic, which seemed roused to full fury, and sent its waves bodily over the top of the Loo rock, ordinarily 80 feet above the high water mark. Here we remained till dark, when we went home with heavy hearts; not forgetting to pray to Him who hath this day in the whirlwind and the storm, for the poor sailors. By nine o'clock that evening five out of the six vessels had come ashore; the remaining one, the "Success," was saved by the change of the wind, and by her anchor laying hold of another, as she was dragging it towards the beach. The crews of the "Dart" and of the "Wave" were saved, but the latter vessel was dashed to atoms. A Portuguese schooner lost part of her crew, and a Sardinian polacca went to the bottom with all her men, 12 in number. The hand of God has been conspicuous in saving so many from the very jaws of death. In wrath he has remembered mercy. Such weather has not been known in Madeira since 1803; and the distress of the people is very great. It has been already cooler than I found it all last winter: the thermometer was at 50. last night. This we find quite bracing and refreshing. —Atlas.

CRIME.—The criminal tables for England and Wales for the year 1841, with the accompanying explanation, by Mr. Redgrave, of the Home-office, present much valuable information. The total number of offenders committed for trial or bailed in England and Wales in the year 1841, was 27,760. Of these, 2,140 were charged with offences against the person; 1,873 with offences against property committed with violence; 22,071 with offences against property committed without violence; 94 with malicious offences against property; 437 with forgery and offences against the currency; 1,199 with other offences not included in the above classes.

The convictions were 20,280; the acquittals* 7,480.

The offenders convicted were disposed of in the following manner:—10 were executed; 199 transported for life; 21 for more than 15 years; 717 for 15 years and above 10 years; 1,246 for 10 years and above 7 years; 1,676 for 7 years; 10 to be imprisoned for 3 years and above 2 years; 467 for 2 years and above 1 year; 2,062 for 1 year and above 6 months; 13,219 for six months and under; 647 to be whipped or fined, and discharged; 6 were pardoned.

Of the offenders, 22,560 were males, and 5,200 females.

The first annual record of the state of crime in England and Wales was prepared in 1805, and from that time to the present, there has been a progressive increase in the numbers committed. Until the peace in 1814, the increase was gradual, but commitments then increased so rapidly, that they were nearly doubled in three years. This increase was maintained until 1821, when a slight decrease took place, and continued during the two following years, when an increase again commenced and continued, almost uninterruptedly for the ten succeeding years. The commitments during the last eight years were in

| 1837.......... | 23,612 | 1841.......... | 27,760 |

These figures show a considerable increase since 1836. In 1841, as compared with the preceding year, the increase amounted to only 2.1 per cent; but it follows two years in which the aggregate increase exceeded 16 per cent.

The increase in the past year has taken place in twenty-two English and six Welsh Counties, and amounts to 1,426 persons; the decrease in seventeen English and Welsh counties, and amounts to 853 persons. In one English county, the numbers remained stationary. The decrease has been chiefly in agricultural counties; the only four manufacturing and commercial counties in which a decrease appears, being Cheshire, Nottinghamshire, Worcestershire, and Surrey.

In the thirteen English Counties having the largest proportional agricultural population, the committals in 1841 were 4,299, exceeding those of the preceding year by one only. In the thirteen English counties having the largest manufacturing and mixed population the committals in 1841 were 16,089, exceeding those of the preceding year by 840 or 5 5 per cent. The details of this comparison are as follows:—

* Under this head are included 26 found to be insane.

In Herefordshire and Shropshire, there has been a consecutive increase in each of the last six years; in Monmouthshire, in each of the last five years; and in Lancashire, Wiltshire, and Yorkshire, in each of the last three years. Norfolk, Suffolk, and Surrey are the only counties in which there has been a consecutive decrease in the last two years.

During the last eight years, comparing the last with the first year, the greatest increase has been in the following districts:—

| | Per Cent. | | Per Cent. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Monmouth ........ | 174 | Leicester ........ | 46 |
| Cumberland . .... | 77 | Somerset ........ | 46 |
| Northumberland .. | 74 | Lancaster ...... | 44 |
| Gloucester ....... | 67 | Derby ........... | 43 |
| Stafford ............ | 63 | Chester ......... | 39 |
| Warwick ........ | 58 | Cornwall ......... | 38 |
| Salop ............. | 58 | Wilts ........... | 34 |
| Worcester ........ | 56 | York ........... | 32 |
| South Wales ...... | 50 | Hertford ........ | 32 |
| Sussex ........... | 47 | North Wales .... | 32 |

The only English counties in which a decrease has taken place during the same period are Middlesex, Surrey, Nottingham, Lincoln, Norfolk, Suffolk, and Rutland.

The following are the twelve counties having the largest and the smallest proportion of commitment.—

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Monmouth .. | 1 — in 369 | Westmoreland | 1 in 1,711 |
| Gloucester ... | 1 — in 348 | South Wales... | 1 — 1,578 |

It appears that the increase in the past year has been confined to males, the number of females having slightly decreased; the proportion has fallen from 23.7 to 23.0 per cent. This is the first check opposed to the annual increase in the proportion of females, which, notwithstanding the decreased proportion of females in the population, had gradually extended from 18.8 per cent. in 1834, to 23.7 per cent. in 1840. The proportion of female commitments is much greater in the manufacturing and commercial counties, than in the agricultural. Comparing the thirteen agricultural and the thirteen manufacturing counties already named, the aggregate proportion in the agricultural counties was 1 female to 6.01 male; and in the manufacturing and commercial counties, 1 female to 3.88 males.

Looking at the several classes of crime, it appears that in four of the six classes there was a decrease during the past year. In the first class, offences against the person, there is an increase of 13.8 per cent., which is spread generally over the whole class; bigamy forming the only prominent exception, in which offence there is a decrease of 20 per cent. In the second class, offences against property committed with violence, there was a decrease of 3.2 per cent In this decrease were included sacrilege, house-breaking, shop and warehouse-breaking, and simple robbery; burglary, cartilage-breaking, robbery with no violence and attempts to rob, have slightly increased. In the third class, offences against property, committed without violence, there was an increase of 2.5 per cent. Larcenies, simple, from the person, by servants, and in dwelling-houses, have increased; as also have frauds, embezzlement, and letter-stealing. In horse-stealing, sheep-stealing, and receiving stolen goods, there was a marked decrease. In the fourth class, malicious offences against property, there was a large decrease, amounting to 26.7 per cent., and extending to all the principal offences in the class. In the fifth class, forgery and offences against the currency, there was also a decrease which amounted to 19.2 per cent., and included all the offences of the class except coining. In the sixth class, containing the miscellaneous offences, there was a trifling decrease, arising chiefly from the absence of the seditious offences which had swelled the number in the two preceding years. In offences against the game-laws and riots, there was an increase.

It is satisfactory to know that in the majority of the offences for which capital sentences were repealed, there was a decrease during the past year; and that, in the aggregate, the decrease amounted to nearly 4.5 per cent., while commitments, generally, had decreased 2.1 per cent. The following comparisons of the centisimal proportion of convictions for offences in which capital punishments were abolished by the Acts of the 1st Vic., show that increased certainty of conviction has followed the passing of those Acts:—

|---|---|---|---|---|
| Attempt to murder ..... ...... | 40 75 | 50 17 | 56.15 | 63.22 |
| Sacrilege ........ | 73 63 | 77.77 | 68.75 | 66.66 |
| Burglary ........ | 69.69 | 73.56 | 78.98 | 79.85 |
| Robbery ........ | 56.04 | 62.98 | 64.71 | 63.80 |
| Arson .......... | 16.56 | 29.73 | 27.00 | 45.45 |

The number of capital sentences in the last year was—for murder, 20; attempts to murder, 6; unnatural offences, 7; rape, 26; burglary, 5; robbery, 8; riot and felony, 7; feloniously returning from transportation, 1.

Of the eighty persons sentenced to death, ten were executed; nine of them for murder, and one for an attempt to murder where life was seriously endangered.

By an Act passed in the first session of Parliament last year, but which did not take effect until after the conclusion of the assizes, capital punishment was abolished for two of the above offences, namely, rape and felonious riots, which, it is calculated, will have the effect of reducing the number of capital sentences annually to between forty and fifty. The magnitude of the recent changes in the criminal laws will be strongly exemplified when it is stated that had the offences tried in 1841 been tried under the laws of 1831, instead of 80 capital sentences passed in that year, the number would have amounted to 2,172.—Pat.

IMPORTATION OF FOREIGN CATTLE.—We learn, from a Danish gentleman well acquainted with the trade and statistics of Denmark, that there is every probability of an extensive trade in cattle between that country and England. The cattle hitherto sent to Hamburgh are likely to be sent to this country, as the better market. Arrangements are making, since the passing of the new English Tariff, to run steamers, next spring, direct from Tonder, in the province of Sleswick, and also from a port in the more northerly province of Jutland, to Hull or London. This will raise the price of cattle in Denmark, Hamburgh, and the Baltic, and reduce it in England. Within the last few years, great improvements have been made in the agriculture of Denmark. A trade in cattle to England would still further accelerate improvement. It is of importance to know that the exportations of oats and other kinds of grain from Denmark to England, within the last four years, have led to the importation of English wollens and cottons in return, and that the peasantry of Denmark are better clothed in consequence. We thus see a practical proof of the reciprocal advantages of commerce. The ships which bring grain to England, seek freights of merchandise back to Denmark. This is the natural course of things; and wherever we give foreigners access to our markets for their produce, there we are sure, in one way or another, directly or indirectly, to obtain markets for our own manufactures in return.—Leeds Mercury.

The French steamer Cameleon arrived at Alexandria on the 4th instant, having on board 109 pilgrims from Algeria on their way to Mecca. This act of policy on the part of the French Government had created a deep impression on the Mussulmans of Alexandria. Can it be possible, say they, that Giaours transport Mussulmans gratis on their pilgrimage to the Kiabe or tomb of the Prophet?—Record.

THE MUSSULMAN RACE.—BROUSSA, ANATOLIA, JUNE 26.—The diminution of the Mussulman population in Asia Minor is alarming. Between Tockhat and Broussa I found villages almost entirely abandoned by the inhabitants in consequence of the severity with which the recruiting for the Nizam, the Turkish regular troops, is conducted in that part of the country. It would be an interesting study to seek out all the causes which contribute to the dreadful mortality which prevails amongst the young Turkish soldiers. The food which is distributed to the garrisons is of sufficiently good quality, and contagious maladies have been unknown in Turkey in Europe during the last five years. Some European physicians are of opinion that these young soldiers, not being married like the ancient Janissaries, abandon themselves to vice, and so destroy their constitution. But, whatever may be the causes of this mortality, the consequence is, the ever-increasing weakness of the Turkish empire. This fact is nowhere more perceptible than in the interior of Asia Minor, whence the greater number of conscripts are drawn to Constantinople. At present, several extensive villages are to be seen in Anatolia, from which all the young men have been withdrawn. This remarkable circumstance has not escaped the Kourd Chiefs of the neighbourhood, who, from the tops of their mountains regard with profound attention the decay of the Ottoman Empire, and who do not conceal their hopes of being delivered from the yoke of the Pachas. At Broussa and its environs the diminution of the population is less great. In those countries the conscription is not executed with the same rigour as elsewhere, because the Porte derives from those districts, where silk is cultivated, considerable advantages. The present population of Broussa is 60,000 souls, of which 48,000 are Mussulmans. The Armenians reckon 6,000, and the remainder are Greeks or Jews. The crop of silk raised at Broussa and its environs is calculated at 3,000 bales of 61 okes each. (The oke is about 2¾lbs. weight.) The number of families occupied in the culture of this article is about 15,000, and the approximate value of the silk exported from all Anatolia may be estimated at 120,000,000 piastres (about 1,000,000*l.* sterling.) Under a good and wise Government, which would protect the cultivators, the produce might acquire a still greater importance, for there are few countries in the world where the mulberry tree grows to such perfection as in the environs of Broussa. The weaving of silk stuffs, for which this place was formerly so celebrated, has almost entirely ceased. There remain only 160 frames, which produce about 9,000 pieces of stuffs embroidered with gold. The market for this manufacture is Constantinople; there is none exported to foreign countries. In the district of Kutaiah, I observed many extensive manufactories of cushions for sofas, for which a vast quantity of English twisted cotton is used. The British Government are well aware of the advantage which British commerce might acquire by increased intercourse with those countries: and, for this purpose, an English Consul has been appointed at Broussa.—Malta Times.

UNITED STATES TRADE STATISTICS.—The American papers contain a statistical summary of the value of the exports of produce and manufactures of the United States for three years, dating the periods as 1838, 1839, and 1841. The exports of the produce of the sea has declined to 2,846,851 dollars, it having in the year 1838 been as high as 3,175,576 dollars. The exports of the produce of the forests is alluded to as showing an increase, 1838 being stated at 5,200,499 dollars, 1839 at 5,764,559 dollars, and 1841 at 6,264,852. Of agricultural produce, including the raising of crops and the breed of cattle, the exports are stated at 9,105,514 dollars for 1838, 13,588,886 dollars for 1839, and 16,737,402 dollars for 1841. Of the tobacco crop in 1833 the value exported was 7,392,029 dollars; in 1839, 9,882,943 dollars; and 12,576,703 dollars in 1841. Of the cotton crop the value exported was 61,556,811 dollars in 1838; 1,238,982 dollars in 1839; and 54,330,341 dollars in 1841. The exports of manufactures are stated at 8,483,321 dollars for 1838; 9,590,531 dollars for 1839; and 6,481,502 for 1841. Of these general amounts, England for herself and colonies took 850,540 barrels of flour, 850,865 bushels of wheat, 324,709 bushels of Indian corn, and 96,810 barrels of pork. —Pat.

MILITARY.

Camp Ferozepore, 29th December, 1842.

The Governor General deeming it expedient that henceforward admission to the Body Guard shall be an Honourable Reward for good Service in the Regiments of Regular Cavalry, and that the Body Guard shall be so encreased as to make it available for Service in the Field, has sanctioned the following Establishment for that Corps:

1 Commandant.
1 Adjutant.
2 Subalterns.
1 Surgeon, or Assistant Surgeon.
1 Veterinary Surgeon.
1 Drill Havildar.
1 Pay Havildar.
1 Quarter Master Havildar.
6 Luscars.
4 Purkalles.
1 Serjeant Major.
1 Quarter Master Serjeant.
2 Subadars.
4 Jemadars.
24 Havildars.
24 Naicks.
6 Trumpeters.
280 Troopers
2 Native Doctors.
1 Farrier Major.
4 Farriers.
352 Horses.

The situation of Native Riding Master is discontinued, and an addition of 30 Rupees per month is to be drawn for the Serjeant Major for performing that duty. Two Rough Riders at 5 Rupees a month will be continued as heretofore.

The Pay of Troopers in the Body Guard will be 12 Rupees a month, in addition to any Pay they may be entitled to for length of Service.

The 25 Men now detached on Escort to Somnath, will be continued as Supernumeraries, until they rejoin the Body Guard, and will then be absorbed.

The Commandant of the Body Guard will address his request to the several Officers Commanding the Regiments of Light Cavalry, stating the number of Men required from each for the filling up of vacancies in the Body Guard, and such Commanding Officers will thereupon select men of good service and good character, of the required height, and age, for the supplying of such vacancies.

The Men so transferred will continue to be borne upon the strength of their respective Regiments during their tour of Service in the Body Guard, which is fixed at 4 years, and at the expiration of that period, the Commandant of the Body Guard will be authorised to permit such Men to elect, to remain in the Body Guard or to return to their Regiments.

With the Men transferred to the Body Guard are at the same time to be transferred from their respective Regiments, unexceptionable Bay Horses, under 6 years of age, which Horses will be returned with the Men at the expiration of 4 years, if the Men should not then be permitted to elect to remain in the Body Guard.

The Governor General taking into consideration the duties which will be performed by the Adjutant and Subalterns of the Body Guard, when encreased in Establishment as above ordered, and the expediency of making the Allowances of those Officers bear a fixed and just relation to their duties authorises 500 Rupees and 400 Rupees. to be drawn as a Consolidated Allowance by the Adjutant and Subalterns, respectively.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS.

The Editor of the Friend of India beg to acknowledge the following donation:—

From Capt. Hannyngton, Co's. Rs. 20, to Serampore College.

CHINA.—Intelligence has been received from China viâ Bombay to the 31st of December. It is gratifying to learn, that although inflammatory placards continued to be exhibited, calling upon the people to drive away the English and exhorting artisans not to assist in rebuilding the factories, trade had been tranquilly resumed. The Chinese authorities at Canton have also assured the Plenipotentiary of their perfect ability to protect all foreigners; and have agreed to indemnify the merchants for all losses sustained during the insurrection. Thus the wisdom of Sir Henry Pottinger, in refusing to send up a force to Canton for the protection of British interests, is clearly demonstrated. Had he listened to the remonstrances of the terrified merchants, the ferment among the Chinese gentry and the people would have increased, possibly to a degree beyond the control of the Governor; acts of violence would have been repeated, and the settlement of the Tariff interrupted by new and more difficult questions of a political character.

The occurrence of such an outbreak, after the Government itself had adopted pacific views, proves how incorrect was our original estimate of the state of public feeling in China. When we first entered on hostilities, it was supposed that the common people were generally anxious for a more intimate connection with us; and that it was the official functionaries who were opposed to our wishes. The proclamations which were issued on the arrival of our armament were drawn up on this supposition, and were intended to separate the people from the interests of their Government. It was generally announced that we made war with the Government, and not with its subjects. But there is every reason to believe, that at the present moment the community at large is far more hostile to us, than are the public authorities. It is the people who manifest the strongest repugnance to any association with us, and who are anxious to take up the quarrel which their rulers have laid down. The hostile feeling at Canton may in a great measure be accounted for. The humiliation of the English, by the confiscation of the opium and the expulsion of Capt. Elliott and the merchants, doubtless afforded a theme for exultation to this proud people. The return of the English in all their might, the destruction of the forts, and the ransom of the town, must have enflamed them to madness against the authors of this disgrace. So far as the people participated in the lofty bearing of their rulers —and they seem to have done so to a degree of which we had no conception—so far must they have been exasperated, by the humiliating blow which the dragon throne had for the first time received. But the feeling of hostility manifested towards us in other parts of the empire, where there have been no visible tokens of national degradation to excite animosity, and the hundreds of petitions which are said to have poured in upon the Imperial Cabinet against the treaty and its concessions to the outside barbarians, go far to shew that our previous notions regarding the empire were founded on ignorance. We now find that the Government was not after all that effete, oriental despotism, which was ready to fall to pieces on the first rude shock it might receive. We find that the people had been sufficiently amalgamated with their conquerors, in the course of two centuries, to sympathize with their feelings of triumph and disgrace. We have now discovered, that under this sternest of despotisms, there is still ample scope for the formation and expression of public opinion, and that this public opinion has been turned with the most virulent hostility against us.

This developement of national sentiment we must not overlook, in our future intercourse with this most singular people. It must be our study to soothe rather than to irritate the commonalty. We must lay aside those feelings of national hauteur, which unfortunately accompany us to every quarter of the globe. We must consent to forget that we have humbled the celestial empire, and beaten the lord of three hundred millions into submission. We must avoid every exhibition which might render our presence galling to the people, at the ports to which we now have admission; and above all things avoid a second war with a nation, whose country we may overrun, but whose spirit it appears so impossible to subdue; for if ever we attempt to hold dominion in China, it can only be by means of a Government of centry boxes.

The Plenipotentiary has opened a correspondence with the merchants relative to the new Tariff, and has allowed three articles of the treaty and some of the correspondence, to "ooze out," to use an expression of the flowery nation. From these documents, which have been published in the Bombay Times, we learn that His Excellency has resolved, if possible, to persuade the High Commissioners to legalize the traffic of opium by barter. It will be a bitter pill for Elepoo to swallow, and his repugnance will possibly defeat all the arguments of Sir Henry. Indeed it seems impossible to suppose that the Emperor will ever be brought to consent to a measure, which cannot fail to shake the confidence and esteem of his subjects. After the repeated denunciations of this flowing poison in all his edicts; after having declared that the war originated in his determination to preserve the empire from being inundated with this drug; after having made peace without any mention of the odious traffic in this article—to withdraw his opposition and legalize the importation of it, and thus augment the evil ten-fold, when the bulk of our troops had been withdrawn, on the mere solicitation of the Plenipotentiary, must undermine the Emperor's authority throughout the empire, and ensure the contempt of his subjects. He has lost enough of their esteem by yielding to necessity; and it is to be feared, that the little esteem which may yet remain in their minds, would be altogether extinguished were he to concede this vital question, without the excuse of an imperative necessity.

THE ACQUITTAL OF MAJOR POTTINGER by the Court of Enquiry, appointed to investigate his conduct after he had assumed the political direction of affairs, on the death of Sir William Macnaghten, though it was fully anticipated, seems to have given as much satisfaction as if it had been an unexpected event. His reputation appears to be considered in the light of public property, which every one has an interest in preserving. The capitulation, to which he affixed his signature at Cabul, however inconsistent with the honour of the British character, did not shake the public confidence in the hero of Herat and Charekar; because it was felt, that whenever an opportunity was afforded him of explaining the circumstances under which it was executed, his character would appear in its original lustre. That opportunity he has now enjoyed. His conduct has been subjected to the most rigid scrutiny. The gentleman who presided at his trial, Mr. George Clerk, was perhaps the person best fitted, from his thorough acquaintance with the native character, and his long connection with the native Courts, to form an accurate estimate of Major Pottinger's proceedings in the extraordinary emergency in which he was placed; and his concurrence in that sentence of acquittal, gives it the highest additional value.

The name of POTTINGER is intimately associated with the great and important events, which have occurred during the last four years, in the new spheres of action into which we have been drawn, by the current of circumstances in China and Affghanistan. The Uncle has been instrumental in humbling the Tartar dynasty, and dictating a peace under the walls of Nankin. The Nephew, after having driven back the tide of Persian invasion from the walls of Herat, was called to act in a scene of difficulties, more appalling than any in which our officers have been placed in India. His conduct on that occasion has been submitted to the ordeal of a Court of Enquiry, composed of the men best qualified by their experience to judge of it, and they have pronounced that "throughout the whole period of the painful position, in which Major Pottinger was so unexpectedly placed, his conduct was marked by a degree of energy and manly firmness, that stamps his character as one worthy of high admiration." That energy and manly firmness were baffled by circumstances beyond his control. He deserved success, though it was not given to him to enjoy it. But he is equally as much entitled to those honours, which it is the privilege of his Sovereign to bestow, as if his exertions had been crowned with success. To withhold them on such an occasion as this, would be to proclaim that the mere circumstance of a successful termination of events,—which is too often accidental,—is deserving of greater reward than the most distinguished military virtue.

THE MADRAS BANK.—The Draft of an Act for the incorporation of a Bank at Madras has at length been read in Council, and unless any unforeseen circumstance should occur to delay the passing of it, the Bank will be in operation on the 1st of June next. There is however little reason to apprehend the occurrence of any such obstacle. No such difficulties as those which obstructed the establishment of the Bombay Bank, in consequence of disputes regarding the disposal of the Shares,—which obstacles were erroneously attributed to the jealousy of a Calcutta clique,—are likely to arise on the present occasion. The recommendations of the Provisional Committee of the Bank have been adopted by the Legislative Council. The Shares are to be bestowed in the first instance on the original subscribers; the shares, which may lapse by the non-payment of Subscriptions by the 1st of May, will be distributed according to seniority among the subscribers in the Supplemental list, who made application for them after the prescribed amount of Capital had been subscribed; and any shares which may remain unappropriated, after their claims have been provided for, will be at the disposal of a General Meeting of Subscribers.

The Capital is fixed for the present at Thirty lakhs of Rupees, of which Government subscribes for one-third. The whole amount of subscription must be made good by the subscribers on the original list by the 1st of May, and by those on the supplemental list on the 20th of that month.

The poverty of the Native community at Madras is lamentably exhibited in the Schedule attached to the Draft, which contains the names of the original subscribers. Of the capital of twenty-seven lakhs of Rupees, only one lakh and thirteen thousand Rupees have been subscribed by Natives. When a similar draft of an Act for the incorporation of the Bombay Bank was published, fifteen out of fifty lakhs of Rupees of the capital were subscribed by the Natives; and at the present time, one-sixth of the capital of the Bengal Bank belongs to the people of the country. The relative proportion of shares in the Chartered Banks held by the natives at the three Presidencies may be thus stated:

|---|---|---|---|---|
| Calcutta, | Europeans, | 2,229 | Natives, | 445 |
| Bombay, | ditto, | 3,657 | ditto, | 1,551 |
| Madras, | ditto, | 2,587 | ditto, | 113 |

To what are we to attribute the comparative absence of capitalists among the Natives, and the destitution which seems to pervade the Native community at the oldest Presidency in India? We know that some have been accustomed to ascribe it to the operation of the Supreme Court; but though this may account for the destruction of capital, we do not see how it can have operated to prevent the reaccumulation of it. At this Presidency, the fortunes lost by law suits in the Queen's Court, have been much larger than those which have disappeared from the same cause at Madras; yet the vacuum has speedily been filled up. New capitalists are daily springing up among us; and the fortunes they accumulate, in a comparatively short period, are truly astonishing in amount. What then are the causes which prevent such accumulations at the sister Presidency?

ABOLITION OF SLAVERY IN INDIA.—The publication of a letter from "An Assistant Magistrate," in our present number, brings up again the question of Indian Slavery, which it is now proposed to abolish by law. Our correspondent thinks that we have over-estimated the value of this boon, and affirms that the evils of Slavery in this country have been much overrated. In this latter opinion we have always coincided. At this Presidency, except in Assam, Agricultural Slavery is comparatively unknown, and domestic slavery exists only in its mildest form. Upon the largest calculation, the proportion of slaves to the entire population does not exceed one in three hundred; and this is based upon the vague supposition that Sylhet alone contains Eighty Thousand. But in Assam slavery does exist to a very considerable extent, and, as Dr. McCosh says, the poor creatures are bought and sold every day for a mere trifle. At the Madras Presidency, slavery appears in its severest character and to its largest extent. Still the number of men, who are subjected to compulsory labour in the house and the field, throughout the British dominions in India, cannot possibly exceed 300,000. We fully acknowledge, that the oppression connected with a state of slavery in the East, cannot be compared in the remotest degree with the 'curse' of the West Indies; still the legal emancipation of even this smaller number, from the comparatively mild bondage in which they are held, is an object which the Government of India cannot neglect without the highest inconsistency. To remedy the evil we required a positive enactment. It was by a legal construction of the Sudder Court in 1798, that the slavery of Hindooism was revived, and Mahomedan slavery rivetted. The evil created by law required to be removed by law. Slavery itself is a positive evil, and its abolition is a positive good. The mere circumstance, that the condition of the slave is less galling here than in other countries, does not detract from the merits of the abolition.

Our correspondent seems to question the propriety of the proposed law, because hundreds of children may be left to perish in times of scarcity; but it would be a strange anomaly to endeavour to avert one calamity by inflicting another; to rescue human beings from the jaws of death, by consigning them and their offspring to perpetual bondage. This is not a principle upon which a great Government can safely act. In every period of scarcity, it is the undoubted duty of the state, to rescue destitute and deserted children from starvation by the aid of the public funds. The prospect that they may for years continue a burden on its finances, can furnish no adequate reason for casting this duty on others; more especially when it is known, that they will abuse the power they acquire by depriving the children of their freedom. Opportunities would doubtless arise for placing the infants thus rescued, in situations which would render them independent of public support, and furnish them with the means of maintaining themselves; but even supposing that they continued for years to depend on the public resources, this evil would be infinitely less than that of perpetuating slavery in the country. The liberality of Government on the occurrence of the last famine, in contributing to the necessities of the poor, to the extent of nearly half a million sterling, prover beyond a doubt that there would be no indisposition in the highest quarter to consider the rescued children as Orphans of the State, till they could support themselves.

The modifications of the new law proposed by our correspondent, we must beg him to reconsider, and we hope he will be disposed to concur with us in rejecting them. To postpone the operation of the law for three or four years, would, we fear, prove a death blow to it. We must strike while the iron is hot. The history of the abolition of slavery in India, proves the value of embracing whatever favourable opportunity may arise for extinguishing it. Of the Law Commissioners, whose report was sent home two years ago, not one was prepared to go the length of the present enactment. They were all for simply restraining abuses; they shrunk from the responsibility of laying the axe at the root of the tree, and eradicating the institution itself. The Members of Council were equally undecided. Even Lord Auckland was more than half inclined to stint his exertions to the mere reformation of abuses. He was willing to allow the sale of children during inundations and famines. He would do little more than make it "a part of our measures for the amelioration of the condition of servitude in India, to obtain periodical reports of the state of slaves and bondmen, and of legal transactions affecting them, in the districts in which such classes were most numerous." If the advice of the majority of the Council and of the Commissioners had been followed, the consummation of our wishes would have been postponed for an indefinite period. It is chiefly to the perseverance of one individual that we are indebted for the present victory over the lukewarmness, the indecision, and the faint-heartedness of those on whom the responsibility of this great question rested; but the time for celebrating his share in this triumph of humanity has not arrived. And it is but an act of justice which we gratefully pay to Lord Ellenborough to record his unqualified and cordial acquiescence in the present act. Without his concurrence the measure could not have been carried. This therefore is the period for establishing by law the right of every subject of the Crown in India, to "liberty and the pursuit of happiness."

Our correspondent asks for a general registration of slaves. We venture to think it would be unwise. It would create a great sensation throughout India. It would interfere with the domestic privacy of families and produce a very pernicious effect. The Native officers, to whom the registration was committed, would turn it into a means of extortion, and the measure of abolition would become odious from its associations. It would rouse opposition where none might otherwise be dreamt of, and possibly throw insuperable obstacles in the way of our success.

We could wish the act to be passed as it stands, without alteration. The only place from which opposition may be expected is Madras. That Presidency has been called the "benighted," because it is found to be so backward in liberality of sentiment and views; because it has so frequently been the last refuge of antiquated prejudices. In some respects, it must be confessed, the epithet has not been misapplied. But an opportunity is now afforded to the members of that Government to wipe out the stain, and vindicate its British and its Christian character. It is at that Presidency, that the act for the abolition of slavery is more particularly needed. Let us then be gratified by a hearty co-operation with the Supreme Government in its present benevolent pursuit. Let it not be said that the great Charter of Freedom in India was carried against the wishes of the Madras authorities. The Act, though it renders the existence of slavery impossible, yet makes no violent change in the internal economy of society. It is simple, clear, unobtrusive, and just. It disturbs no existing arrangement between master and slave, when the slave has no cause of complaint against his master; but it gives every man the privilege of claiming his liberty by an appeal to the public tribunals. By simply declaring that no rights arising out of a state of slavery shall be enforced by the Courts, it cuts the bonds which bound the slave, but it does not remove him from his master; and it excites no undue expectations in his bosom. It is scarcely possible to fancy any method more simple, more judicious, and more entirely unobjectionable for getting rid of this great national evil, with which India has been afflicted for twenty centuries, than that which has now been proposed; and we therefore look forward with confidence to the cheerful acquiescence of that Presidency in this act of national beneficence.

PROGRESS OF PUSEYISM IN ENGLAND.—The papers received by the last Mail from England afford unequivocal evidence of the rapid strides which Puseyism is making, and of the boldness which its advocates have been encouraged to assume. Although it is true that some of its leading principles and practises have been condemned, in very unequivocal language, by a few of the Diocesans, yet it has met with all the encouragement from others which could have been desired. The faint censure which the Bishops of London, Oxford, Exeter, and Salisbury have deemed it politic to pronounce on some of its distinguishing tenets, combined with the praise bestowed on the motives and the piety of the prime movers, and the concessions which have been actually made, have served to advance the cause beyond the expectations of its most sanguine advocates; and to all present appearance the cause may soon expect to be triumphant in the Church of England. There is indeed so much that is flattering to human pride in the doctrines now promulgated, that the success they have met with can excite no surprise. When it is affirmed that there can be no salvation out of the Church, and no Church without a Bishop; and that the Bishop can confer on his clergy the mysterious power of administering ordinances, which are of themselves a passport to heavenly bliss; it is not wonderful that poor weak human nature is disposed to receive a creed which teaches these doctrines, with the warmest satisfaction. The doctrine of the efficacy of the Sacraments, as administered by an episcopally ordained minister, is the key-stone of the whole system; and if it be taken away, the whole fabric falls to the ground, and episcopacy resolves itself into a mere question of ecclesiastical government. Thus the system derives its strength and support from its appeal to the strongest passion of our nature, the love of power; and the marvel is, not that "fifteen hundred" ministers should have adopted these doctrines, but that so many should still be found to repudiate them. We now proceed briefly to lay before our readers the proofs we find in the papers, of the progress which Tractarianism is making in England.

It can scarcely be new to the Indian public, that the Bishop of London in his late charge, in which he endeavoured to conciliate both parties, and succeeded only in satisfying the Puseyites, allowed candles to be placed on the Altar; only they were not to be lighted till night came on. But after such a concession, the night was found to come on apace in the establishment. The assertion, that the Charge has raised the price of wax in London, may possibly be an exaggeration, but it is asserted on the best authority that candles are rapidly finding their way to the churches in London, and that the episcopal hour for lighting them is anticipated in more than one Church. In Shoreditch, the pious part of the congregation arose and left the church when the candles came in, and the new Oxford ceremonies begun. Lest we should be suspected of depending on partial authorities, we will quote on this subject the Gazette de France, which says, "the Bishop of London now re-establishes a vast number of Popish ceremonies, and his clergy at his call resume the surplice, light again the wax tapers on the altar, draw nigh to the offertory of this altar so long deserted, renounce the discipline of Elizabeth to resume the Catholic, &c. Puseyism is but a path that leads to us." Among our selections will be found an account of a new Church, recently erected in a rural district in Kent on the most approved Puseyite model, and we recommend it to the especial attention of those who are desirous of marking the signs of the times.

The bold tone assumed by the advocates of the party among the journalists of the day, is an indication of its growing power, which cannot be mistaken. We do not here allude to the great organ of the sect, the British Critic, which is so uncompromising in its condemnation of every thing connected with the "Protestant schism," as to have obtained the highest praise from Dr. Wiseman; but to the Journalists which have undertaken to coach the new doctrine into public approbation. Among these the Post and the Times are the most conspicuous; but the Post, which is by far the most consistent, is obliged occasionally to take its associate to task for its vagaries. The plan of robbing Bangor of its Bishopric to bestow it on that "capital of manufacturing wealth and sin," as the Post designates Manchester, is deprecated in no measured language by this Puseyite Journalist, and an insinuation is thrown out that it is more than their places are worth, for the Ministry to dare to carry it into execution. We would rather see Downing Street deprived of their presence, than Bangor deprived of its bishop. If the mysterious efficacy which is affirmed to spring from episcopal ordination be any thing but an ecclesiastical fiction, no act can be more sacrilegious, none more abominable in the sight of God, or more destructive of the public welfare, than to deprive a diocese of its Bishop. Of the nature of this efficacy, the Tractarians entertain the most sublime ideas. In the preface to the second portion of Mr. Froude's Remains, Dr. Newman thus describes it; "Before Jesus Christ left the world, he breathed the Holy Spirit into his apostles, giving them the power of transmitting this precious gift to others by prayer and the imposition of hands. The apostles did so transmit it to others, and in this way it has been preserved in the world to the present day.—To seek communion with Christ through any non-episcopal association, is to be regarded, not as a schism merely, but as an IMPOSSIBILITY." The Times however is disposed to make light of this gift—"Was there any miraculous effusion of the Holy Spirit upon two such worldlings as could be named, because Pitt gave each of them, for secular services, the richest bishoprics in the kingdom, the progeny of one of whom is as infamously wasting the revenues of the Church in gaming, as they were shamelessly heaped on him by his unprincipled father?" One of the parties alluded to in the last clause of this paragraph, a clergyman and a cathedral dignitary, was a defaulter at the last Epsom races to the amount of 3000 or 4000*l*. But this is not the only instance in which the Times, while it upholds the principles of the Tractarian party, deals the heaviest blow on their pretensions. Had we room, we could give other quotations, which seem to indicate that whenever the struggle for dominion between the Church and the State commences in reality, whenever the Anglo Catholic Church puts forth its hand to grasp the temporal power which its Roman Catholic predecessor exercised with such sanguinary vigor, the ever-veering yet all-powerful Times will again be found fighting under the banners of religious freedom.

We find it stated in the most confident tone, that of the eighty Tutors at Oxford, fifty had imbibed these doctrines. The Roman Catholics look with the liveliest feelings of hope to the result of this new movement. One of the priests in the new Cathedral at Boulogne, in a recent conversation with a Protestant, stated that they had a mass and prayers every Sunday for the conversion of England, and that their prayers had been fully answered, for their cause was prospering more than they could have anticipated. He added, that Monsieur Sibthorp would never do half the good that Mr. Newman was doing. The organ of the Jesuits in France, L'Univers, thus descants on the prospect of the reunion of Lambeth with Rome; and the Puseyite journals quote the passage without censure; though in the earlier stage of the movement, they considered Tractarianism as the firmest bulwark against Rome. "What has been accomplished in that Church, the difficulties which it has lately surmounted, and the excellent dispositions of its members, are, in the opinion of the Times, so many guarantees that England will not pause in the course which she has now embraced. It is likewise the opinion and the ardent desire of the Catholics, who rejoice at seeing a Church so long separated from the Catholic unity, adopting again doctrines and practices which prepare for her return to the universal Church."

Numerous other signs of the Times are scattered throughout the papers we have received, which, though they may appear but straws, shew us clearly which way the wind blows. The atrocious infanticide in the Forest of Dean, is already well known to our readers. The criminal, supposing herself dying, confessed to the Curate, that she had murdered six of her own infants. These statements were repeated to her sister and to a Police man, and confirmed by the discovery of the skeletons. The father of the children is implicated in these bloody deeds. When the Clergyman, who is a Protestant, was called to give evidence before the Coroner's Jury, he deposed to the bare confession, but while he admitted that other disclosures had been made to him, declined to divulge them because they had been made to him in his spiritual capacity, thus endeavouring to introduce the doctrine of auricular confession.

But we have exhausted the reader's attention, and for the present must stop. From the various facts with which the public journals are crowded, there appears no reason to doubt that a very large portion of the Established Clergy has adopted the principles advocated in the Tracts for the Times; that the party increases daily in numbers and in its hatred of everything which savours of the Reformation; and that it is approximating daily more and more to the principles and practices which distinguished the Catholic party of the reign of Henry the Eighth. At the pace at which matters are now moving, a very few years will obliterate all distinction between the Roman Catholic and the Episcopal Church in the English establishment, revive the struggle for dominion with the state which marked the middle ages—and we fear kindle the fires of persecution. Two steps alone are wanting to unprotestantise England, and lay her glory in the dust; the revival of the Convocation, and the elevation of Dr. Pusey, or Dr. Newman to the archbishopric of Canterbury.

SUPERCESSION IN THE MEDICAL SERVICE AT THE MADRAS PRESIDENCY.—The boon recently granted by the Court of Directors to the Medical Service, of a retiring Pension calculated upon length of service, was coupled with the determination to convert the office of Superintending Surgeons into a staff appointment, to which only those fitted for it by a zealous and able discharge of their professional duties should be deemed eligible. This rule has not as yet been brought into operation at this Presidency, but we learn that the Madras Government has already begun to act upon it by rejecting Dr. Knox's claim to the post of Superintending Surgeon. Great umbrage has been taken at this step, and the strongest remonstrances have been made against it. One letter which has appeared on the subject, and which is remarkable for the vigor of its language, we have transferred to our columns from a Madras contemporary.

The question is not without its difficulties. The Court might argue, and not without reason, that the construction of the Medical Service was faulty, inasmuch as it did not afford Government the same opportunities for the reward of talent, which it enjoyed in reference to the Civil and Military Services; that the rule of promotion by strict seniority had a natural tendency to repress the energies of the service, and that some modification of it was desirable as a stimulus to professional zeal. They might affirm with strict truth, that in the arrangement now proposed, they had been actuated by the purest motives, and by large views of public utility. On the other hand, it may be said that the new rule is an innovation, as the very terms of the notification indicate; that the situations, which it is now proposed to convert into staff appointments and to hold out as prizes for superior merit, have been always held to belong of right to the senior members of the service; and that this right has acquired all the strength of a prescriptive, and the sacredness of a vested right, and cannot be set aside without an act of injustice. It may be said, that those who entered the service with the understanding that they would as surely succeed in their turn to the office of Superintending Surgeon, as a Cadet was sure of attaining the post of Brigadier if he lived long enough, cannot be deprived of this prospect without serious pecuniary injury. They might reason that the post which it is now proposed to hold out as a prize for activity and zeal, requires little professional ability, and that a knowledge of the Medical Regulations would better fit a man for the performance of its duties, than the highest medical talent. But this is a secondary consideration. The gist of the matter lies in the question whether the Court of Directors have the right, as they have the power, to make such a change in the construction of the service, as shall deprive a certain number of their servants of the rewards to which they have been hitherto entitled by the rules of that service. And this question can only be decided by an appeal to the Courts of law.

From the circumstance that the rule has not been acted upon at this Presidency, it is evidently not imperative on the local authorities; and, we think it will be better kept in the breach than the observance. It is not so necessary for the purpose of stimulating professional zeal as the Court may suppose, while at the same time, any promotion of a junior over the heads of his senior would give rise to heart-burnings throughout the service, and be considered as an act of unjust supercession, instead of a recognition of merit. Its effect therefore would not be to stimulate zeal, but to encourage discontent. Government may pass over notorious incapacity in this branch, as it has done in the military branch of the service, without breaking the rule of succession, or incurring the charge of favouritism; and further than this it is scarcely advisable to go.

DUTY ON BOOKS IN ENGLAND.—We publish a letter from an esteemed correspondent relative to the duty charged on books in England. We are now enabled to inform him that the duty on books printed in England, on the exportation of which a drawback was allowed, is of the same amount as the drawback, and that on being re-imported, they pay fifty Shillings the Hundred Weight of 112lbs. There is much confusion relative to the New Tariff; and it would seem as if it was intended that books printed in England since 1801, and exported and then re-imported should pay a duty of Five Pounds Sterling the Cwt. But we have met with no one as yet in the country who can give a decisive opinion on this subject.

WEEKLY EPITOME OF NEWS.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 2.

— The papers announce the death of Mr. Richard Vaughan, the Taxing officer of the Supreme Court, of apoplexy, at the age of forty-six.

— The Allalorie, Capt. Clarke, of 700 tons, became a total wreck on the night of the 3d of January near Venloos Bay, Ceylon. The passengers and crew were saved, but the property was entirely lost.

— Dwarkanath Tagore gave a splendid entertainment on Tuesday evening in honour of Mrs. W. W. Bird, the lady of our Deputy Governor, who embarks for England on the Prince of Wales next week. The entertainment was graced by the presence of the beauty and fashion of Calcutta, and was conducted on a scale of the utmost magnificence.

— The cattle shew at the Town-Hall yesterday morning, is represented to have fallen short of expectation. There was scarcely any thing like competition. The prizes were carried away by the cattle exhibited by Dr. Huffnagle, who, as the Englishman observes, appears to be the only member of the Society who takes a deep interest in the improvement of the breed of cattle.

— Letters from Bundlekund state, that Government have proclaimed rewards to the amount of 70,000 Rupees for the apprehension of the refractory Bundlekund Chiefs; 10,000 Rupees being offered for the capture of the Rajah of Jeitpore. Whether the golden temptation is strong enough to overcome the repugnance of the Chiefs, to a betrayal of the confidence reposed in them by their fugitive brethren, remains to be seen.

— We have not been able to find room for the very interesting narrative which the Englishman has been lately publishing day after day of the events at Cabul between the out-break of the insurrection and the catastrophe in January; but the last division of the narrative, containing the most authentic account which has yet appeared of the tragic death of the Envoy, we have now given entire.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 3.

— The Volusa, from Calcutta to Moulmein, has just been wrecked off Baragua point, in the vicinity of Amherst. She was supposed to have had a large packet for Moulmein containing the October Mail. There is no intelligence of any importance from that settlement. Private letters from Rangoon mention the death at Amerapore of Mr. Staig, who has long been one of the most active and influential merchants in the Burmese dominions.

— The Hurkaru of this morning mentions two instances of the infliction of the most barbarous tortures by the native officers of Police in the interior of the country. We are happy to find, that in both instances the crime has been brought home to the offenders, and that they have been subjected to the severest punishment.

— The Marquis of Tweeddale, says the Madras Examiner, is about to give a grand ball and supper in honour of the Madras portion of the China expedition. Tables are to be laid out for 400.

— The Ranee of Shorapore, in the Deccan, has proved refractory, withheld revenue and assembled troops. Brigadier Tomkyns, with his own forces and the 20th N. I., is looking after her, and will soon bring her to reason.

— The Englishman of this morning states, on the authority of a letter from Constantinople of the 1st of December, received at Bombay, that two Regiments of Poles, who had been sent against the Circassians, joined their standard, and that the Czar, enraged at this defection, had resolved to deal with the unfortunate Poles under his yoke with a severer hand than ever.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 4.

— A curious case came before the Police yesterday. Some Coringa men appeared and demanded wages of the Captain of Le Grande Duquesne, who had brought them up from Bourbon. He stated that they had been left ashore on that island by some Captain, that the Police, to get rid of them, had put them on board his vessel with permission to work them for the food he gave them; that he had thus fed and thus worked them, and that they were entitled to no wages. His story appearing to be the true one, the complaint was dismissed.

— At the meeting of Magistrates yesterday, the long pending question of the appointment of a municipal clerk, upon which their Worships have been debating for many months, was finally decided. Mr. O'Hanlon was left in a minority of one, and Mr. McCann, Junior, was unconditionally appointed to the office.

— The Hon. Mr. Amos took his departure yesterday morning in the Earl of Hardwicke. The Supreme Council is thus without a Legislative member; and it is generally understood to be the wish of Lord Ellenborough that thus it should remain; but it is much to be questioned whether, while the last Charter continues in full force, any Act of the Council would be valid, without the presence of such a member. That Parliament would repeal the clause which appointed the Legal Counsellor, without a division, almost without a debate, there can be little doubt; but it may be doubted whether it would be safe to allow the validity of any enactment to be called in question, by neglecting to appoint a pro. tem. successor of Mr. Amos.

— The Gates, says the Star, after all remain at Delhi. Does he mean to say that they are after all to remain at Delhi, and go no farther? If so, he may be reckoning without his host. We believe they will move forward till stopped by some order from home. No such order can yet have been received, but it is doubtless now traversing France, and—the Temple will not be rebuilt. It is not the worst part of this joke,—if joke it can be called,—that the chief, who holds the land on which the renovated fane is to be erected, is himself a Mahomedan!

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 6.

— Letters from the North West state, that General Shelton's Court Martial which began on the 20th of January, terminated on the 23d or 24th, and that the charges on which he was tried were such as he could easily rebut. If he is acquitted, every Court Martial will have terminated favourably, and the whole brunt of censure for the sacrifice of an entire army, will rest on the memory of General Elphinstone.

— The Delhi Gazette states, that intelligence had reached Lahore, of Akbar Khan's having hoisted the green flag, and proclaimed a religious war against the infidels. He has sent to the Mahomedan princes of Central Asia, and invited them to attack the Seiks of Pushawur. It is said that fifty thousand fanatics are ready to join his standard and pour down on the Punjab. It is natural that he should conceive such a project after the events of the last year, and it is even probable that the religious enthusiasm of the Affghans may lead them to another invasion of India, but out of their own mountain fastnesses, they are nothing. The only difficulty in the matter, is the part which England will be constrained to take, if its ally, the ruler of the Punjab, should require aid.

— Dost Mahomed continues to linger on the British territories. He has not crossed the Sutledge; and it is not altogether certain that his ambitious son Akbar Khan would willingly resign the sceptre into his hands.

— Mr. Henry Chamier has taken the usual oaths and his seat as Member of Council at Madras.

— The Sumachar Durpun states, that Mr. Trevor, the Magistrate of Baraset, has obtained subscriptions from the native landholders for the construction of a road between Baraset and Jessore to the extent of 18,000 Rs.; but as it was insufficient for the purpose, he asked the assistance of Government, which, says that Journal, has been refused. We question whether the local Government would feel itself authorized to disburse the requisite sum without direct instructions from Lord Ellenborough. We advise the native Zemindars therefore to send up a petition to his Lordship, and to remind him of the promise he made at home, that when "peace was restored to Asia," the resources of the country should be applied to internal improvements. There is peace in Asia; there is also no lack of money in the public Treasury, as the tournament at Ferozepore, and the procession of the Gates abundantly proves, and his Lordship does not seem indisposed to a very liberal expenditure of the public funds. We think the petitioners have every chance of success on their side.

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 7.

— The result of the Opium Sale of yesterday was as satisfactory to Government as that of the previous sale. The quantity sold was 1790 chests; the sum realized Rs. 22,14,050, another clear profit of about Sixteen lakhs of Rupees to the Exchequer.

— The Nemesis Steamer anchored off Calcutta yesterday from China. This is the vessel which caused such consternation among the Chinese wherever she moved. They usually called her the Black smoking devil.

— The death of Mr. Vaughan, the Taxing Master of the Supreme Court, has created a vacancy. The Englishman's penny-a-liner, says in his simplicity; we have been given to understand that there are several candidates at present in the field for this place; as though it was any thing remarkable that a place worth 3000 Rs. a month. (3600£ a year,) would long went candidates. Mr. E. B. Ryan is said to be the fortunate individual to whom the legal prize is likely to fall.

— During the Mohurrum festival, which has just begun, the wealthy Mogul Hajee Kurboolaee has illuminated the whole of the street leading to his house; but six or eight lanterns have been missing every night. The thief has been detected in the person of a beastee, but the Hajee released him. He has adopted, it is said, the wise plan of never complaining. Robbers have relieved him sometimes of Cashmeer Shawls and sometimes of Chandeliers, but he has never brought them up; he has thus saved his time and his patience, both of which he would have lost, as well as his money, if he had gone to the Police.

— Accounts have been received at length from Sir Charles Napier, who had proceeded into the sandy desert with 350 men of H. M. 22d, mounted on Camels, against a small fort, which he found empty. The same letter says, that there is a report that Dost Mahomed was to come down to Sukkur, to enter Affghanistan through the Bolan Pass. A similar notice was published at Delhi, and it may possibly be true. It is now confidently affirmed that the Ameers of Hydrabad have agreed to all the demands made by Lord Ellenborough. One of the Euphrates Steamers, which his Lordship in his proclamation said he had transferred to the Indus, has arrived at Sukkur; but it draws too much water to be useful, and will be of no advantage for the conveyance of troops.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 8.

— Sir Hugh Gough, after having paid a visit in his way from China, to Moulmein, has arrived in the river in H. M. Ship Endymion. The ships from China are coming in apace and our port will soon be crowded with discharged transports.

— The Hurkaru states that the Superintendent of Police has been directed to examine in person, the condition of the Police in the district of Jessore, which appears to be in a very disorderly state. There will be no peace in that district, till the number of Magistrates has been increased, and the Zemindars and Planters have been compelled to dismiss their war establishment of Club men.

— The Nemesis brings news from China to the last day of the year. The traffic in Opium was openly conducted in the river, without any attempt at smuggling the drug. The conduct of some of the merchants is represented as being highly disgraceful. The cargo of not fewer than six vessels have been smuggled in or out, under favor of the night, without paying the usual dues or port charges. What right have we to charge the Chinese with a lax morality when Britons are thus found ready to evade the laws, and to disgrace their national character? There can be no doubt that the sharpness of Sir Henry Pottinger's reply to the merchants was in some measure occasioned by these disreputable practises.

CONTEMPORARY SELECTIONS.

LAHORE.

"We give a prominent place to the annexed items from Lahore, which may be depended upon to the best of our belief, conveying as they do the intelligence we have long since anticipated of a projected attack by Sirdar Mahomed Ukbar on the possessions of Shere Singh, west of the Indus. It is the necessary result of late proceedings and may involve us, as the most thoughtless even must have foreseen, in renewed operations on the other side of that river, for to say that we can refuse the sovereign of the Punjab our assistance in the emergency which will arise, is to suppose a degree of political guilt in our rulers, which we should be grieved indeed to see attached to them. Shere Singh will solicit our aid, and it would be the basest ingratitude to deny him assistance after the really efficient manner in which he stood by us in our late invasion of Cabul. We are making arrangements for securing authentic intelligence in the threatened quarter, and hope they will be successful. In connection with these matters we may as well mention that the Ameer Dost Mahomed is still at Loodianah, without any apparent hope of bringing his son to give up the power he has assumed with such a high hand.

An URZEE was received from Peshawur, stating that Sirdar Mahomed Ukbar Khan had marched from Khooloon to Cabul, where he had been opposed by the Kuzzulbashes, and fought with them on the 19th December, when a number of them were killed, wounded and taken prisoners; the rest fled. Of the prisoners the greatest number were thrown into dungeons with chains on, and others blown away from guns. The consequence was that he firmly established his rule from Cabul to the Khyber, and that Shahzadeh Shapoor fled from the capital. He was traced by several hundreds of the Sirdar's sowars, who went to pursuit, but they returned unsuccessful. The last intelligence thence represented Mahomed Ukbar Khan as being prepared to advance on Jellalabad; and that he had written urgent letters to the rulers of Bulkh, Bokhara and Koondooz, also to the sovereigns of Herat and Persia to join him in a war of religion. The Maharajah sent immediately orders to the Nazim of Peshawur to despatch two trusty Mussulmans towards Cabul, to ascertain what were the real intentions of the Sirdar.

Jan. 11th.—Khwaje Mahomed Khan, son of Sultan Mahomed Khan of Peshawur, again presented himself at the durbar, and stated, that his father had received letters from Mahomed Ukhbar (his nephew,) to the effect that he was no longer to pay obedience to the ruler of Lahore, but like a good son of Islam, at once to renounce his allegiance and proceed to join him (Ukhbar Khan) as he was about to march on Peshawur with 50,000 men, and when it was conquered, would make it over to him again. The original letter was laid before the Maharajah by Khwaje Mahomed Khan, on which H. H. observed to Rajah Dhyan Singh that Mahomed Ukhbar had at once assumed a very lofty tone, but that it would be considerably lowered when he came to encounter the armies of the Khalsa. In the evening Azeez-ood-deen was told to have a pinnace built for his Highness's recreation on the ravee.

Jan. 12th.—Particular instructions were sent to the Killedar of Jumrood to use vigilance, night and day, as in the present state of Affghanistan, it was very possible he might be attacked.

Jan. 13th—An Urzee arrived from Cabul with news to the effect that Mahomed Ukhbar had written to his uncle Kohun-dil Khan, Reheem-dil Khan and Poor-dil Khan, stating that the English army, before which they had fled into Persia, having returned to Hindoostan, and Shahzadeh Shah-poor having abandoned Cabul, he had assumed the sovereignty putting to death and imprisoning the Sirdars his enemies, and that they were now at liberty to return to Affghanistan; he also informed them of his intention to turn his arms against Peshawur and take that province from the Sikhs. In the evening Hakeem Azeez-ood-deen was sent for to administer relief to His Highness's eyes in which he felt much pain.

Jan. 14th.—The durbar was this morning held in the Rung-Mehal, and the most urgent instructions sent to the Nazim of Peshawur to be on his guard against the Affghans. Rajah Goolab Singh intimated his intention of returning to Jumboo, and obtained permission to leave Lahore.

Jan. 15th.—The Maharajah performed certain ceremonies this morning, bathed, and held his durbar in the Rung-Mehal. He was anxious to obtain some account from Dewan Deena Nath of Dewan Sawun Mull's finances, and was informed that Mooltan yielded a revenue of one crore of rupees, of which 50 lakhs were expended for the pay of the army, &c. and 50 lakhs remitted to the treasury of the khalsa, as annual tribute. The Maharajah told Dhyan Singh he had heard that all the houses built by the English at Cabul had been destroyed by Mahomed Ukhbar Khan.—Delhi Gazette, Jan. 28.

THE MURDER OF SIR WM. MACNAGHTEN.

DEC. 23.—About 10 A. M., a letter was received by the Envoy from Mahommed Ukhbar, accompanying one also from Skinner, the contents of the latter being as far as I could learn as follows:—"Young Hotspur is just mounting with the view of having a personal conference with you, and entering into a settlement of the matter proposed in his letter last night;" that of the former being of the same tenor. The Envoy immediately sent for the General, to whom I understand he had previously written, and made him acquainted with the outline of the present plot, and requested him secretly to warn two regiments and a like number of guns for special services, one for the purpose of occupying the Bala Hissar, the other proceeding to Mahmood Khan's fort, to obtain possession of the person of the Naib Ameen Oollah, who was to be brought back a prisoner into cantonments.—Note: in accordance with the above arrangements the 54th Regt. and Shah's 6th, with two guns, were warned for secret service, and kept under arms all day.

The Envoy, accompanied by Captains Lawrence, Trevor and Mackenzie, left cantonments at about 11 A. M., and proceeded towards the usual place of meeting. His accustomed calm and collected manner, appeared to have left him on this occasion, and one of his suite observing as he left cantonments that it was unusually full of Affghans, and that the Garrison apparently were not on the alert, or prepared for any sudden attack; he rather petulantly replied, "it is only a piece, with every thing else, and although the General is fully aware of this important crisis, you see nothing is ready." He, at the same time, sent back one of the Affghans, who accompanied him, desiring him to order his countrymen to leave the place. After quitting the gateway, opposite which were standing at least 300 armed Ghazees, evidently prepared for mischief, one of the suite suggested to Sir William, "that it would be as well for him to return and warn the reserve to stand to their arms, outside the Fosse;" to which the Envoy acquiesced, adding, "and send for the remainder of my escort." He was then told that Lieut. LeGeyt was anxious to be a witness of the interview; to which he replied, "Good;" and desired him to notify to Brigadier Shelton, that he might also accompany him, he (the Brigadier) having expressed a wish to that effect, saying that they might come with the remainder of the escort who would start immediately. On approaching the banks of the canal, more Affghans than usual being observed about, the Envoy commenced telling his suite the tenor of his last night's communication, and the object of the present meeting, and warned his Military Secretary to be prepared to proceed at once to the Bala Hissar; to acquaint the King with the course matters were taking, and that a Regiment and guns, were about to march to his assistance, in case of an attack being made, by Ameen Oollah's party; some of his suite then observed to him, "Have you no fears of treachery, Sir?" to which he replied, "No, but the game that I am forced to play is doubtless a deep and desperate one; I have no confidence in the rebels fulfilling the treaty, not one article of which have they to this present moment complied with; I am also told that, dispirited and harassed as they are, I can look for nothing from the troops, and the result, should it be as I hope, will more than compensate for any risks I may run; at all events, I'd rather die a hundred deaths, than live my last six weeks over again; you know well what they have been."

On the banks of the canal, near the usual place of conference, the Envoy was met by the Sirdars Mahommed Ukhbar Khan, Sultan Jan, Mahommed Shah Khan, Khoda Buksh Khan, Gholam Moyoodeen, &c. &c., with the exception of one man being either Ghilzies or of the Sirdar Ukhbar Khan's immediate party. That one, was the active brother of Ameen Oollah Khan; and it is remarkable as showing how blind we poor mortals are, when led on by the irresistible hand of fate, that the Envoy failed to observe him! Had he done so, he would immediately have known that he was the victim of a conspiracy. The parties having interchanged mutual salutations, the Envoy presented him with a fine Arab (which the Sirdar had before much admired, and which the Envoy had bought for the British Government, at the price of 3,000 Rs.) saying, "Sirdar, I have bought you the horse you so anxiously desired," and he answered, "yes, and through your kindness, I have got these beautiful pistols of Lawrence Saib too," (pointing to a pair in his belt,) "your carriage and horses too, I have also received." After some talking on horseback, it was agreed they should dismount, and a small hillock which was freer from snow than the surrounding spots, was chosen by one of the Sirdar's servants, which, owing to its slope entirely shut out the view of cantonments. The horse cloths were spread, and the Envoy threw himself at full length on them, with his head towards the top of the bank, Captain Mackenzie and Trevor seated beside him, while Captain Lawrence remained standing behind his superior; until urged by the repeated solicitations of Dost Mahommed (Ghilzie) he knelt on one knee. No sooner had he done so, then he found himself pinned by both arms from behind, his pistols being at the same time pulled from his belt, and his sword from its sheath. On turning his head to look towards the Envoy, he was horrified at observing his head where his feet formerly had been, and his hands closely grasped by Sidars Ukhbar Khan and Sultan Jan; the expression of his face he describes at that moment as being most dreadful. Captain L. was hurried by Mahommed Shah Khan to his horse, who advised him, if he valued his life, to mount behind him instantly, which he, seeing resistance was hopeless, did. Hardly had he gained his seat, when bands of blood-thirsty Ghazees rushed from behind all the hillocks in the neighbourhood, where, until then, they had lain concealed, and screaming and roaring demanded the blood of the infidels, calling upon Mahommed Shah Khan to give up to them the Ferringhee behind him, who was their lawful prey. The Khan had, however, taken the precaution of having his own immediate horsemen on all sides, who in a measure kept off the crowd of fanatical savages. Capt. L. was providentially carried to Mahmood Khan's fort uninjured except by a few contusions. A short while after he was joined by Captain Mackenzie, who had run the gauntlet in the same manner through the Ghazees, but also unhurt, save by the contusions of blows from the muskets, &c. which had been liberally dealt out. He had been saved through the united efforts of Gholab Mayoodeen and a merchant named Bhawoor Khan.

From the moment of their arrival in the fort in which was the Naib Ameen Oollah, the cell they were put in was surrounded by fierce bands of Ghazees who thronged a small window, grossly reviled, spit on, and otherwise insulted them; continually presenting muskets which the people inside turned from them, doing also as much as they could to assuage the rage of the infuriated men.

After a time, several of the Affghan chiefs and their sons came to see the Ferringhee Infidels, and treated and spoke to them kindly, assuring them that they were in no danger. Naib Ameen Oollah, however, on asking our names, muttered threats of dire import, such as "We'll blow you from guns, any death will be too good for you." Mahommed Shah Khan and his brother Dost Mahommed hurried them out of the room exclaiming, "Barai khoda, don't talk in this way; you must spare them, they are your guests." During this time a hand reeking with blood was lifted up by some miscreants, which they afterwards heard was that of the Envoy's although Capt. Lawrence on entering the fort asked after his and Captain Trevor's fate, and was informed that they had been taken to the house of Ameen Oollah.

On their requisition, they gave them dinner, of which the chiefs themselves also partook, having previously in a gentlemanly manner eased them of their watches, rings, &c. The chiefs gave them posteen, and told them to sit down and eat, they themselves circling round the fire, recited the praises of Mahommed Shah Khan, who, they said, was the principal actor in that day's deeds.

At 12 o'clock at night, they were roused from their slumbers by this Shah Gassee, of Mahomed Ukhbar, who told them he had come by the Sirdar's orders to conduct them to his house, and that they must accompany him immediately. Accordingly, Capt. Lawrence mounted behind Dost Mahomed Khan, and Mackenzie, behind the Shah Gasse, and in this way they set out, and passed through a considerable portion of the city, which at that time was as silent as death, and they met with no molestation of any sort or kind. On their arrival at the Sirdar's they were ushered into the bed room, where with Mahomed Ukhbar they sat some time, the latter in tears deploring the occurrences of the day, although he did not acquaint them with the murder of the Envoy. After a short period he asked them if they would not like to see Capt. Skinner, and on their answering in the affirmative they were shown into another room, where they found the latter asleep, who told them (the first time they had heard it) of the cruel death (the manner of which I will hereafter relate) of Sir William Macnaghten and Captain Trevor; after some conversation on the melancholy subject, they lay down on the floor to sleep.—*Eng. ### THE STEAMERS "VEXEN" AND "MEMNON."

The first named of these magnificent vessels is a war-steamer belonging to the Royal Navy: she is 1075 tons burthen—about the size of the Semiramis, but greatly above that of any other vessel belonging to the Indian Navy save the Memnon: her engines are 240 horse-power: her paddles can be thrown out of gear in three minutes: she is armed with two eighty-six pound! swivel-guns. The Memnon is the most powerful vessel, for her tonnage, which has as yet rounded the Cape: she is 1143 tons burthen, and of 400 horse-power,—steamers of her class being scarcely ever allowed more than one horse-power for every three tons: her engines have double cylinders 54 inches in diameter each, so that she appears fitted in fact with four engines. She has two sets of boilers, with an interval sufficient to walk in between them,—with two rows of furnaces, one facing forward, the other aft, so that they are fed with fuel from two fire-chambers. Her paddle-boxes are on Smith's patent principle, with paddle-box boats, each of which is provided with a howitzer: she is armed fore-and-aft with swivel 68-prs., each of which weighs three tons and a quarter: she has, besides, on her sides four 34-pr. medium guns: she is nearly a hundred tons larger, and is propelled by engines of 100 horse-power greater power than the Semiramis,—which, until now, has been the largest of our steamers.—Bombay Times, Jan. 28.

THE GOVERNOR GENERAL'S PROCLAMATION.

The first part of the latter of these is trifling and childish enough. It is written in the true "Bartlemy Fair" spirit of exultation at the very pretty show which had just been got up. "Here is the Governor General of all India [says the grave official]—on his right hand you will observe Koonwur Purtaub Singh, son of His Highness the Maharajah of Lahore: on his left is Rajah Dhyan Singh, the prime minister, both mounted on superb Arab horses. The troops reviewed consist of nearly forty thousand men, with one hundred and two pieces of artillery. The regiment of Kelat-i-Ghilzie carries, for the first time, the Colours presented by the Governor General. The Europeans receive double rations, and the natives eat thirty thousand seers of sweets." This is not a paraphrase, but a slightly changed reprint of the notification, and is fit for the penny showman without almost a word of alteration.

The intimation of the pacification of Bundlekund is of a more grave and important character. Lord Auckland's admirers were wont to urge, that when disaffection prevailed in India, the way to deal with it was to make a demonstration on Affghanistan! The blowing up of Candahar would probably on the present occasion have been reckoned an excellent means of tranquillizing the Boondela Chiefs! Lord Ellenborough takes the old-fashioned and intelligible method of sending fourteen thousand troops to the spot,—conceiving, perhaps, in defiance of the new philosophy, that the best means of maintaining peace in a half reclaimed country is to chastise the disturbance-makers;—the best moral influence with barbarous plundering tribes the field-piece, the sabre, and the bayonet.—Bombay Times, Jan. 28.

"SUPERCESSION IN THE MEDICAL SERVICE.

SIR,—It is now currently reported that it is the intention of the Governor, under the sanction of the late Boon Regulations, to supercede Mr. Knox in his promotion to the grade of Superintending Surgeon. This is, as yet, only a report and I trust one never to be realised, for if supercession actually takes place the Medical Service have no other alternative left to them, than that of upholding their rights by bringing the matter to a legal decision either in the Supreme Court or Queen's Bench.

It is now upwards of 17 years since I signed covenants binding myself to serve the Honourable Company in consideration of receiving in return certain equivalents specified in their then existing regulations of the service, one of which was, promotion by seniority to the several grades of Surgeon—Superintending Surgeon—and Member of the Medical Board.

Mr. Knox five and twenty years ago entered into a similar agreement with the same parties. But mark what happens. After fagging through the service for full quarter of a century, counting the hours as they passed, until the one should arrive, which would relieve him from the onerous, irksome, and deeply responsible duties of an executive Medical Officer, and put him in possession of the easier more agreeable and better paid ones of Superintending Surgeon, that is, for the fulfilment, by the Court, of its half of the bargain—I say after all this, after his health is broken by long service and himself no longer fit for the arduous duties of an executive Officer, when the long looked for goal is not only within sight, but almost within his grasp, the Court gently interposes and with all the blandness in the world requests him to wait a moment, as the Members have a few words to exchange with him previous to his taking formal possession. We may suppose some such colloquy as the following thus takes place between the parties.

COURT—"You are aware Mr. Knox that a few months ago, we conferred a great Boon on the Medical Service by granting certain greatly improved rates of retiring pensions to our old Medical Officers but claiming for ourselves, one and only one, condition in return: namely, that you in common with the other members of the service shall give up your claims to promotion by seniority in the higher grades: and having established this rule, it is now our intention to act upon it by passing you over and promoting a junior over your head."

KNOX—(in the name of the Service at large) "Gentlemen, you have hitherto been so sparing of your favours to the medical branch of the service, that we are always ready to receive with thankfulness even the smallest contributions in that way, and such we certainly consider your vaunted boon by which we have gained a loss; but we are not willing to batter away any of our existing rights, for any consideration you can offer—give as much as you please, but take nothing from the little we already have.

And Gentlemen, remember I hold military Commissions from both yourselves and his late Majesty constituting me a military Officer, with all the rights, privileges, and immunities appertaining thereto. And further remember that, by virtue of these commissions and our line promotion, I am precluded from serving under the orders of any junior Officer in my own line.

Consider also, that when you conferred a boon similar in kind, but infinitely more valuable in its terms, on the purely military branch, you did not exact from them the privilege of selecting from among the Major's line, those whom you might wish to raise to the rank of Lieut. Colonel, to the exclusion of seniors—neither from the Captains of Regiments those whom you might wish to elevate to that of Field Officers.

Had you done so, in either of these cases and the innovation been permitted, we could not have objected, but as the matter now stands we do object. Gentlemen, we are part and parcel of the Army—and an important part too—we in common with them are made to endure all the hardships and privations of military life, and are equally subject to the summary proceedings of martial law—we therefore on these accounts, as well as in right of our military Commissions claim whatever advantages of a general nature may be conferred on our purely military brethren. On these grounds we claim from you, our "Honourable Masters," the extension of the military boon, uncurtailed, to the medical branch of the service and without any such deduction as that you are now making. And if this fair and just demand be not conceded, you will most deservedly forfeit in the estimation of all honest and honourable men, your right to the dearly cherished title of "Honourable." As regards myself, gentlemen, I warn you, that if you attempt to pass me over, (which under the provisions of my commission is virtually to dismiss me from the service) or to deprive me of my right of promotion, by seniority, to the highest grade—a right conferred on your side by your regulations, and honestly won on mine by 25 years service, I proceed direct from this chamber to my legal adviser and direct him to sue you for damages, for breach of contract, in the Queen's Bench.

The alternative is now before you—accord to me my rights or be prepared to take the consequence."

Whether Mr. Editor, Mr. Knox possesses the firmness to address such language to the Governor in Council here, is more than I can tell, but if he has not, there are not wanting men in the Service who have, and who in doing so will command the encouragement and support of all their brethren. If therefore the orders not issued, I would respectfully, but urgently suggest, for his Lordship's most serious consideration, to ponder well before taking so fearful a step.

From the moment the order is promulgated, the whole of the Indian Medical Service is placed in collision with Government, and might and right being no longer convertible terms, why I beg to subscribe myself your most obedient servant.

Bangalore, 9th Jan. 1843. "BEWARE!"

THE RELIGIOUS HERALD.

We were this morning favoured with a copy of a Prospectus of a monthly periodical, to be entitled the Religious Herald. It is to be published in the Burmese language on the first Wednesday in every month, by the American Baptist Missionaries, and is to be printed on half a sheet, or, we suppose, to consist of 4 pages 4to. The objects of the paper are defined to be "the improvement of the native christians and the diffusion of light among the heathen portion of the community." Its pages will therefore "be open to the insertion of every thing which is adapted to these ends." The price of subscription is one Rupee only, per annum. Even this low rate of subscription, we fear, will not secure the paper an extensive circulation among the natives, who have not a sufficient appreciation of knowledge to pay for it. The cheapness of subscription, however, will enable those, who are willing both to buy and impart knowledge, to subscribe for several copies for the purpose of gratuitous distribution.—Maulmain Chronicle.

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.

DUTY ON BOOKS.

To the Editor of the Friend of India.

DEAR SIR,—In the weekly epitome of news in your paper of the 20th instant, I observe some remarks relative to a recent notice in the Englishman on the subject of Duty to be paid on printed books taken to England. The observations in the Englishman were in answer to some queries of mine.

Having a small library of books to get rid of, some of them scarce and valuable, and aware by experience of the fate that awaited them at an auction sale, I resolved, if the duty were moderate, to send them home. In an Agent's letter of 1822 I found that foreign books paid duty, bound at £6 10s. and unbound at £5 per cwt. while on books originally published in, and exported from England, the duty was nominal, or 3 pence per cwt. you say 3d. a lb. or £1 or 8s. the cwt.

The Agent says, that he carried home a lot of books and found no inconvenience beyond what arose on other parts of his baggage. There might however be a difference between books as passenger's baggage and as cargo.

In 1832, the foreign booksellers of London used to charge shillings for francs or 20 per cent. on the retail price of imported foreign works. What the average relative value of a cwt. of books may be, it would be difficult to ascertain; but the value must have been great to admit of profit with a charge of £5 duty.

I speak only of profit on retail price, which as every one knows is somewhat less than forty per cent. above the Book Trade price, at least so Babbage says.

Profits and prices are a little foreign to the question under view; but the subject, by the enactment of the Copyright Act, becomes one of vast importance to the reading community here. And now that a regular steam carriage runs up to our very doors, let the booksellers keep a bright look out and lower their prices at least 10 or 15 per cent.; or else the home Agents will assuredly take the trade out of their hands by shewing the public the advantage of purchasing at the source.

Yours, &c.

A.

ABOLITION OF SLAVERY.

To the Editor of the Friend of India.

SIR,—I think that in your paper of the 19th you have somewhat overrated the result likely to be attained by the Slavery Act about to be passed; and that you have fallen somewhat into the common error of thinking that all Slavery is the same,—a "bitter pill at the best,"—as Sterne calls it; and that ours in this country is in some of its features analogous in more than mere name to that in the West Indies and elsewhere, and almost equally repugnant to those who are subjected to it.

The cruelties committed in the abduction and subsequent treatment of the negro slaves in nine-tenths of our West Indian plantations, as practised but a very few years back by educated men speaking the English language and professing the Christian religion, can no more be compared with the mode of acquiring and the treatment of slaves in this country during the last half century than a Hammersmith burglary to a Mofussil "Nukubzari;" or the labour exacted from a convict on the Coal river, Botany Bay, to that of an Indian prisoner mending the public roads in the 24-Pergunnahs!

The difference between involuntary servitude performed in a man's own country, living upon the air and food to which he has been always accustomed, and probably seeing some members at least of his family every day of his life,—and that amongst strangers of a different tongue, and breathing an uncongenial air is wide indeed; and when to this it is added, that in the latter state acts of violence and cruelty were of hourly occurrence both from the habits of the taskmasters and from the absence of all social checks; and that in the former, masters are notoriously kind, and that few instances of cruelty perpetrated by them can pass unnoticed,—the difference between slavery in the two Indies will be allowed to be still wider, and hardly fit to be called by the same generic name.

It has been well ascertained that male slaves in this country fare better in most families than out-of-door free servants; while the ill-treatment of slaves of either sex is seldom heard of,—as it would be through the medium of a gossiping village community were it the case. It is only in the killehs of Nawabs and Rajahs that it could remain a secret; and there even the testimony of respectable men goes to shew that it is the exception more than the rule. Are free wives and female relations imprisoned in their zenanehs by that tyrant custom never ill-treated without the possibility of gaining redress? of course they are; and what is more, probably oftener and more harshly than a concubine slave.

What I have just observed has reference to what we see in our own presidency. With respect to Central India, Sir John Malcolm bears evidence to the slavery being chiefly confined to females; to men slaves, when they are met with, being generally in the train of men of rank as confidential servants, (it was not quite this way in Maryland and Jamaica;) and to their being "more like adopted children than menials." Forbes too, the Bombay man, speaking of the domestic customs of the people of Cambay and Gujerat, says emphatically, "no cruel taskmasters and overseers increase the hardships of bondage; they (the slaves) are all household servants, often confidential domestic friends, and are never employed in agriculture or laborious work."

It cannot surely be said that legislation on this subject has entirely slumbered for "seventy years." There are no laws in force of an earlier date than those of 1793; and in these can be found no single provision in favor of slavery anything resembling that quoted by you as enacted in 1772. By a proclamation of Government, dated 22d July, 1789* persons concerned in the traffic of exported slaves had been declared liable to a criminal prosecution; and this proclamation appears to have been embodied in Reg. 22, of 1795, Sect. 74. By Reg. 8, of 1799, the killing of a slave was declared murder, any thing in the Mohammedan law notwithstanding. Regulations 10, of 1821, and 3, of 1832, prohibit all traffic in slaves not only imported from abroad, but brought from one province of the country to another, whether the slaves so transported objected to the change or not; while a Circular Order of the Nizamut Adawlut of the 27th April, 1798, makes the emasculation of slaves, with or without their consent, a heinous offence.

I do not mean for one moment to deny that some law of the spirit of the one before us should be enacted. It would be well worthy of an independent, manly, and upright Government. All I maintain is that your estimate of its value† is overdrawn; that slavery in this country is much magnified by Calcutta patriots, (who don't object to the exportation of slaves,—coolies I mean, to the Mauritius,) and county members at home;—(who can forget O'Connel's account of the cruel manufacture of East India muscavado by Slaves?) —and that there is much to be said on both sides.

Besides, under no law or regulation in force amongst us has the right to barter in slaves been acknowledged; and the civil recognition of such rights has been solely under the Mahomedan code. By the Hindoo law, slaves being attached to the land are held to be real or immoveable property,‡ which scarcely leaves them slaves at all. Under the Civil law administered according to the Koran, Shureef decrees have certainly been given in our Courts for servitude against slaves properly so considered; and persons with their families have been declared the slaves and as such the property of decree-holders;§ but no where can I learn that such decrees,—(and considering the number of slaves they have been exceedingly few,)—have been enforced by force or restraint even. Had they been so, I feel certain there would have been many a Magistrate, whether in former or present times, to have taken cognizance of the matter, and to have interposed the strong arm of the executive on behalf of the oppressed,—slave or no slave. There is certainly an anomaly here, but a Magistrate acts solely under the Anglo-Indian code of laws; (by Construction, No. 891, he only consults the law officer in cases of novelty and difficulty,—which these could never be;) and the negative measure of not making the barter of slaves amongst slave-holders in our own Provinces a penal offence can neither be considered by him an expression of assent, nor of the reverse. It might as well be argued that because an assault is not punishable where the injured party declines to prosecute, it is not a misdemeanour! In fact, by a Construction of the Nizamut Adawlut of the 29th March 1835,|| a Magistrate is enjoined without examining into the fact of slavery, merely upon the assertion of a person that he is not a slave, (and if a slave the case is, I opine, the same,) to give that person redress for violent detention, leaving the opposite party to recover his rights, as he best may, through the Civil Court; and I will repeat, that there is not a Magistrate in the country who would recognize the right of one person to coerce even, much less to maltreat, a slave as long as there was no statute extant enjoining a difference between one Native of the country and another.

The abolition of slavery however is one thing, and the non-recognition of it by the legislature another. Under this new Act hundreds of starving infants will still be cherished in humane servitude; but, as it should be, all social disabilities with regard to such on their arriving at an age of discretion will cease. Adults will no longer be bought and sold like household furniture and cattle (plough-bullocks are exempted by law from such sales!) in liquidation of debt; and if they fly from a hard master, their restoration will not be enforced by a Court of Civil law. So far so good: but on such being known will not the rich be probably more chary of supporting the children of the starving poor? And the Magistrates in future find persons less willing to bring up without reward the hundreds of deserted infants they yearly find deserted in their paths?

† The Hurkaru has also, I find, taken up the subject in the same light, but I have not seen the article.

‡ Elements of Hindoo Law, by Sir T. Strange, vol. I. on "Property."

§ Constructions of S. D. A. Nos. 350 and 1009.

|| This Construction is general; it is not applicable only to Assam, as is sometimes thought.

With respect to the provisions of this particular Act I will state,—first—that no slave has ever been bought and sold in enforcing demands for rent and revenue: secondly, that no rights in the person and services of a slave have ever (legally at all events,) been enforced by a Criminal Court;* and—thirdly—very very seldom, not once perhaps in 20 years in each of the Behar and Ceded districts, by a Civil Court; and,—fourthly—that for the last 40 years no act of violence, however trifling, has ever been committed on a slave with the knowledge of a European Magistrate where the offence has not been regarded a "penal" one, and treated accordingly.

It only remains for me to suggest some slight modification in the Act now drafted. I would propose that the provisions be ordered to come into force, say three or four years hence; that all bonafide slaves at this date be registered; and that all such slaves able to purchase or procure their manumission be enabled to have their names struct out at any time. Slaves no more than any other description of personal property recognized by the Civil law of the land, should be taken away from their proprietors without either warning or compensation. I would also make a proviso, that the voluntary slavery of a man above age, so common in parts of the country, in satisfaction of a money claim be permitted, with sufficient checks to prevent abuse, and under the distinct understanding that his progeny (as all progeny after this date) be free from their birth.

I remain, your most obedient servant,

AN ASSISTANT MAGISTRATE.

27th January, 1843.

* The registry of slaves (as practised in some few districts) at the Thannahs was pronounced illegal by the Supt. of Police in his Circular of 31st Dec. 1841.

RELIGIOUS.

A PUSEYITE CHURCH.—In a recent journey through the hop district of Kent, I had occasion to remain for some days in the vicinity of Goodhurst. When the Lord's-day came, I repaired to one of the nearest churches, hoping to find in this retired district, purity of doctrine combined with the simplicity of Christian worship. The one I happened to select is called Kilndown Church, a modern edifice. I had just taken my seat, when a vehicle drove up, from which was taken, with considerable ceremony, a pair of silver or plated candlesticks, nearly a yard high, in which candles of fitting lengths were adapted, and placed one on each end of the communion table. Between those, and opposite a gilt cross, was arranged the sacramental plate, consisting of two large silver flagons, and a pair of salvers, having in front the cup. Shortly after these things had been thus formally laid out, appeared the Clergyman. He entered the communion rails from a side door on the left, arrayed in his surplice, and followed by a number of boys also in white surplices, as actors come upon a stage from the side wings. The latter took their seats on forms placed in a slanting direction from the end of the table to the wall, which made them appear as almost fronting the congregation. The place out of which they came, I was afterwards informed, is called the "sacristy," and was built for the purpose of dressing, and keeping their surplices in. Before this time the bell had ceased, the church was crowded, and we were all waiting for the service to begin; but it was evident from the appearance of anxiety in the Clergyman and boys, that there was some cause for delay existing. In this state we continued fully a quarter of an hour, when carriage wheels, dashing the gravel, announced the arrival of some considerable personage; the surplices were all in commotion, but again we were doomed to disappointment,—it was only the family of a neighbouring gentleman, and who could, therefore, wait like the rest of us.

After a very crowded congregation had endured a farther lengthened delay, again did the plashing of gravel, and the confusion of wheels and horses, put us all, particularly the surplices round the communion-table, once more on the qui vive. A tall laced and liveried footman, with his cane, strode up the footway, and held open the door of a large pew close to the communion rail, followed by another, bearing on both hands a pile of gigantic prayer-books and bibles. After came two ladies and two gentlemen. These latter were, Field Marshal Lord Beresford, of Bedgebury Park, a near relative, if not a brother, of the Primate of Armagh, head of the Established Church in Ireland, and Mr. Hope, M.P., for Maidstone, the owners of the greater portion of the lands adjoining, the munificent givers of plate and candlesticks, and the beautifiers and anti-Protestantizers of Kilndown Church, at a cost of, some say 3,000*l.*, others 5,000*l.* Our anxiety was now at an end; the expected great ones had, indeed, arrived, and the service commenced with bowings and other formalities of the new Oxford, or to speak more properly, the old Popish, school. The service was read in three different places within the rails; first, kneeling on a cushion, and desk fronting the table, with the minister's back to the people; then, at the end of the table; and again in a sort of box, or three sides of a square, almost breast high, set within the rails near the pulpit, which the sexton informed me was called the "confessional." After a short and formal sermon, which I have not space to particularize, the footmen re-appeared and bore off the books, the distinguished personages rolled off in their carriages, amidst the doffing of hats of their assembled tenants and dependants, which they seemed not to notice, and the candlesticks and plate were again consigned to the conveyance that brought them.

The church is seated with plain forms, with backs for the common people, except about half-a-dozen raised pews for the gentry, who are at the upper end adjoining the communion table. The east window is composed of three lancets of splendid coloured glass. The centre one contains a representation of the Virgin Mary, almost the size of life, seated in a highly-finished gothic niche, dressed in a blue gown and hood, with a red petticoat; and on her knee an infant, perfectly naked. The right lancet is filled by St. Peter, holding a pair of keys; the left by St. Paul, pictured with a sword; both the latter figures are standing, and the heads of all are surrounded with glories. A saint occupies every window in this Protestant church of Kilndown, having a label at his feet informing the ignorant in such matters of his name and rank, such as St. Augustinus, St. Cyprianus, St. Gregorius, St. Hieronymus, and others. But what surprised me most was the west window on the right side of the church-door, which is filled with a full-length painting of King Charles I., labelled "Sanct. Carolus Rex et Martyr," dressed in his Royal robes, wearing the insignia of the Order of the Garter, his crown upon his head surrounded with a glory, his sceptre in his right hand, with the left resting on his sword; and the face having the peaked beard, and that peculiarly mild expression with which, after the Restoration, it became so much the fashion to paint his likeness. As a fitting coadjutor to this new "saint," is placed, in the window on the opposite of the door, duly labelled, sainted, and titled, no less a personage than Pope Gregory, dressed in his Papal robes, with the triple crown of the Popedom on his head; in his left hand, the patriarchal staff or triple cross, and his right hand raised, as if in the act of bestowing his benediction on the congregation. All the figures are standing, have rays of glory round their heads, and are almost as large as life. The communion-table is a square stone altar, with thirteen hollowed Gothic niches, three at each end and seven in front; prepared, probably, in anticipation of the twelve Apostles, and the centre, or superior one for the Virgin, or some other Popish "idol of wood or stone." At the back, as if placed upon the table, in a compartment lined with purple velvet, is a gilt cross, about eighteen inches high. A foreigner, an Italian, I was informed, is living at Bedgebury Park, brought over specially to paint and ornament this church. Accordingly, he has painted over the communion-table, on the ceiling, the Pope's banner; viz. a lamb bearing the cross and pennan, surrounded with rays; also crowns of thorns, hammers, nails, a cup with doves, triangle surrounding an eye, a rod and sponge, an eagle perched on a prostrate bird, innumerable stars, and other devices to me unintelligible, on several of which the letters I. H. O. are conspicuous. The walls are covered with selections from the Scriptures and Apocrypha, particularly from the latter, as if they were of equal authority, in party-coloured letters, which seem to be chosen for the purpose of inculcating certain dogmas. Thus on each side of the gilt cross at the back of the altar are two compartments: the words on the right are, "The cup of the blessing which we bless, is it not the communion of the blood of Christ? and the bread which we break, is it not the communion of the body of Christ?" The words on the left are, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you." Not one word of doing this "in remembrance," thereby showing forth the Lord's death till he come, as he has commanded. The words marked in italics are in red letters, to distinguish them from the others, which are black.

During the evening service, which began precisely at six in the after part of one of the longest days in July, and which concluded in broad daylight, the mummery of lighting the candles on the altar was gone through. —From a Correspondent of the Record.

THE CLERGY AND DISSENTERS.—The measure of Church-extension and Dissent-suppression which Mr. Mackinnon has introduced into Parliament under pretence of a regard for the "Health of Towns," is beginning to attract a degree of attention proportioned to its importance. Our readers have already seen that a movement in arrest of its insidious progress has been made in the city of Bristol and in the county of Huntingdon; steps having been taken in both places for co-operating with the Metropolitan Committee formed for the purpose of opposing the hypocritical device. The subject is under discussion among the provincial Newspapers, who learn, to their surprise and dismay, that a Bill founded upon evidence confined to the Metropolis, is drawn up so as to embrace all England. An able Article which we have transcribed from the current Number of the Baptist Magazine, proves that the subject is engaging the attention of that denomination; and we understand that it has been formally brought under the consideration of the Congregational Union. We hear also, that the Committee which acts for the great Methodist Body in matters affecting their interests, intends to oppose the farther progress of the Bill, as an intolerable invasion of vested rights, to say nothing of the claims of religious freedom. In short, we are fully warranted in promising Mr. Mackinnon as warm a reception,—should he have the temerity to move the re-introduction of his bold Bill,—as Lord Sidmouth himself met with some two and-thirty years ago. The Protestant Dissenters triumphed then, and why should they not triumph now? They triumphed then, because they were united; and they will always triumph, when they are united. All their failures have been owing to disunion. Church-rates are still levied, or attempted to be levied; and why? Just because Dissenters of every class are not united in demanding their abolition. Our Wesleyan brethren, for reasons satisfactory no doubt to themselves, (though what satisfactory reasons they can allege is incomprehensible to us,) will not join in the opposition to Church-rates; and, therefore, Church-rates are not legislatively abolished. But, in opposing Mr. Mackinnon's Bill, Wesleyans will be found fighting side by side with every other Dissenting denomination, as they did in 1811; and that which happened to Sidmouth in 1811, will happen to Mackinnon in 1843.

It will be said, perhaps, by the timorous Dissenter, that the Church party are stronger than ever; and that, therefore, we cannot hope to defeat them; and certainly, to make the attempt under the influence of such a notion, would not be promising. But is it a fact, that the Church party are stronger than they were at the beginning of the present century? That party may be more supercilious and more desperate; but let us remember who hath said, "Pride goeth before destruction, and a haughty spirit before a fall," and not be unreasonably discouraged by disdainful airs and a swaggering bearing. No; more desperate they may be; but stronger they are not. In fine, whatever difference there may be in the circumstances of the two cases, is all in our favour. Lord Sidmouth was a Cabinet Minister; Mr. Mackinnon is a mere cat's paw. Our fathers had to encounter a Government measure; the Bill with which we are menaced, affiliates itself upon a private Member of Parliament, although some wily Bishop may be the real parent. Was the principle of Lord Sidmouth's Bill an infamous attack upon the first principles of religious freedom, so is Mackinnon's; with the aggravation of being far more vexatious in its details, and of involving a measure of national taxation and of national confiscation too; and all at the mere caprice and for the exclusive benefit of an idle, luxurious, and over paid clergy. We have ventured to assert that the Church party are not stronger now than they were when their lordly champion was fain to succumb to the voice of Dissenting indignation; but there is another question. Are the Dissenters weaker? If the Wesleyans, the Independents, and the Baptists, were too powerful to be resisted in the days of Castlereagh and Sidmouth, will Peel and Stanley venture to slight their combined determination in 1843? We trow not. Let them act now as they, or, rather, their fathers, acted then; and the meddling Member for Lymington will be left to get out of the scrape as he best may.

Of the desperate temper of the Clergy in relation to this question, we might easily adduce many illustrations. Let one suffice. "Professor Scholefield and the Clergy of Cambridge," (we give the very words of a most trustworthy and careful Correspondent,) "have resolved to demand their full fees for all interments in that town, even when they take place in Dissenting Chapels or burying-grounds. The Professor lately declined to bury a Dissenter, for whom no burial-place for some time could be found. At length, one of our chapels was made her burying-place, and her minister of course conducted the service. Judge of the surprise of the survivors, at receiving from Scholefield immediately a bill for every item usually found in his funeral accounts. I vouch for the truth of this statement. I should state also, that the bill was paid. The object of the Clergy is evident enough. They want to establish the custom. The Patriot, I doubt not, will effectually defeat them."

Our Correspondent anticipates the obvious remark, that the Evangelical Professor's demand was illegal, by observing that the Clergy "want to establish the custom." And, in fact, this is the object of Mr. Mackinnon's Bill: he would not merely "establish the custom," but make it law. The principle of his Bill is, to secure to every clergyman a certain payment on the death of every parishioner, whether buried by him or not. And this out of concern for the health of towns! Certainly the health of towns-people ought to be cared for; but why entrust it to a class of physicians who always prescribe bleeding?—Pat.

PUSEYITE ACTIVITY.—[The following circular appears to have been left at every house in the parish to which it relates. The parts in italics are similarly emphasised in the copy from which we print.]

"CHRIST CHURCH, HOXTON.

"CHRISTIAN BAPTISM.

"To all my Parishioners of Christ Church, Hoxton:

"Since so much misunderstanding of the true nature of Holy Baptism exists, especially among the poorer members of my flock, I find it my duty to explain to you thus publicly,

"That Holy Baptism is the Sacrament instituted by Christ Himself, through which we are admitted to the blessings of the Gospel: 'He that believeth and is baptised shall be saved:'

"That registration is only a civil act, appointed to ascertain the numbers of the people; and, therefore,

"That Registration is by no means the same thing as Baptism;

"And that Registration will not do as well as Baptism.

"That you are just as much bound to bring your children to the Church to be Baptised as your parents were when you were children yourselves: if the Registrar calls, you must answer his questions about the birth, but remember that this is not Baptism, and has nothing whatever to do with Baptism.

"That, though a child may be registered, yet, if it is not baptized, it is no Christian, nor is it, after death, entitled to Christian Burial.

"That it is 'certain by God's Word, that children which are baptized, dying before they commit actual sin, are undoubtedly saved;' but of children who die without Christian Baptism since they are not members of Christ's Church, in which alone salvation is to be had, we cannot be certain that they have the benefit of our Saviour's death.

"That the neglect of allowing children to die without Christian Baptism is a grievous sin on their parents' part: and the parents will have to account before God's judgment-seat for depriving their little ones of the spiritual blessing of becoming members of Christ, children of God, and inheritors of the kingdom of heaven.'

"That Christ's Ministers the Clergy of the Church of England, are alone duly commissioned to administer the Sacraments of the Gospel in this country; and, therefore, you are to seek Baptism for your children in the Church, and at the hands of the Clergy alone.

"That to prevent all hindrance from poverty, I have taken measures that no fee whatever shall be demanded for registering the Baptisms of children born within my district.

"That whenever, from previous neglect, children or others are growing up unbaptised, I shall be ready, upon due examination, to baptize such persons: and in all cases without any payment.

"That, as to the proper time for Baptism, it should be, at the most, within a month after the child is born; as to the proper place, it is the church of the district where the birth takes place: and "That baptisms are administered at three o'clock on Sunday afternoons, at Christ Church, New North Road, which is your parish Church, not only for this but for all religious services.

"I, therefore, affectionately exhort all my parishioners, not only as they love their children, but as they value their own souls,' not to neglect so great salvation' for their offspring, and to bring them to the blessed waters of redemption thus freely offered them 'without money and without price.'

"I am, your faithful Pastor and Friend in Christ,
"WILLIAM SCOTT,
"Incumbent of Christ Church, New North-road.

THE CHURCH OF SCOTLAND.—The convocation of the ministers of the Presbyterian church of Scotland has at length terminated its meetings, and two sets of resolutions have been adopted which are of no ordinary importance. Great discussion ensued upon these resolutions, and the division did not take place till three o'clock on the morning of Wednesday. There were present about 460 or 470 members. Of these 100 would not vote, and the resolutions were agreed to by a majority of about 275. In the course of Thursday in last week, upon earnest representations being made for the necessity of union and numbers to produce any effect upon the government, most of the dissentients gave in, and 427 members intimated their adhesion to the resolutions. When it is recollected that the members of the established church amount to nearly 1,000 exclusive of the quoad sacra clergy, a little more than a third would appear to be in favour of the resolutions of the convocation.

The resolutions, however, will speak for themselves:—

FIRST SERIES OF RESOLUTIONS PASSED BY THE CONVOCATION OF MINISTERS ON SATURDAY, THE 19TH OF NOVEMBER, 1842, AND CONCURRED IN BY 427 MINISTERS.

1. That according to the recent, and, as it appears to this convocation, unconstitutional decisions of the supreme civil courts, and the interpretation which those decisions, if allowed or sanctioned by the supreme power in the state, would put upon the civil law—the obligation to receive and admit a qualified presentee, imposed by the law of patronage on the presbyteries of the church, is a civil obligation, such as may be enforced by the ordinary compulsations of civil law; and in particular, that the rejection of a presentee in respect of the dissent of the congregation according to the fundamental principle and law of the church is not merely an act to which the civil courts may refuse to give civil effect, but is in itself a civil wrong or offence, which may be dealt with accordingly by the civil courts.

2 That other decisions of the civil courts, and in particular the decision of the Lord Ordinary in the case of the deposition of the Strathbogie ministers, imply an assumption of a jurisdiction in the most sacred functions of the worship and government of the church, especially in the matter of the deposition of ministers, to the effect of reducing the sentences of spiritual courts in the exercise of discipline over ministers and members of the church.

3. That these claims to jurisdiction in spiritual matters, on the part of the civil courts, are based chiefly, if not altogether, upon the act of Queen Anne restoring patronage—an act from the first unjustifiable, and recently interpreted in a sense to which the church cannot conscientiously submit, and to which she cannot consent to accommodate her ecclesiastical procedure.

4. That as the principle involved in these decisions, and particularly in the recent Auchterarder judgment, is that of the supremacy of the civil courts over those of the established church in the exercise of their spiritual functions; so the members of the convocation declare that no measure can in conscience be submitted to by them which does not effectually protect the church against the exercise of such jurisdiction by the civil courts in time to come, and in particular fully prevent all future encroachments of the nature specified in the preceding resolutions.

5. That in all their past contendings, the members of this convocation have been actuated, and they trust that in all their future proceedings they will continue to be actuated, by a deep conviction of the value and excellence of the civil and ecclesiastical constitution under which they live; and that one of the chief causes of their present anxiety arises out of their impression that the tendency and inevitable result of the recent decisions of the civil courts, especially, if these shall be finally sanctioned as the law of the land, must be as entirely subversive of the constitution as they are repugnant to the principles of this church and the consciences of her office-bearers.

SECOND SERIES OF RESOLUTIONS PASSED BY THE CONVOCATION OF MINISTERS, ON TUESDAY, THE 22D OF NOVEMBER, 1842, AND CONCURRED IN BY 354 MINISTERS

1. That while the church most solemnly protests against the invasion of her jurisdiction by the civil courts, as contrary to the word of God, the confession of faith, and the constitution of this kingdom; and while, in particular, she is entitled, in the judgment of the brethren now assembled, to declare, as the General Assembly in the claim of rights has declared, that the assumption by the civil courts of authority in matters spiritual, and especially in the ordination, admission, or deposition of ministers, and the other proceedings there set forth, is in violation of the law establishing the church, which was made unalterable by the act of security and the treaty of union; and that whatever is done in the exercise of that assumed authority ought therefore to be held as in right or de jure, it is null and void and of no effect; still, whatever the nation in these circumstances might do, it is not the duty of the church, as a kingdom not of this world, which has not and cannot have any power of the sword, or any secular dominion whatever, to plead her title thus acquired and secured to the temporal benefits of her establishment, in opposition or resistance to the supreme power of the state, except in the way of remonstrance, protest, and serious warning.

2. That as, on the other hand, it is the bounden duty of the church and of her faithful ministers, to represent to the supreme power of the state the nature of the invasions of the civil courts upon the spiritual province, so, on the other hand, the refusal on the part of the state of such a remedy as has been declared indispensable to meet the emergency, cannot be otherwise construed than as being a recognition and sanction by the state of the principle which the decisions of the civil courts involve.

3. That the brethren now assembled fully recognise the intrinsic authority and final jurisdiction of the civil magistrate, or the supreme power of the state in the exercise of all civil functions, and in the discharge of all the duty which he owes towards the church of Christ; and in particular they acknowledge the right of the civil magistrate to fix the terms on which he will establish the church, as a right which he is to use on his own responsibility, and in the use of which the church is not entitled to resist him; and hence, accordingly, as the church being essentially independent of the civil magistrate in her spiritual province, is not bound, and is not at liberty to conform her procedure in the government of Christ's house to the orders of the state, or of any courts of the state, against her convictions of duty founded on the word of God, so neither is she warranted in prescribing to the civil magistrate- or requiring him to act according to her views, whether in the administration of civil affairs generally, or in what he does towards religion or about things sacred, as in his giving to the church, or withholding from her, the civil countenance and support; nor may the church resist his determination in these matters, since, in both department of his duty, the civil magistrate is always bound to act according to his own conscience, under the rule of the word of God, and on his responsibility to God.

4. That it is the duty of the faithful ministers of this church not to continue to receive the endowments or emoluments secured to them by the civil law, or to involve themselves in the manifold inconveniences and serious evils of a protracted struggle with the civil power, after it shall appear that the supreme power of the state, by refusing to relieve them from interference of the civil court in things spiritual, does thereby substantially and effectually sanction the condition which the civil courts would attach to their holding of these endowments or emoluments, and to which they never can submit or yield obedience, viz. the condition of subjection to civil control in matters spiritual, and of being bound, against their consciences, to intrude ministers upon reclaiming congregations.

5. That it is the duty of the ministers now assembled, and of all who adhere to their views, to make a solemn representation to her Majesty's government, and to both houses of Parliament, setting forth the imminent and extremè peril of the establishment, the inestimable value of the benefits which it confers on the country, and the pain and reluctance with which they are forced to contemplate the possibility of the church's separation, for conscience sake, from the state, respectfully calling upon the rulers of this nation to maintain the constitution of the kingdom inviolate, and to uphold a pure establishment of religion in the land; and, finally, intimating, that as the endowments of the church are, undoubtedly, at the disposal of the supreme power of the state, with whom it rests either to continue to the church her possession of them, free from any limitation of her spiritual jurisdiction and freedom, or to withddraw them altogether, so it must be the duty * of the church, and consequently, in dependence on the grace of God, it is the determination of the brethren now assembled if no measure such as they have declared to be indispensable to be granted, to tender the resignation of those civil advantages which they can no longer hold in consistency with the free and full exercise of their spiritual functions, and to cast themselves on such provision as God, in His providence, may afford, maintaining still uncompromised the principle of a right scriptural connexion between the church and the state, and solemnly entering their protest against the judgements of which they complain, as, in their decided opinion, altogether contrary to what has ever hitherto been understood to be the law and constitution of this country.—Atlas.

* Twenty-one out of the above 354 adherents added the following explanation to their concurrence:—

"While disagreeing from the doctrine which seems implied in the resolution that the silence of the Legislature constitutes an obligation on our consciences to regard the terms of compact between church and state as altered, we adhere in so far that the silence of the Legislature after a reasonable time will, on the ground of Christian expediency, oblige us to leave the establishment."

The Kirk.—What is it that the Non-intrusion party in the Church of Scotland are really contending for? Let us calmly examine this question.

Is it for the liberty of choice on the part of the people as to their spiritual guides,—the right of Christian congregations to choose their own pastors? Were this the case, surely they would not vehemently deprecate the only principle by which that object can be effectually secured. Dr. Candlish declares on behalf of himself and his brethren, that they were never less disposed than now to adopt the Voluntary Principle—that principle which, in the Apostolic Churches, secured the maintenance of the pastor by the free contributions of the flock. They see around them the working of this same principle in the five hundred congregations of unendowed Presbyterianism; and what can be alleged against the Secession Church, in which the freedom that the Non-intrusionists profess to sigh after, is so fully enjoyed? Are the doctrines preached by the ministers of that Church less purely evangelical, or is the discipline less strict? We apprehend that the ministers of the Secession and their people will bear comparison with those of the Establishment in every respect, and that the result of such comparison would even be greatly to their advantage. What, then, is the meaning of the outcry against Voluntaryism on the part of the Evangelicals of the Scottish Establishment? The Secession Church knows nothing of Patronage; it exhibits Non-intrusion in perfection; it is Presbyterianism in its freest and purest form; and yet, these State-Church Evangelicals prefer a political union with Moderates and ministers of doubtful orthodoxy within the Establishment, to fraternization with their Evangelical brethren who have shaken themselves free from the shackles of a State-alliance. They of the Establishment, and who but they? are "the Church of Scotland," Christ's kingdom in Scotland; and the five hundred congregations of the Seceding Synod go for nothing,—are deemed no part of that kingdom, because not an Establishment! We do not say that such is the deliberate opinion of the ministers of the Convocation; but their language and that of their organ imply as much as this. Thus the Witness, after declaring that the decision of our rulers "can now affect, not the liberties of the Church of Scotland, but merely the tie which connects her with the State," adds: "We say, the Church of Scotland;" while it is admitted to be quite possible that the ministers pledged or prepared to "dissolve that tie with their own hands," may not amount to a majority. "But the man must know wonderfully little of either Scotland or its ministers, who shall be unable to recognise in them, notwithstanding, the living portion of the National Church; its life, in short. At the Restoration," the Writer proceeds to remark, "not a great many more than three hundred ministers were ejected from their charges, by the Prelatists, whereas more than five hundred remained behind and conformed. But, though historians have carefully summed up their numbers, and recorded their names, it was not in order to ascertain by the process which of the two bodies constituted the Church of Scotland. That was a question determined on an entirely different principle: the votes were weighed, not counted." The writer means to say, we presume, that the ejected minority constituted the Church of Scotland after they had left the Establishment. But, if a minority, a seceding minority, separate from the State, may yet claim to be the National Church, we must remind the Witness of another period in the history of the Church of Scotland, when the living portion of that Church was to be recognised only in the Nonconforming body. In 1740, four ministers, for inveighing against the law of Patronage, were deposed by the General Assembly, and, being cast out of the Establishment, laid the foundation of the Secession Church. That Church comprises more than three hundred and fifty ministers,—more than the number pledged to stand by the Second Series of Resolutions passed by the recent Convocation. According to the showing of our Contemporary, then, the Secession Church has at least an equal claim to be regarded as the Church of Scotland, the National Church, the living portion of that Church. It has no State endowments,—that is all the difference. The Non-intrusionists profess to be willing to resign these, sooner than their freedom. And yet, strange infatuation and marvellous inconsistency! they, the State-Church Evangelicals, are the only "Temple of the Lord"—the Church.

What are they contending for? Not for the liberty of the people, but for the liberty of the Church. These ought to mean the same thing; but they are things differing as widely as freedom and power. The question, we are told, has come to this alternative,—"whether the Presbyterian Church of Scotland shall be at once a free and an Established Church, or whether it must be a Church free, but not established." A Church, in the Scriptural sense, is a congregation of believers, and ought to be at once free and established upon the faith; but this is not the sort of Church, nor the sort of Establishment, intended. Freedom from domination, and freedom to dominate, are very different things: it is the latter for which the Non-intrusionists are contending. "The Church solemnly protests against the invasion of her jurisdiction by the Civil Courts." In what part of the New Testament do we find this word jurisdiction, or any recognition of a jurisdictive Church? When Dr. Hook cries, "Hear the Church," or Harry of Exeter protests against an invasion of his episcopal jurisdiction by the Civil Courts, we can well understand them; but this claim to independent, co-ordinate jurisdiction on the part of Evangelical Presbyterians, grates harshly upon our ears. Call it not spiritual jurisdiction; that is but a Popish fallacy. Jurisdiction, polity, government, are not spiritual things, but have relation to the arrangements of human society, and they involve an exercise of political power. We in England have spiritual peers, spiritual courts, a spiritual Doctor's Commons, spiritual Church-rates, spiritual costs, and spiritual imprisonments, all flowing out of spiritual jurisdiction. We can have no sympathy, therefore, with the claim set up by any Church to such jurisdiction. The contest is not for popular freedom, but for ministerial power. There is such a thing as the Popery of Presbyterianism.

But "Christ's crown is in peril," Dr. Candlish tells us. This were worse than the Church being in danger; but surely, surely, this is language which must be pronounced either fanatical or profane. "Our forefathers," said the Reverend Orator, "contended for Christ's crown and covenant; and their contest for Christ's crown was chiefly for Christ's right to reign in his own house. We are contending for that, but also for something more,—for Christ's right to reign over the Civil Magistrate himself." We would fain put the best possible interpretation upon these words; but nothing can justify them. The claim of the Pope to reign over the Civil Magistrate was made in Christ's name; and the fifth monarchy madness rested on the same perilous fallacies. The mistaken notions maintained by the Non-intrusionists in respect to the nature of the kingdom of Christ and the proper functions of the Civil Magistrate, place them in the false position of struggling, honestly, but blindly, to uphold an antiscriptural system. That they are sincere and earnest in wishing to maintain Evangelical truth and purity of discipline, we do not question; but, along with this, they are fighting for a fallacy, an error, a delusion. As it is because we own no Priest in the Church, save "the High-priest of our profession," that we reject Puseyism and the sacerdotal corruption of primitive Christianity, so, because we recognise no King in the Church but the King of Kings, we repudiate the interference of the Civil Magistrate with matters of religion, under the pretext of establishing, protecting, or providing for the Church,—in short, the Establishment principle, which, if we may be pardo[illegible] expression, coins Christ's crown into tithes and [illegible]es. When will Christians learn to understand th[illegible]wn religion, and to think scripturally of Christ's kingdom as the kingdom of Truth, of which his Word is the sword and sceptre?—Pat.

Death of the Rev. Francis Goode.—We sincerely regret to announce the death of this excellent and most valuable minister of Christ, which took place on the 19th Nov., at his house at Clapham. He was a man eminently distinguished for the soundness of his doctrinal views, for the holiness of his life, and the amiability of his character. At Cambridge he took a high Wrangler's degree, and became Fellow of Trinity College. He afterwards went out as a chaplain to India, but returned on account of his health, and has since chiefly ministered at Clapham, where he was the evening, and at the Female Orphan Asylum, in the Westminster-road where he was the morning, Lecturer. His sermons were distinguished not so much by brilliancy of imagination or diction, as by their depth, solemnity, and experimental power. He had no pretensions to what is vulgarly termed popularity, but his ministrations were followed by a large and increasing number of attached hearers, who delighted to drink in from his lips the truths which he delivered with an unction better than eloquence, and in a tone and manner which indicated how much he felt all that he delivered. His place will not easily be supplied: and in a day when men are departing from the faith once delivered unto the saints, and doating about questions as to surplices, genuflexions, saints' days, and candles, the loss of such a man as Francis Goode will be deeply felt. His mind was too deeply penetrated with a sense of the importance of eternity and the glory of Christ's righteousness, to find any complacency in such disputes. But, like a true watchman, his warning trumpet uttered no uncertain sound, with reference to those who are now seeking to establish another Gospel, and to shake the great foundation of the Gospel justification by faith only, through the regeneration of the Holy Spirit. Often did he pause to point out how one truth depends upon another, and how dangerous it is to tamper with the doctrines revealed in the Bible. But we must pause. It is well to learn to cease from man, and to remember in whose hands there rests the defence of that Church, whose walls are not bounded by the narrow limits imposed by proud and foolish men, but which includes the whole body of Christ, of every tongue, and tribe, and nation, by whatever name they are known among men.

Mr. Goode was the author of several valuable works, particularly a volume of sermons on the Better Covenant, and another on general topics illustrative of the Gospel. He was the son of the excellent and well-known Rector of St. Ann's, Blackfriars, the worthy successor of Mr. Romaine, and the contemporary of so many of those excellent Evangelical clergymen, to whom our Church owes so large a debt of gratitude. Mr. Goode was also the brother of the Rev. William Goode, Rector of St. Antholin's, in the City, whose learning and ability have been recently brought to bear with such effect on the Puseyite controversy. —Record.

DEATH OF THE REV. Z. H. BIDDULPH.—We have again to record the loss of a faithful and devoted minister, suddenly called away in the meridian of life. "On the 21st," says the Bristol Journal, "died suddenly, the Rev. Z. Henry Biddulph, B. D., Vicar of Backwell, Somerset, and of Old and New Shoreham, late Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford, and second son of the late Rev. T. T. Biddulph. He officiated at Backwell on Sunday last, and on Monday was visiting the poor and sick in his parish all the morning. Shortly after his return home he ruptured a blood-vessel, and almost instantly expired. The decease of this excellent man and exemplary minister of Christ, will be deeply felt by his parishioners, especially by the poor of his parishes; while to his numerous family, and the orphan children of his late brother, the Rev. Theophilus Biddulph, to whom he was a kind protector, his loss is as severe as it is irreparable.—Ibid.

RELIGIOUS LIBERTY IN FRANCE.—PARIS, Nov. 29.—Some months since, I spoke to you of the invitation addressed to me on the part of the inhabitants of Sonneville, who, for the last ten years, had forsaken the Romish worship, and now required that I should come and preach the Gospel of Christ to them, and thereby to prepare for their being admitted into the Protestant Church. I think I have informed you also that I was prevented by a company of soldiers from continuing these sermons, and that an action was commenced against me. As this is not the only affair of the kind now passing in France at this moment, one having occurred at Grenoble a few days since, and, within a short period, similar prosecutions having been witnessed at Toulouse, it appeared to us that the freedom of worship was in danger in our land, and we thought it became us to take the matter into our serious consideration. We, therefore, made choice of M. Odillon Barrot, a pleader of the very first talent, also a Member of the Chamber of Deputies, and who is moreover convinced of the legitimacy of our cause. Owing to this, an account of the trial has found its way into the columns of the leading political Journals; and, consequently, the whole of France is about to have its attention called to this subject, which unfortunately until now had been confined within the narrow circle of a small number of our friends. When public opinion has been excited, it will be easier, in case of our being condemned in all the courts of appeal, to bring the question before the Chambers, and we know that more Deputies than one are disposed to do it. This, in a few words, is the question which the tribunal had to examine; namely, whether it is necessary, in order to open a place for religious worship, to procure permission beforehand, or it is sufficient to make a simple declaration to the public authorities of such having been done; and the latter is the course I pursued. The nature of the cause, and especially the talent of our legal defender, had attracted a numerous assemblage to the Court, and I hope the impression produced on the public has been a salutary one. M. Odillon Barrot showed, in the clearest manner, the absurdity of a doctrine which is tantamount to saying, all forms of worship are free, but still they must be authorised. Then, in the second place, losing sight for a moment of the general question, he pleaded the incompetency of the Court, grounding his argument on my quality of a minister of a form of worship acknowledged by the State, which, by the Concordat, made the Council of State my rightful judge. This mode of viewing the question is new and of the first importance, as it raised the question of the ecclesiastical organization of the Protestant Church, which is complete in law, but the very reverse in practice. Therefore, not being a minister serving any particular church, but a reformed minister over the whole extent of France, I am not amenable to a local consistory, but to a general Synod. Now, our general or particular Synods, which exist by right, have never met since the Concordat, and it is just the same, therefore, as if they did not exist; but I should not be surprised, if this affair, added to so many others, did not contribute to their re-establishment, and thus cause the re-construction of our National Church, which at the present day does not deserve the name, but rather that of a salaried church. The State, by its salary, deprives us of all freedom, which, by the re-establishment of our Synods, we might perhaps regain.

This affair, I repeat, is a serious one, not from the facts themselves, but in regard to the question of right to which it gives rise. This is the view all our friends take of it, and M. Odillon Barrot himself.

An occurrence in the course of his pleading deserves notice. I must first, however, inform you, that the initiative of the whole of this affair is due to a poor pedlar, who, whilst going about to sell his wares, tries to dispose, at the same time, of his religious books, and which, when he cannot sell, he gives away gratis. The Attorney-General, after condemning this conduct, went on to say, that he would do far better by attending only to his goods, instead of propagating religion; when M. Barrot rose, and, nobly seizing on this last observation, forcibly reasoned, and proved that this poor man was thereby evidencing a sincere conviction, and a disinterestedness the more remarkable, as he was himself extremely poor, and, therefore, infinitely more worthy of praise than those who blamed him: and he concluded this speech by exclaiming, "Honour to him!" which seemed to electrify the whole court.

Notwithstanding all he could say, and the justice of our cause, we have been condemned, true only in the minimum of the penalty; which may be easily accounted for, when informed, as I was myself afterwards, by the Attorney-General, that the Government, fearing that politics should be discussed under the mask of religion, is determined never to concede a freedom so extensive as that of meeting for the purpose of religious worship, after having simply made a declaration to that effect. I gave notice of appeal, as to what concerns myself. The trial will come on before the Cour Royale de Versailles, and afterwards, probably, before the Cour de Cassation in Paris; and I will make known to you the result.—(From the Paris Correspondent of the Record.)

THE JEWS.—We find the following in a letter from Odessa of the 5th ult.:—"Our Government seems to be seriously disposed to grant emancipation to the Jews, whose numbers in Russia, according to the last census, amounted to about 2,200,000. The Ministers of the Interior and Public Instruction have charged Dr. Lilienthal, the Grand Rabbi of Riga, with the mission of visiting the 18 Governments of the empire in which Jews reside, to collect all the necessary details of their condition, informing them, that the only object of the Government is to be enabled to furnish, gratuitously, all the means of giving them the moral and intellectual education required for raising them to the rank of other citizens, without in any manner interfering with the free exercise of their religion. The Jews of our town are preparing to give Dr. Lillienthal a solemn reception, his arrival being looked for from day to day."—Pat.

MISCELLANEOUS.

LORD ELLENBOROUGH'S PROCLAMATION, issued from the "Secret Department, Simla," for the information of "surrounding States," is, so far as our recollection serves us, the first Manifesto ever issued by a British Governor in reprehension of the policy of the Queen's Government under the administration of his predecessor. In this point of view, it stands alone, we imagine, among State Documents. Accustomed as we are to find the Ins and the Outs blaming each other's measures, sometimes with asperity and bitterness, in the warmth and freedom of debate, we should never have expected, or thought it possible, that a person entrusted with vice-regal authority would be guilty of the unpardonable indiscretion of proclaiming and censuring the errors of a former Government. We should almost as soon have expected to meet with a party attack upon the Whigs in a Queen's Speech; and what would be thought of the Minister who should venture so to shield himself under the Prerogative in making an attack that could not be repelled upon his political rivals? This, however, would be very much like what Lord Ellenborough has done. In the language of the Times, his Proclamation "is a renunciation, as formal and pointed as words and circumstances can make it, not only of the policy, which is bad enough, but of the principles, which are worse, on which his predecessors founded their invasion of Affghanistan. Lord Ellenborough has not been content with a quiet substitution of one course of conduct for another. He is in a hurry to cast his predecessors overboard. He is eager and anxious to announce the new order of things. He is significantly, perhaps informally, clear in his public profession of dissent. He shakes himself free from the ambitious plans of his predecessors, with the roughness of a man who feels that he is doing it unreservedly, and once for all."

Were it not that the Times characterises this "anxiety" as "that of an honest ruler as well as that of a wise politician," we should have been ready to mistake the above description for covert satire. Possibly it is meant for such; for the Times is studiously ambiguous, in order that it may the more readily disavow one day what it asserted the day before. No wise politician, assuredly, would have been in a hurry to "cast his predecessors overboard." No honest ruler would have allowed his insufferable egotism to display itself in announcing to surrounding States the "conservative policy" of his Government, in contrast with that of all former Governors of India. The Post tells us, that the document contains "the most distinct and decisive censure that could be pronounced upon the late Government of India." But it goes even beyond this, laying down principles which, being of general application, are as strongly condemnatory of the policy of the Marquess of Hastings and the Marquess Wellesley, as of that of Lord Auckland. Whether those principles are right or wrong, we ask, whether a Proclamation to surrounding States is a proper occasion and form for the announcement of His Lordship's opinions; whether the Governor-General is also authorised to be Censor-General; and whether, of all statesmen or quasi statesmen, Lord Ellenborough is entitled to assume this tone, and to deal forth his distinct and decisive censures against both the living and the dead.

Our readers know that we have repeatedly expressed our decided conviction, that the original expedition into Affghanistan was unjustifiable; and we find no fault with Lord Ellenborough for being of the same opinion. The Proclamation disguises or conceals, however, the most material circumstances of the case, in order to make it appear in the worst possible light as against those who then directed or counselled the Government of India. We have recently cited the uncontradicted statement of the Friend of India, that Lord Auckland was originally opposed to the advance beyond the Indus, and that he yielded with reluctance to the supposed necessity of making a demonstration against the intrigues of Russia in that quarter; that the late Sir William M'Naghten was the individual whose advice had the most influence in determining the decision of the Council at Simla; and that the permanent occupation of Affghanistan was never contemplated. Now, if this be true, Lord Ellenborough's official attack is alike ungenerous towards the dead, and unjust to the living. Errors have indeed been committed, and much remains to be cleared up in connexion with the Cabul tragedy. An impartial scrutiny has been promised, without which the future historian will be at a loss in constructing any trustworthy account of all the causes of the calamities that befel our army. But nearly all the chief actors in those disastrous events, Sir William M'Naghten, Sir Alexander Burnes, General Elphinstone, Brigadier Anquetil, Colonel Orchard, and Colonel Chambers, with Shah Soojah himself, have passed beyond the reach of human applause or censure. The Governor-General's allusion to the errors committed in the preceding campaign, was not called for; and it was, in our opinion, wretchedly misplaced. Lord Auckland, indeed, survives to vindicate his own conduct; and he will, no doubt, take a fitting opportunity of doing so. With the exception of the Affghan War, the beneficent character of his Administration was such as his vain-glorious successor will do well to emulate. What we complain of, however, is not that Lord Ellenborough should express a free, a strong opinion in condemnation of Lord Auckland's policy, on any fit occasion,—in his place in Parliament as a Peer, or in his private capacity; but that he should, as Governor General, have insinuated charges against his predecessor in the Government of India, in the form of a Proclamation to "surrounding States." We hold this to be a grave offence against the proprieties of his station, ungracious, unprecedented, and fraught with dangerous political consequences, —such an offence as, we would fain hope, no other man, occupying so high a station, could have been guilty of. In Lord Ellenborough, nothing surprises us. His suspension of Mr. Erskine, when he had scarcely assumed the reins of Government, was a sufficient proof of his headstrong, rash, and arbitrary mode of action. His first order to evacuate Affghanistan without recovering Cabul and the captives, deprives him of all right to take the slightest credit to himself for the brilliant achievements of the short campaign which has retrieved the reputation of our armies. He is the last man, therefore, who ought to have issued such a Proclamation, as he is probably the only man who could have done it.—Pat. Dec. 1.

The Honourable the President in Council is pleased to direct the publication for general information of the following Supplementary Rule regarding the recovery of Rents from the holders of land in the Settlement of Darjeeling.

Whereas No. 11 of the "Rules for regulating the assignment of Building Locations and Grants of Land in the Hill tract attached to the station of Darjeeling, and for the administration of the said tract passed on the 4th September 1839." is defective,—and it is expedient to embody with the General Rules the rule which has hitherto obtained in respect to the recovery of the rents for lands so granted,—the following Supplementary and Declaratory Rule is published for general information, to be in force from the date of promulgation.

Supplementary Rule.

No. 1. The Officer in Civil Charge will collect the rents on lands whenever the Grantee or Lessee shall be in balance, and the arrear cannot be realised by the distraint of the personal property of the Defaulter, by demand in writing to be made within 15 days after the same shall be due; the demand to be addressed to the Grantee or Lessee or to his Agent resident at the station—and if the Grantee or Lessee be absent and there be no Agent of such Grantee or Lessee resident at the station on whom it can be served, the demand shall be made by notice to be stuck up on the spot, that if the arrear of rent shall not be discharged within two months from the date of such demand, the Officer in Civil charge will resume the Land; and the Land shall accordingly be resumed, and this course will be pursued as well for the recovery of any arrears of rent now outstanding as of any arrears of rent which may be outstanding hereafter; and with respect to all future Leases of land in the Hill tract attached to the Station of Darjeeling, it shall be a condition, when the Lease is obtained for the site of a building, that a substantial and suitable Dwelling House be erected on the Land, or be in course of being erected within 12 months from the date of the Lease, on pain of forfeiture, if at the expiration of that time, this condition shall not have been fulfilled.

FOR THE SKIN AND COMPLEXION.

ROWLAND'S KALYDOR,

A preparation from Oriental Exotics, is now universally known as the only safe and efficient protector and beautifier of the SKIN and COMPLEXION. Its virtues are commonly displayed in thoroughly eradicating all pimples, spots, redness, tan, freckles, and other unsightly cutaneous defects, in healing Sun-burns, Stings of Insects, and in rendering the most rough and uneven skin, pleasantly soft and smooth. To the complexion, it imparts a juvenile roseate hue, and to the neck, hand and arm, a delicacy and fairness unrivalled.

It is invaluable as a renovating and refreshing Wash, during travelling, or exposure to the sun, dust, or harsh-winds, and after the heated atmosphere of crowded assemblies.—GENTLEMEN, will find it peculiarly grateful after shaving in allaying the irritation.

Price 4*s*. 6*d*. and 8*s*. 6*d*. per bottle, duty included.

The celebrated ROWLAND'S KALYDOR, appropriately styled by its numerous admirers "the auxiliary of beauty," is in all climes and seasons of inestimable importance to female loveliness. During the rigours of Winter, not any attack more seriously impairs the beauty of a fine SKIN, than inclement cold: it becomes rough, red, chapped, and vulgarly unseemly, and frequently disfigured, by chilbains. Equally available are its virtues against the baneful influence of solar heat, which causes Freckles, Sun Burns, Tan, &c. all of which blemishes the KALYDOR prevents and removes. Throughout season, time and climate, this faithful auxiliary arrays the neck and arms in radiant brilliancy, and perpetuates the vivid bloom of juvenile attraction.

The Acquittal of the Cabul Prisoners. —The Courts Martial held on the officers who were recently in the hands of the Affghans, have terminated in their honourable acquittal. Those who survived the calamity, are thus exonerated from the censure of having been in any measure the occasion of it, and the obloquy of that great disaster rests upon the memory either of Sir W. Macnaghten or General Elphinstone. The Courts Martial have not given us any additional information of the real cause of that disaster; though there can be little doubt that the facts elicited at Col. Shelton's trial, would shed a flood of light on the subject, and enable the public to determine upon whose shoulders the blame really rests. The general current of opinion at present points to General Elphinstone as the instrumental cause of our discomfiture, and attributes it to his imbecility or waywardness that the insurrection was allowed to reach a height at which it became uncontrollable. But this impression is not based on that kind of evidence which the future historian will deem conclusive, and it appears to us a sacred duty on the part of the friends, and more particularly the relatives of the deceased Envoy, to collect and publish all the documents which are necessary to illustrate the question, and to vindicate his memory from obloquy. We think that if his venerable father were not sinking under the weight of years, he would have undertaken this paternal office with his accustomed energy. Is there no individual in the large circle of his relatives who will engage in this 'labour of love,' and place his conduct in an advantageous position before the present age? The insurrection at Cabul will necessarily occupy a very prominent place in the history of British India, and it is important, not less for the reputation of the individual who occupied the most responsible position during that extraordinary event, than for the interests of truth, that its true character should be known.

Of the charges brought against Col. Shelton, he was acquitted of three and found guilty of one, viz. of having made preparations for retreating without authority, during the second week of the insurrection. But the reprimand which he received from his superiors on the occasion, was supposed to supersede the necessity of any second punishment. This charge gives us some insight into the state of circumstances at Cabul, and explains in some measure the cause of our disasters. It appears that at a very early stage of this unhappy business, the idea of retreating to Peshawur was embraced to a considerable extent, both by the officers and men, as the only alternative left for their safety. The existence of such an opinion evidently shews that the army had become dispirited, and had lost all confidence in the military capacity of the General. And to this cause is evidently to be attributed that succession of faint and ill directed efforts, which terminated in the annihilation of the troops.

The insurrection of Cabul differs little from the riots of London, Bristol and of other places, except in its fatal conclusion; and this is to be ascribed to the want of energy at the commencement, and to the absence of that unanimity of counsel and effort which, in such an emergency, was of the last importance. That there was a combination on the part of the chiefs to throw off our yoke and destroy the army, is incontrovertible; but a vigorous display at the commencement would, in all probability, have put it down, and at all events have enabled so large and well equipped an army to hold its ground during the winter. The successful resistance offered to the Eastern Ghilzies by Sir Robert Sale in his progress through the Khoord Cabul pass, staggered the minds of the conspirators, and made them doubtful of the issue of the enterprise. The opposition he encountered, was evidently connected with the subsequent insurrection; and if the same bold front had been exhibited during the first two or three days of the outbreak at Cabul, it is highly probable that the whole plan would have been disconcerted. But the enemy was most unwisely under-rated; and days were lost when every moment was of value. The conspirators were emboldened by our inactivity, and gathered strength both in nerve and numbers with every succeeding hour; and, by the mismanagement of those on whom the direction of affairs rested, our troops became dispirited exactly in the same proportion as the confidence of the enemy was increased. Time and circumstances multiplied difficulties; till at length the army was driven to a disgraceful capitulation, and annihilated.

From the accounts now before the public, it appears that Sir William Macnaghten was thwarted at a time when the safety of the army depended on his being cordially seconded by the military authorities. We are not certain that he will not be severely censured for having neglected at once to take on himself the responsibility of superseding the authority of General Elphinstone, and placing a more efficient officer and a more willing coadjutor at the head of the army. He might have exposed himself to the risk of censure had he taken this bold step, but a man who shrinks from such a risk is not equal to a great crisis. George the Third saved London during the riots of 1780 by calling out the troops of his own accord, when his Ministers seemed unwilling to incur the responsibility of such an act. He acted unconstitutionally on a great emergency; but he prevented the entire sack of the Capital; and the irregularity of his proceeding is entirely overlooked amidst the praise bestowed on his moral courage.

Improvement in the Sungskrit College. —The last number of the Calcutta Christian Intelligencer informs us, that the Vedant will in future form no part of the public course of study in the Government Sungskrit College, and adds, that the friends of Missions must feel much pleasure at the announcement. We fear the Editor is rather too sanguine in his hopes, that the exclusion of this particular class of studies will advance the Missionary cause in any perceptible degree. The learning which is still cultivated—and without which indeed the Institution would cease to be a College of Sungskrit literature—indisposes the mind of the student quite as effectually for the reception of Christian truth, as the dogmas of Vedu Vyasu, unfolded in the Vedant. Indeed there is nothing either in the philosophical or the mythological system of Hindooism which can be reconciled with the doctrines of Christianity, and the pundits do not become one whit less Hindoos, and are not advanced an inch towards the reception of the Gospel when they cease to read the theology of the Vedanta. What may be the number of students who at the beginning of this year, were studying this abstruse and transcendental theology, we have not heard, but the number used to be one in twenty of the whole body. If the same ratio prevails at present, the cause for exultation lies within a very narrow compass, and is nothing more than that ten brahmuns have given up reading the works of the Vedant School—and will probably take up with the absurd Poorans, or the obscene Tuntras.

But it is a cause of congratulation, that a very great majority of the Sungskrit students have expressed the strongest wish to learn English. The study of our language commenced in October, and, in two months, 108 students out of 164, have enrolled themselves in the English classes. Nay, we are told that such is the avidity with which they seek English education that they need the curb as much now, as they formerly needed the spur. It has become necessary to inform them, that if they neglect their Sungskrit studies, they will be liable to expulsion from the College.

Here is a change, and a great change in an age of great changes. It is just eight years since the students of the Sungskrit College kicked the English language fairly out of the Institution. In the beginning of 1835, the English class was abolished, and the Chundrika, our orthodox contemporary, could scarcely contain his joy on the occasion. He considered it most unseemly, that any man engaged in the study of the holy shastras, should pollute himself with the barbarous study of English. His argument was irrefutable. If, said he, while any of the students may be engaged in the performance of religious rites, and pronouncing the holy texts of the Veda, some English word should rise to his lips, the whole service would be profaned, and he must begin the poojah over again. Out then with the study of English from the Sungskrit College! In eight years the scene is changed; these feelings of hostility have been exchanged for those of a directly opposite character, and it has become necessary to moderate the ardor of the students for English, by threatening them with expulsion if they give up their minds exclusively to it.

While we are on the subject, we may as well quote the reasons which the Committee of Public Instruction gave for the abolition of English studies in 1835. "This measure was not resorted to by us, until it had been established by the result of a long trial that it will not answer as a general rule to teach two learned languages to the same students in this country. The period usually allotted to education is shorter by two or three years than it is in Europe, and except in rare instances, the effect of teaching two such languages as English and Sungskrit, or English and Arabic, is to give the student a smattering of both without a competent knowledge of either—to overload his mind with words, without leaving him time for the acquisition of that knowledge as a medium for the communication of which those words are alone valuable." We are rather curious to know by what train of reasoning the Committee of Public Instruction has reached so opposite a conclusion in so short a time. Is the present innovation likely to be accompanied in their estimation with the same disadvantages which were found to result from the former experiment; if not, by what process does the Committee hope to make the student equal master of both languages? To us it appears, that the opinion expressed by the members of the former Committee—of whom only two are now in the country, out of eleven—is equally consonant with reason and experience; that if the attention of the student is given with ardor to Sungskrit, he will neglect English; if to English, he will slacken in the pursuit of Sungskrit. We think the enthusiasm for English, which has now been displayed, cannot fail gradually to neutralize the Institution as a College of Sungskrit literature.

PUBLIC GRIEVANCES.—A large and very respectable meeting of Native gentlemen was held last Monday week at the Hall of the Sungskrit College, when it was resolved to organize a new Society in Calcutta, for the acquisition and diffusion of information on all subjects connected with the welfare of India. Mr. George Thompson and six other European gentlemen were present on the occasion. The object of the proposed Association is as important as it is laudable. Accurate information in reference to the state of the people, and more especially of the productive classes, to the influence on public prosperity and individual happiness of the institutions of the British Government, and to the result during the last fifty years, on the condition of the agricultural population, of that conversion of Collectors of revenue into Landholders which was effected by the decennial settlement, is indispensible to the improvement of the country. We require to know whether the people are more wretched and destitute under the British than they were under the Mahomedan administration; how much of that wretchedness is to be fairly traced to defective legislation, and how much to the corruption of the native officers, without whose aid the business of the country could not be conducted. But the enquiry must not stop with the discovery of the cause to which this misery is to be ascribed; to be of any value it must point out how these grievances are to be remedied; how Zemindars can be made conscientious and considerate, and ryots courageous in the defence of their rights and honest in the payment of their dues; how native officers can be made faithful in the discharge of their duties, and European functionaries can be brought to feel more deeply the weight of their responsibilities. Should the enquiries be pushed, as they might be, to the original construction of the Government; it will be necessary not only to point out the defects of the very curious machinery which has been put together at different times, and by men of different minds, during the last seventy years, for the management of India—that any man can do—but to give us the model of a more perfect system of administration, better adapted than the present to the wants and feelings of a hundred millions of people.

From the speeches which were delivered at the meeting, we have some small misgivings as to the capacity of the members of the new Society for so great a task. We fear that some of them have been led to suppose that nothing is necessary to fit them to legislate for India, beyond a disposition to abuse the existing Government. We allude more particularly to the declamation of Baboo Dukhena Mookerjee, in which he poured the vials of his indignation on this unfortunate Government, and charged it with having repeatedly violated engagements the most solemn;—in the very Hall which that Government had erected for the encouragement of Native education. In any other colonial possession but that of Great Britain, this language would have been punished as seditious. Such a speech at Batavia or Samarang would have ensured the speaker, as the mildest punishment, transportation to Amboyna. And not twenty years since, a man would no more have dreamt of uttering such sentiments in Calcutta, than he would of engaging in a high-way robbery. The best general answer to the objections brought by him against this arbitrary, this perfidious Government is the fact, that he is allowed to abuse it with such perfect impunity in its own metropolis.

The only instance which the Baboo brings forward of this perfidy and this solemn violation of pledges, is the question of Resumptions. They have now been brought nearly to a close, and any attempt to defend the measure, though it may be done by a simple reference to the printed declarations of Government from the time when it took the Collections into its own hand in 1772 to the year 1828, would appear redundant. The only censure with which Government is really chargeable on this subject is, that it did not resume these lands earlier, and thus restore to the state the resources of which it had been deprived by the rapacity and villany of the Zemindars between 1765 and 1772, during its own minority.

The Baboo proceeds to the Courts of Justice in the interior. In Calcutta justice is perfect. We are happy to be assured of this. We have indeed heard that a Native, after having wasted sixteen years and two lakhs of Rupees in a law suit in Calcutta, and brought the Judges at length to a point, was informed that he ought to have brought his action at common law and not in equity. We have heard that a master had been held answerable for the fraud of his servant, but when that servant was arrested and prosecuted by his master, he was acquitted upon the principle that as he had carefully abstained from paying him what he had taken in his name, he could not be said to have defrauded him of that which was never in his possession. But we quarrel with no man's taste. If the members of the meeting are satisfied with this dispensation of justice, they are of course perfectly welcome to it.

The description however which the orator gives of the Mofussil courts—we have only the Hurkaru's report before us—is perfect. He says the streams of justice have been poisoned, even if the fountain head remained pure. By the fountain head he evidently alludes to the European functionaries; by the streams, to the Native Amlas. He speaks advisedly when he says, that it is "a system of bribery and corruption throughout," for the Government, with all its care and attention has hitherto been completely baffled by the venality of its Native officers. It has suspended them; fined them; and degraded them; but all to no purpose; the streams are not yet disinfected; the Shristedars and the Nazirs, and the Darogas still continue to sell justice to the people, in spite of every effort; and what is worse, the people are, we fear, by no means so averse to this traffic of justice as some may think. However parodoxical it may appear, the body of the people are somehow or other of opinion, that what is obtained without price is of little value, and we are mistaken if they would not rather owe the success of a suit to their own skill and management, and to the due application of motives, than to the virtue of others. But nothing can be more true than the succeeding sentence, "and thus it must remain unless the natives to whom justice is so dear, undertake the work of exposure and reformation." The remedy, as the Baboo observes, is in their own hands. Let the natives but undertake the work of reformation and the corrupt stream will be purified. Let him persuade the various native officials to refrain from bribery and corruption, and our Courts will become a model of excellence; oppression will disappear from the soil of India, and the administration of justice will become, if possible, purer than it was in the golden age of India, in the days of the holy sages of the Hindoo calendar, when the laws of Munoo occupied the place of the Company's Regulations, and every man who slandered a brahmun had melted lead poured down his throat.

After having disposed of the Courts, the Baboo proceeds to the last Charter, which ordained that no native of India should by reason only of religion, place of birth, descent or color, be disabled from holding any place, office or employment under the Company. Yet, says he, the law is a dead letter, for an education at one of the Company's Colleges in England is deemed an indispensible pre-requisite for all the higher situations in the gift of Government. This is abundantly true, but unfortunately it is without remedy; for the same law which removed all disqualifications from the natives, confirmed for twenty years the privileges of the Civil Services, the members of which are educated at Hayleybury. There is a rumour that but for this positive enactment Lord Ellenborough would have abolished the Civil Service altogether, and distributed its offices among the Military. The obstacle which the Governor General could not overcome, must continue for the next ten years to be an obstacle to the patriotic ambition of the Calcutta Baboos. They must bide their time. Perhaps on the expiration of the Charter, Parliament may see fit to abrogate Hayleybury, and distribute the Writerships as prizes among the students of the Hindoo College, more especially if they should continue to exhibit such eminent qualifications for Government, as the speech we are now upon, displays.

The speaker asks, if it was not right and proper that those who knew so much of the country in consequence of their having been born and educated on the soil, should be permitted to share the places of trust and emolument now monopolized by Europeans, and contribute their aid in the due administration of the law. It is most right, and most proper; and Government has done not a little towards realizing the views of Parliament, in opening new offices to native talent. It has established Deputy Collectorships, placed Baboo Russomoy Dutt on the bench as a Commissioner, and given the natives of the country original jurisdiction in all Civil suits of whatever amount, not excepting those in which Government itself is a party. In this respect Government has out-stripped the wishes of the people, for they appear to be little satisfied with the distribution of justice by Native Judges, and consider the Native tribunals as no better than scenes of venality and oppression. But let that pass. It is true that Government has not thrown open the Supreme Council to Native ambition; but the country has other and more pressing wants to be attended to, before we reach this consummation. To speak seriously, we venture to think that the country at large would be more benefited if the salaries of the Darogas and native officers of the Courts were raised to a scale, which, though it might not immediately secure honesty, would enable Government to enforce it more honestly, than if any of the alumni of the Hindoo College were appointed to the vacancy created in the Legislative Council by the departure of Mr. Amos.

In the hope expressed by the Baboo, that "the time would soon come when such an amount of public opinion would exist as would remove the evils of which they complained," we most cordially concur. This is to come to the point; it is to put the finger at once on the festering sore which debilitates the whole administration of justice. It is the want of public opinion in this country, that perpetuates public venality in spite of every effort of the state to remove it. The current of public opinion in the native community—the students of the Hindoo College always excepted—affords little or no encouragement to the growth of honest principles in the public service. No man is degraded in public estimation for adopting the process which has been in vogue in India during the last twenty centuries,—of turning his power into money. The native officer who has been confined in jail for years for the grossest peculation, re-enters society, on his liberation, without any stigma on his character. It is public opinion, and not the fear of legal consequences, which keeps the bench in England pure. That opinion is wanting here, and nothing can supply the absence of it,—no penalties, no rewards. Whenever those halcyon days arrive in which the man who has sold his official influence, and fattened on the spoil of a province shall be considered to have incurred the same degree of degradation, as the man who has eaten food with another of inferior caste, the task of Government in India will be abundantly lightened. We hope the discussions which the educated youths in Calcutta have now engaged in, will assist to hasten this period. We are happy to find their attention turned to the administration of public affairs, more especially of criminal and civil law. The more they examine the state of Courts, the more will they discover, that the remedy of existing evils lies more in the hands of the people, than of the Government; that if public opinion in the circle of native society be once enlisted on the side of truth, honesty, and justice, the defects of the European functionaries,—and they are by no means few—will be little felt. Without this aid, the most strenuous efforts of the most benevolent administration must be comparatively inefficient.

The last Overland Mail.—An article from the Bombay Times will be found among our extracts, containing a very valuable notice relative to the receipt and despatch of letters by the Overland Mail. The number of letters sent to England from Bombay, on the 3d of February, amounted to 34,547; the number of newspapers to 12,157, in all 46,704. This is the largest single despatch of covers, on record, by 23.

Astonishing as this increase may appear, there is something still more astonishing—something almost incredible in the amount of covers received from England. In the department of letters indeed there is considerable reciprocity. We received 33,228, and we sent 34,547, a little more than letter for letter; but while we sent home 12,157 newspapers we actually received 33,908, which shews plainly that however unusual the interest which has been excited at home in our sayings and doings, the interest we feel in the transactions of England is nearly three times as great as the interest which is felt there in the transactions of India. Seven years ago, when the community in Calcutta petitioned the India Board for the establishment of a monthly steam communication, the number of letters sent and received was stated at 300,000 in the year, or 25,000 a month; it has now risen to 67,775 in a single month. The item of newspapers was not taken into the calculation at all, yet the number sent and received in a single month now amounts to 56,065. If the number of covers dispatched and received in a month, from the middle of January to the 3d of February, in the present year, be taken as a criterion by which to judge of the rest of the year, there will probably be dispatched during the year 1843, one million three hundred and sixty thousand covers, instead of three hundred thousand formerly contemplated; but the number will doubtless rise to a million and a half, and in another year or two, possibly to two millions. We stand amazed at this stupendous increase of communication; and ask how we ever managed to carry on the system of social and commercial intercourse, by way of the Cape. And this carries the mind onward to the future; and we enquire, how existence could be sustained in India if this regular supply of monthly nourishment was at once cut off, and we were again thrown on the resources furnished by the navigation round the Cape. But the spirit shrinks from the contemplation of such a calamity, and we exclaim, there cannot, there must not be another war, to break up this chain of communication, and place us again at a distance from the civilized world, and weaken the sympathies which bind us to our own land.

The Meeting at the Hindoo College.—A meeting was held last week of the enlightened Native youth of Calcutta in the Hall of the Hindoo College, at which Capt. Richardson, the Principal of that Institution, was invited to be present. The business of the evening appears to have consisted in listening to an Essay of Baboo Dukina Mookerjee, the gentleman whose speech we have noticed in another column. It was of the same complexion with the speech. It was filled with the most unqualified abuse of the Government of India and its institutions, and was calculated, though it may not have been designed, to sow the seeds of dissatisfaction towards the British administration in the minds of the youths who surrounded him. It was loudly and repeatedly applauded by the auditory, more especially in those passages which denounced the public authorities with particular acrimony.

Capt. Richardson, after having listened for some time to this tirade, at length rose and expressed his regret that the youths of the Hindoo College should make so ill a use of the education they had received from Government as to join so heartily in the abuse of it. He maintained that the sentiments in the Essay bordered closely on treason, and that if this course was persisted in, he could not allow them the farther use of the Hall. This interruption exasperated the patriots, and the Chairman rebuked the Principal in severe language for his conduct, and called upon him to apologize for it. In the report furnished by the Hurkaru of the proceedings, it is asserted that the Principal expressed his regret for what he had said, and retracted his censure. A letter under his own signature, which appeared in the journals of Tuesday, however assures us, that while he expressed his regret for having, as they asserted, wounded their feelings, he refused to qualify his opinion of the impropriety of such addresses.

We have no doubt that Capt. Richardson was actuated by the purest impulse in the course he pursued. He must have felt no little mortification to find the intellectual advantages which Government had afforded the youth, employed in undermining its authority. He felt doubtless the impropriety of allowing the Hall which had been built by Government for the purposes of education, turned into an arena for seditious declamation. Still we regret that he interfered publicly on the occasion, and thus afforded the patriots an opportunity of representing themselves as the martyrs of freedom. Perhaps there is nothing so entirely harmless as these declamations of the young Baboos of the Hindoo College. A Government that has stood the fire of the Mahomedan press, in a period of great excitement, when its denunciations were supported by a reference to the army before Herat, which was said to be destined for the reconquest of India, can have nothing to dread from a few disaffected harangues in the College Hall of Calcutta, from men who have not the slightest influence in the country. Whatever information these essays contain which may tend to enlighten the minds of the public authorities, as to the cause or the remedy of public grievances, will be received with thankfulness. The seditious froth, Government is strong enough in the benevolence of its motives, and in its physical energies, to despise. The best mode of treating such orations, is to take no notice of them, whether delivered at the College Hall, or the Town Hall, or any Hall in Calcutta.

The Calcutta Bible Society.—Amongst our Selections will be found a paper which has been communicated to the Christian Observer, and ourselves, by the Committee of the Calcutta Bible Society; and to which we are desirous of calling the attention of our readers. The subject of the paper is the spelling of the name Jesus, in the Oordoo translations of the Scriptures: a matter of no very great importance in itself; and about which we see no great reason for differing from the choice the Committee has made in its orthography.

The subject however is exactly one of those admirably adapted to furnish a party Shibboleth. Perhaps the best rule, about the names of either persons or things, is, to use them in that way by which their objects shall be most readily and distinctly recognized. Etymological nicety is oftener a matter of pedantry, than of reason or utility. Some might contend it was so even in the case before us, notwithstanding the stress actually laid upon the original import of our Lord's name, in the Sacred Scriptures. It might be held, that the correspondence between the name and the work of our Redeemer was intended to make its natural impression at the time of his appearance; and being in fact incommunicable in the great majority of the languages of the world, its communication in any of them, after the beginning of the gospel, was of very secondary importance. At the same time the sacred associations of the name are such, as easily to cause its being raised to a symbol that shall be taken as a sort of test of reverence for Him who bore it: and so it may be fought about like any other indifferent thing, made great by human wilfulness.

We are sorry to think there should be any approximation to this perversion in the present case, but cannot help fearing that there is. This question of spelling appears worthy of the consideration of the Bible Society: and, when it had been examined and decided on by the Committee, it was fit and proper to communicate the grounds of their decision through the press, to all who are engaged or interested in Biblical translations. So far we approve of the proceedings of the Calcutta Bible Committee. But, unless we are misinformed, they have done more. Their paper is introduced by a notification, that they have adopted a certain spelling of the name Jesus, in Oordoo translations of the Scriptures; and this intimation runs smooth enough. But we have heard it worded differently—or in the positive fashion, that the Committee will not print any Oordoo translation of the Scriptures, the author of which will not consent to adopt the Committee's spelling.

Now if this be the meaning of the Committee's resolution, we think it improper to the last degree. It is not right, by dictating to them in this way, to reduce Biblical translators to mere literary hacks. Much less is it right for any Committee to assume to themselves the office of publishing the word of God under their authority, as if it should not pass current without their imprimatur. The only legitimate way to get at pure translations is by successive improvements on what has gone before, unobstructed by prescription and favouritism. And since Bible Societies have begun to single out particular names and terms, which they insist are to be translated and spelt as they choose to determine, under pain of forfeiture of all assistance from them, there is no saying to what length they will go. They are as liable to error as other bodies of mere men; and it is impossible to say, how soon their resolutions will pass from such harmless subjects as the spelling of names. By their interferences the Parent Bible Society has cut off the Baptist Denomination from its confederation. It also turned away a worthy Presbyterian translator, the Rev. W. Glen of Persia. The Calcutta Auxiliary appears fully disposed to keep pace with its Parent in giving occasion for offence. We would earnestly recommend their stopping in this course. Let the translators who favour them with their services have all the counsel and assistance that can be given; but let not counsel take the form of imperative orders, or be inforced by pains and penalties.

MR. BLUNDELL.—We are enabled through the kindness of a friend to present our readers with the following sketch of the services of Mr. Blundell, the Commissioner of the Tenasserim Provinces, who will shortly be superseded by Major Broadfoot. We have already expressed our opinion of this supercession, which is not only unjust towards Mr. Blundell, but forms a pernicious precedent. At the same time, no man will begrudge the defender of Jellalabad, any reward, however great it may be. But we are happy to learn, from general yet uncontradicted rumour, that the prospect of Mr. Blundell's succeeding Mr. Bonham in the Government of the Strait's Settlements, is exceedingly probable. In that case the personal injustice towards him will have been amply redressed.

MR. BLUNDELL.

A successor to Mr. E. A. Blundell, in the important office of Commissioner of the Tennasserim Provinces, having been nominated by the Right Honourable the Governor General, we are sure the following sketch of the character and public services of that gentleman will be interesting to the public and useful to his fellow servants.

Mr. Blundell was educated at the India Company's Military Seminary at Addiscombe, where he made such progress in Mathematics and Fortification as to gain one of the first appointments of his season in the Bengal Engineers; but as he had displayed much general talent at the examination, his friend, the late Sir George Robinson, predicted that he would soon rise to distinction in the Civil Service of the Company, and recommended him, instead of coming to Bengal as a Cadet of Engineers, or remaining in England to enter Haileybury College, to proceed at once as a Writer to the Presidency of Prince of Wales's Island, offering him, at the same time, an appointment to that place. He accepted this offer, and arrived at Penang in the year 1821, just as the Governor, Mr. Phillips, was organizing a plan for settling the Landed Tenures of the island, which had become involved in the utmost confusion. His knowledge of Surveying came immediately into use, and he was appointed an Assistant to the Collector of Land Revenues; and shortly after, his readiness at figures and excellent habits of business, led to his being employed also at the Custom House, where, owing to his immediate superior, Mr. A. D. Maingay, having been made Superintendant of Province Wellesley, he finally had the entire charge, notwithstanding, at this time, he had not been four years in the service. During part of the year 1825, Governor Fullerton further employed him as Secretary to Government. But although his services were so much in request, he found time to acquire a thorough knowledge of the Malayan language, in which he passed a very creditable public examination, and he made himself proficient in the Hindoostanee tongue also.

In the year 1825, the Governor General having determined upon establishing a Civil Administration in the newly conquered Burmese Provinces of Tavoy and Mergui under the direction of the Governor of Penang, and Mr. Fullerton having, most happily, selected Mr. A. D. Maingay for the office of Commissioner of those places, at the earnest request of that gentleman, Mr. Blundell was appointed to accompany him as his Assistant. From the commencement of the Burmese war in the year preceding, Mr. Blundell had been giving some attention to the Burmese language, and consequently, very shortly after he had been placed in civil charge of Mergui, he qualified himself sufficiently, not only to communicate freely with the people under him, but to translate all Mr. Maingay's rules and regulations for the judicial and fiscal administration of the new territory.

In 1827, when Moulmein was added to Mr. Maingay's charge, he removed Mr. Blundell from Mergui to the former place, in order to assist him to introduce the new civil administration into that large and more important Province; and in 1829, when Colonel Burney was ordered to proceed to Ava as British Resident, Mr. Blundell succeeded him as Deputy Commissioner at Tavoy, and took charge of the two southern Provinces of Tavoy and Mergui, where, in the following year, after having visited every village in them, and with great personal exertion, he completed a new Settlement of the Land Revenues for a certain fixed period, on terms satisfactory to the people and advantageous to the Government. About this time also he was employed by Mr. Maingay to visit the Siamese Chiefs to the northward of Junk-Ceylon, and this mission led him to turn his attention to the Siamese language, and to acquire a competent knowledge of that tongue also.

In 1831, Colonel Burney having reported the necessity for his quitting Ava for a time on account of the impaired state of his health, Mr. Maingay deputed Mr. Blundell to relieve that officer, and he, accordingly officiated for several months as Resident at the Court of Ava, when his intimate knowledge of the Burmese language, excellent temper and mild manners rendered him an especial favourite with the late King and the whole of his Court, and particularly with the Philosopher-Prince of Mekkhara, and the present Monarch, then Prince of Tharawadi, who, on the departure of Mr. Blundell, expressed an earnest hope that he would soon return to them. Whilst at Ava, he obtained copies of a great number of Burmese works on their religion, history and laws, and perused most of them with the aid of his friend, the Prince of Mekkhara, and hence, he became not only the most fluent speaker in that language, but unquestionably, the best read in Burmese literature of any Englishman in existence. At Ava also he found time to acquire some knowledge of the Persian language.

In the year 1833, when Mr. Maingay left Moulmain for the purpose of proceeding to Europe, Mr. Blundell succeeded him as Commissioner of the Tennasserim Provinces. He has therefore now been in this important and most responsible charge for a period of nearly ten years, and if the happiness and well being of the governed ought to form the first objects of a Governor's duty, we know that the whole Native population of Tennasserim will declare with one voice, that they owe a large debt of gratitude to Mr. Blundell, and that they can never expect to meet again with so kind, considerate and popular a chief. In manners mild, in temper imperturbable and always cheerful, in business indefatigable, patient almost to a fault, active, intelligent, zealous, accessible to the meanest at all hours of the day or night, and when we add, an intimate acquaintance with the language, laws, customs and prejudices of the people under him, we may surely say, that such qualities, render Mr. Blundell one of the most able and valuable public officers now in the service of the India Company. We appeal to many Gentlemen who have visited Moulmain from the three Presidencies and seen Mr. Blundell in the midst of his labours, to say whether we have exaggerated one iota in this representation, and we well recollect hearing a high public officer, who inspected the Provinces in 1828, declare, that he had never seen so young a man as Mr. Blundell then was, exercise the extensive power and authority with which he was vested, with so much forbearance and consideration towards the Natives. In his private character also we know him to be liberal, charitable and hospitable, but we desire here to notice his public merits only. His mind was always intent upon devising means for developing the resources of the Provinces, and encouraging their commerce and agriculture, and he freely parted with large sums out of his own private means to induce others to bring the Tin and Iron ore found at Tavoy and Mergui into notice in England, and to engage in the cultivation of Cotton and Sugar at Moulmain. Captain McLeod's and Dr. Richardson's Missions to the Shan countries and the frontiers of China and to Ava and Siam, the arrival of ships at Moulmain from England direct, as well from the Indian Presidencies, and the large number of fine vessels built there of late years of the teak of that place, are all proofs of Mr. Blundell's earnest and successful endeavours to extend and improve the Commerce of the Provinces.

> "Rare in their separate excellence, matchless,

It is true, that one or two European settlers at Moulmain have occasionally addressed letters to the Calcutta Newspapers in disparagement of some of Mr. Blundell's measures, but even they admit the integrity of his character and his rare qualifications for his office, and, on his approaching departure from Moulmain, we shall see how readily the large majority of the European settlers will join the Native population, in offering their testimony to the great merits of his long administration. It is true also, that the late Governor General did not entirely assent to Mr. Blundell's opinions as to the proper course of policy to be observed towards Burmah, but on this subject we can only allow ourselves to say, that Mr. Blundell's opinions were formed from an intimate acquaintance with the character and modes of thinking of the Burmese, and a personal knowledge of the character of the present ruler of Ava and all his Court, and his public spirit, zeal and manliness would not allow him to be silent when he believed his superiors were going wrong.

WEEKLY EPITOME OF NEWS.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 9.

— The last Official Gazette contains the correspondence between Lord Stanley and Lord Fitzgerald and the Duke relative to the medals bestowed on the troops who have served in Affghanistan by Lord Ellenborough. Her Majesty has been graciously pleased to permit the officers and troops of her Army to wear the same decorations which have been accorded to the Company's troops.

— The office of Special Resumption Commissioner for the Patna division has, we learn, been abolished. The few cases on the file have been transferred to the file of the Judge. The rapid abolition of these offices, though evidently owing to the completion of the duties for which they were established, will be placed in the opinion of nine-tenths of the peoplete the credit of Dwarkanath's exertions at home. The great bulk of the community, down to the very boatmen who ply on the river at Calcutta, is strongly impressed with the idea that it was this object which took him to England.

— Moulmein papers to the 25th have arrived, but they are devoid of interesting intelligence. A new vessel of 600 tons had just been launched. She is, as usual, said to be well and faithfully built, and to reflect great credit, &c. &c. During the past year no fewer than eight vessels, of 2201 tons burden, have been launched at Moulmein, a town which had no existence sixteen years ago.

— The Roman Catholic Bishop of Ava, with a large supply of priests, had arrived at Moulmein.

— The Delhi Gazette says, the Civilians have at length received their boon from the Governor General; and that those of the North West Provinces have been informed that two, three, or five hundred Rupees will be lopped off from their salaries. The boon has, it must be confessed, been somewhat amusingly distributed. The tricolor ribbon of India to the officers; sweetmeats to the sepoys; double grog to the soldiers; and retrenchment to the Civilians.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 10.

— The grand party given by Col. Powney, in honor of our successes in Asia, on Wednesday evening last, is described by those who were present as having been magnificent. The illumination was really splendid, and did great credit to the taste of the host. We have borrowed a brief description of it from one of our contemporaries.

— At the last meeting of the Agricultural Society, Dr. Griffith was appointed Vice President and Member of the Committee of Papers in the room of Dr. Grant.

— The latest accounts from Lahore state, that Dost Mahomed had arrived at that capital, where he had been very honourably received by Shere Sing. It seems a strange circumstance, that at the very time when Akbar Khan is said to be threatening an attack on Peshawur, and endeavouring to gather a large army of fanatics, and commence a religious war on the infidel Seiks, his father should be residing at the Lahore Court apparently on the most friendly footing with the chief. One of the last orders issued from Lahore was, to put five hundred maunds of gunpowder into the fort at Attock.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 11.

— The Bombay Times publishes letters from Deejkote to the 17th January. This place is the Head Quarters of the large force now assembled in Scinde. Major Outram had arrived there from the Camp of Sir Charles Napier at Eemamgur, which place he has completely dismantled and destroyed, because the Chief fled from it with several lakhs of Rupees three days before the General reached it. It is now a heap of ruins. It is said that although the Chiefs of Hydrabad are most peaceably inclined, yet our troops are to march on that capital. The villages on the route have been deserted.

— We gather from the Columbo Observer, that the Bishop of Calcutta has publicly denounced the Tractarian doctrines at Ceylon as he did in Calcutta. The same paper states, that with perhaps one exception, the Colonial Chaplains there have imbibed the Oxford doctrines; and that many lay members of their congregation have been led into the same errors.

— General Shelton has been acquitted of three of the charges brought forward against him, and found guilty only of one, that of having entered on a clandestine correspondence with Ukbar Khan in order to procure forage for his horses. But as this matter was disposed of at the time by a censure for its impropriety, the Court have declined to pass sentence upon it; and the Commander-in-Chief approves of the Court's determination. He is therefore released from arrest, and directed to follow the remains of the 44th to England. Thus the Court Martials have all ended in the acquittal of the Prisoners.

— Another batch of Coolies is now under despatch to the Mauritius on the Isabella Watson. It is said that a great number of them consist of Coolies who had returned to India after having served their time on the island. If this be the case, it speaks strongly in favour of the treatment they received there.

— The Barque Sultana, of 353 tons, has just been brought up to Calcutta from the tail of the reef, by the Commander, without the aid of any pilot, as none was available when the vessel reached the Sand Heads.

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 13.

— The Mail of the present month was detained at Bombay from the 1st to the 3d, two days beyond the usual time; but the cause of the detention is not given; it is supposed however to be connected with the despatches of the Governor General.

— The Colombo Observer has seized the opportunity of the Metropolitan visitation at the island of Ceylon, to visit the Archdeacon with his especial indignation. One of the charges brought against the Venerable Archdeacon is, that of trafficing in Coffee; and there seems to be some ground for the accusation, for we find Bishop Wilson in his Charge alluding to it, and stating that he had made it a matter of especial reference to England.

— We have news from China to the 14th of January. It has reached Calcutta in less than a month. The Emperor continues to pour his wrath on the officers who were unable to prevent the successes of the English during the last war. Yih shan, Yih king, and Wan wei, "who ought to have been as disinterested, faithful and true in their public duty as an arrow is to its mark, injured the troops, wasted the public money, sat still and lost opportunities, turned their backs on the Emperor's favour, and deceived their own hearts, "than which there can be no greater crime." The Emperor, though the two former are his own cousins, has ordered them to be degraded and decapitated. There had been no fresh disturbance at Canton; trade was uninterrupted; though the merchants are said still to tremble for their safety. The High Commissioner Elepoo, arrived at Canton on the 10th of January to settle the Tariff, and the future commercial relations of the English and Chinese, and immediately placed himself in communication with Sir Henry Pottinger, who had asked the advice of the merchants on the subject of duties. Five of their body had been appointed a Committee to confer with him on the subject.

— Major Eldred Pottinger has, we perceive, obtained his furlough, and will proceed to England. Of those who have taken a prominent part in affairs beyond the Indus, four officers, Col. Shelton, Major Outram, Major Pottinger and Major Macgregor, will shortly be on their way to our native land.

— The Governor General entered the city of Delhi, with imperial pomp on the morning of Sunday the 5th instant, surrounded by a dozen or two of Nabobs, Rajahs, Vakeels, &c. all mounted on elephants. His Lordship, it is said, intended to pass a fortnight at Delhi, receiving the salaams of the Native chieftains.

— The copy of a letter from General Elphinstone, written at Buddeabad, the 23d February, has just been published. It was accompanied by an account of the "unfortunate occurrences" at Cabul, which ended in the destruction of the army. As those events have now passed from the sphere of politics to the province of History, we hope Government will permit these documents to see the light.

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 14.

— The Madras Government has just republished a letter sent out by the Court of Directors four years ago, prohibiting the employment of any Civil Servant in any district with the vernacular language of which he is not acquainted. It has been determined to attend strictly to this rule as far as practicable. It would be well if at this Presidency some arrangement could be made for giving effect to this Order of the Court; for it is a fact that many of the young Civilians are sent from College as qualified for the service, and employed in Bengal with the language of which they are so little acquainted, as to be unable to comprehend any thing of the documents or proceedings before them.

— We are happy to learn that the Governor General has appointed Sir Richmond Shakespear an Assistant to Major Sleeman in Bundlekund. The services of this distinguished officer in liberating prisoners, Russian and English, deserve the warmest return from Government. It was he who finally prevailed on the Khan of Khiva to release the Russians held in slavery through that Khanat, and who conducted them to the Russian frontier. It was ostensibly in consequence of this act, that the Emperor published his resolution not to interfere with the affairs of Central Asia. To Sir Richmond also are we indebted in a great measure for the release of our prisoners in Affghanistan, since there is every reason to fear that if he had not pushed on as he did, they would have been intercepted by Akbar's party. We have only therefore to regret that the post with which he is rewarded is of such inferior value, though we hope it will lead to something better.

— The Hurkaru states on the authority of a Mofussil letter that the brave Goorka Regiment was not entirely annihilated at Charekar, and that two hundred have at different times found their way to our own provinces.

— It appears that the Captain of the H. C. Steamer Memnon at Bombay has been fined 50 Rupees for delivering a packet from Singapore six days after the arrival of the vessel. The Captains of the Mona and the Childe Harold were fined 200 Rs. for the same offence.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 15.

— The Star states that the Somnath Gates are not to be brought on to Delhi, but to remain at Brindabun. There we hope they will remain. However injudicious it may be to foster Hindooism by such a compliment, this procedure would be far less objectionable that the pompous conveyance of them to the sea coast, and the erection of a temple to receive them. The Governor General has acted wisely in altering his determination and preventing the exhibition of them at Delhi.

— The Bishop of Calcutta has, we find publicly acknowledged his error in having denounced the combs worn by the Cingalese, as symbols of idolatry. His Lordship stated that he had been misinformed on the subject.

— We are sorry to find it affirmed that Sir George Arthur, the Governor of Bombay, has announced his determination not to accept of invitations to the entertainments given by Natives. If the Governor General, or any subordinate Governor thinks it right to adopt the rule of refusing all invitations, whether presented by Europeans or Natives, we will not quarrel with his determination; but to draw a line of distinction between the two classes, is any thing but prudent or politic.

— The Hurkaru states that the aggregate amount of property stolen in Calcutta last year was, one lakh and sixty seven thousand Rupees, or at the rate of four hundred and fifty-four Rupees daily. But this simple fact, is not so strong a proof of the inefficiency of the Police, as would be afforded by the number of burglaries. Even in the best ordered police, large sums have been purloined by clever rogues. The whole of this sum might have been taken away in two robberies; and if there had been no others during the year, this would rather have been a proof of the efficiency of the Police.

CONTEMPORARY SELECTIONS.

ON THE NAME OF THE SAVIOUR, IN URDU TRANSLATIONS OF THE SACRED SCRIPTURES.

[The Committee of the Calcutta Auxiliary Bible Society having resolved to adopt the form يسوع for the name of the Saviour in Urdu translations of the Sacred Scriptures, have recorded at length the grounds of their resolution in the following minute.]

The Committee having considered the different modes which have been proposed for adoption, in writing the name of the Saviour in the versions of the New Testament printed in the Arabic character, and the various arguments and objections by which they are severally supported or opposed, deem it due to the importance of the subject, as well as to the Missionary brethren, who have favoured them with their opinions, to record at length the reasons which have induced them to come to the resolution they have adopted.

An analysis of the returns which have been received by the Committee, shews the following result of the number of voices for each mode of writing the name :—

for عيسىٰ ........... 7

for يسوع ........... 3

The first is the present usual mode of rendered the name of the Saviour It has been followed with few exceptions for 1200 years, has been adopted in the Koran, and by all Mahomedan writers, and also in the Persian and Urdu publications of the Auxiliary Bible Society, until a very recent period when the fourth, or last mentioned mode was substituted. The second differs from the fourth only in the lengthening of the first syllable. The third is altogether new as regards the publications of the Society.

In the practice of hundreds of years, and in the opinions of some of the most experienced Missionaries in Upper India, the Committee recognize the necessity that is imposed upon them, of proceeding upon grounds the most sure, and for reasons the most satisfactory, in arriving at any conclusion opposed to that practice, or at variance with those opinions. They believe, however, that such do exist, and that they will be found on examination fully to support the resolution of the Committee.

The letters of the Hebrew root ישע to save, from which the name of Jesus is derived, are represented by the Arabic letters ي ش and ع, or in their combination يشع. The name of the Saviour is written in Hebrew ישוע, the letters of which would be represented in Arabic by ي, ش, و and ع, or in their combination يشوع. It will be seen that in both the root and the derivative the initial letter is י or ي, and the final letter ע or ع.

By Mahomedans the name of the Saviour is written عيسىٰ, thus directly inverting the proper order, and making the ع the initial, and the ي the final letter. Here is a clear violation of the principles which have regulated the orthography of all other Biblical names, for the name of the Saviour is the only one to which such a remark is applicable.

But there is a further serious objection to the continued use of the word عيسىٰ, inasmuch as it has no signification whatever, nor can it in any way be said to convey the meaning of the original word, to which it bears no affinity or resemblance. Of numerous Lexicons and other authorities which have been examined, the only one which professes to give the derivation of the name عيسىٰ is Shakespeare's Dictionary, in which the transposition of initial and final letters is the more clearly shewn by the Hebrew and Arabic terms being brought into juxta-position.

It may be urged as an argument for the continuance of the usual mode of spelling, that preceding translators, especially Martyn*, have adhered to it. It does not appear that Martyn was ever required to consider the point in the manner in which it is now brought before the Bible Society. No objection was raised in his time to the mode of spelling previously adopted; and it is possible that the subject did not present itself thus prominently to his mind. But even on the supposition that it did, there might have been various reasons for a translator adhering to the generally recognized mode of spelling in the infancy of modern Scripture translation, which do not tell with equal force at the present period.

But even Martyn himself might furnish an argument against the retention of the Mahomedan mode of writing the Saviour's name. The name of Joshua, which is derived from the same root as that of Jesus, occurs twice in the New Testament; once at Acts VII. 45, and again at Hebrews IV. 8. In his Urdu Testament Martyn has given the name of Joshua in the former passage as يسوع and in the latter as عيسىٰ. In his Persian Testament he has given the name in both places as يشوع. It is clear therefore that the name as spelt in Hebrews IV. 8, of his Urdu Testament was a mere oversight, and that he would have written the name of Joshua as يشوع or يسوع. There is not a single authority for making ع the initial, and ي the final letter of Joshua's name, nor has any one ever contended for it. And if so, the Committee cannot see with what force it can be maintained that a method directly the reverse should be adopted in regard to the name of Jesus.†

For the above reasons, and for others which will be hereafter alluded to, the Committee are clearly of opinion that the present usual mode of writing the Saviour's name should be abandoned. Whether by way of reproach‡, or whether for any other cause, it is manifest that the name has been corrupted by Mahomed and his followers, and it is the duty of the Church of Christ to restore it to its proper form and signification.

It remains to be determined what name shall be adopted in lieu of that which the Committee propose to discard. Two have been suggested, viz. يسوع and ايساع. The second and fourth above mentioned may be considered as the same for the purposes of this discussion. The arguments and objections for and against each of these names, the Committee will consider in detail.

It will be as well, before proceeding further, to advert to the practice which has been uniformly adopted by the several nations of Europe in their versions of the Holy Scriptures, in writing the name of the Saviour. In the original of the New Testament, the name Ιησους is the Greek form of the Hebrew ישוע*, and the name of Hebrew derivation is explained in the passage, αυτος γαρ σωσει τον λαον αυτου απο των αμαρτιων αυτων, by the word σωζω, which is the general rendering of the same Hebrew root and its derivatives in the Old Testament Scriptures. Every authorized version in existence has adopted the same plan, and, following the Greek in taking the Hebrew name, has given the explanatory clause of Matthew I. 21, in a similar manner.

Following this rule in the Arabic, Persian and Urdu languages, the name of the Saviour would be يشوع or, representing the Hebrew ש by the letter س as is frequently done in proper names, يسوع.

It is urged, however, in favor of the word ايساع that "its similarity of sound with the Mahomedan term points it out as the probable form of the Saviour's name before the Mahomedan era; that Mahomed either ignorantly or intentionally misspelt it, not venturing to attempt any change in the sound of the names of the renowned prophet of Nazareth, whose supernatural birth he allowed, and whose numerous followers were not to be offended; that at least there is no evidence to the contrary."

It cannot be that the author of the Koran ignorantly altered the Saviour's name. A commentary on the life of Mahomed, by Ibrahim of Haleb, published at Cairo in 1833, states that, "Warka, the son of Naufel, the cousin of Khadija, had become a Christian at the time of ignorance, (i. e. before Mahomed,) and translated the Gospels from Hebrew into Arabic." Whether this be true or not, the Koran bears internal evidence of the author's intimate acquaintance with the text of the New Testament Scriptures; and the marked corruption of the Saviour's name must therefore be ascribed rather to design than to ignorance†.

The conjecture that Mahomed would not have ventured to change the sound of the name of Jesus of Nazareth is equally improbable. If Jesus was the Saviour of the world, there was no room for the pretensions of Mahomed. If the very name of Messiah among the early Christians of Arabia pointed out him who bore it as the Saviour, there was ample cause why the false prophet should wish to see it for ever put aside. Something towards this end was indeed effected, when the mode of writing it was corrupted. But still in mentioning that name, the very sound proclaimed the great truth involved in it; and thus it was just as essential to the scheme of Mahomed that the sound, as well as the orthography, of the name of Jesus should be corrupted.

It cannot be disputed that there is no direct historical evidence to shew the manner of writing the Saviour's name in Arabic before the Mahomedan era; and though the Christian religion was early preached in Arabia, there is nothing to warrant the conclusion that any versions of the Scriptures in Arabic are older than the seventh century. But it is from the same period that the Mahomedan literature of Arabia takes its rise. Into the causes of this, it is not necessary to inquire; the fact is sufficient for the present purpose.

Now authorities concur in shewing that يسوع is the only name by which the Saviour is designated in the Christian literature of Arabia; and every version of the New Testament in Arabic to which the Committee have access has the name written in that form. The supposition then that Mahomed, though he did not scruple to alter the orthography, would not venture to change the sound of the name of the Saviour whom he denied, can only co-exist with the still more improbable supposition, yet unavoidable conclusion, that the Christians did not hesitate to alter both the orthography and sound of the name of the Saviour, whom they professed.

Though direct historical evidence of a period prior to the Mahomedan era is wanting, the committee would refer, in passing, to the evidence of cognate and kindred languages. The Syriac, to which the Hamayaritic dialect of Arabia was nearly allied, and the Hebrew, to which the Koreish bore a close affinity, both acknowledged the same form as that which is found in the existing Arabic versions of the New Testament. In fact the name of

* The first editions of Martyn's Persian and Hindustanee New Testament are here alluded to.

† In Greek both Joshua and Jesus are written Ιησους.

* Vide Buxtorf, Schleusner, &c.

† Whether Mahomed was himself the author of the Koran, or whether others wrote it for him, the argument remains unaffected.

Jesus appears to have been known in the languages of Asia, the literature of which, for a period anterior to the rise of Mahomedanism, we possess, only as Yushúa or Yusúa. This is evidence strongly corroborative of the presumption that he was known by the same name among the early Christians of Arabia.

These considerations point out the form of يسوع as preferable to that of ايساع.

It is further urged however in favor of the word ايساع that "its signification renders it the most eligible of any that has been proposed; and that while ايساع is a regular Arabic form, يسوع is not."

There is no doubt that وسع the root of ايساع is the same root as the Hebrew ישע from which the name of Jesus is derived; and both have the same original signification of "amplitude" "enlargement." But while the Hebrew root and its derivatives are frequently, and in the Old Testament writings generally, used in the secondary sense of "safety," "salvation," "Saviour," the Arabic term is never used in that sense. No authority gives such a meaning to it; and what is more to the purpose on the present occasion, the Hebrew ישע and its derivatives in the Old Testament, though occurring about 350 times are never rendered by وسع or any of its derivatives, either in the Arabic, Persian, or Urdu* versions of the Scriptures.

Again, the very fact of the term ايساع having a signification which falls short of the full meaning of the name "Jesus" is, to the Committee, an objection to it, rather than any argument in its favor; and they think it would be better to leave the name in its Hebrew form, and with its full signification of Saviour, open to the inquiry of the reader, rather than to hold out any inducement to him to rest satisfied with the meaning of a name of limited import and power.

A further objection to the term ايساع is that واسع, another active form of the same root, is used by Mahomedan writers as an epithet of God. Perhaps this term cannot be better explained than by the Scripture passage, "Thou openest thine hand, and satisfiest the desire of every living thing." The objections to the use of the two forms of the same root intended to convey different ideas to the mind are clear and obvious.

The circumstance that يسوع has never been used as an Arabic form is that which, in the judgment of the Committee, gives it the preference over ايساع. It is because it has no meaning as an Arabic word that they would adopt it. They desire to follow the example of all the existing authorized versions of every language, and to transfer the Hebrew name, instead of making one for themselves; and instead of applying words of various significations to the Redeemer, to see the one name of "ישוע," "Jesus," "Saviour," the bond of Christian brotherhood throughout the world.

A third argument in favor of the term ايساع is, that "its sound is familiar in all India; and that the Mahomedans will never discuss the nature, character and work of يسوع."

Whatever name may be adopted in the Arabic, Persian and Urdu versions, the same will of course be employed in the Hindui; and to the Hindus, the largest portion of the population of India, it is immaterial whether the name be عيسى or ايساع or يسوع. In regard to Mahomedans, it can scarcely be expected that Christians should appeal to them on such a subject, or even yield to the prejudices of those who have shewn their hatred to the name of Jesus of Nazareth by corrupting it, and doing their utmost to despoil it of its power. Besides, it by no means follows that the Mahomedans would consent to take ايساع for عيسى, though similar in sound. The slightest alteration would be resisted by them just as obstinately and resolutely as one the most radical and complete.

It is added in favor of the word ايساع that "in all probability the Missionaries in the North-west Provinces would unanimously agree to its adoption." The proposition to adopt this term has been before them for the last five years, and the returns to the recent requisition of the Committee shew that but a very few are prepared to consent to it. Many of the objections to the term ايساع which have been already noticed are just as likely to be entertained by those who desire to retain the Mahomedan form, as by those who would substitute the form of يسوع.

* The first Urdu Bible is now passing through the press.

For the foregoing reasons the committee cannot hesitate to give the preference to يسوع over ايساع of the terms proposed in substitution for the present Mahomedan form. The reasons for giving it also the preference to the latter may shortly be considered.

First—By the best attainable evidence, and which falls very little short of direct historical testimony, it is shewn that يسوع was the name by which the Saviour was known among the early Christians of Arabia, and consequently was the name which Mahomed corrupted.

Secondly—The name يسوع signifies Saviour, which عيسى does not*.

Thirdly—It is the only name which holds out a prospect of uniformity and unanimity in the Christian Church of India. It has been adopted by the Baptist Missionaries, from 25,000 to 30,000 of whose version of the New Testament, either whole or in part, have been sent to the Upper Provinces, and by the Christian Translation Society for Upper India†. Those who have adopted this form, have done so upon principle; those who would continue the Mahomedan form do so apparently upon grounds of expediency. The Committee cannot doubt that the claims of expediency must in the end yield to those of principle.

And, after all, the question of expediency rests chiefly on the objection of the Mahomedan to call the Saviour by any other name than the corrupted one which he has applied to him.—The sentiments of the Committee on this point have already been stated; and they see nothing in the practical operation of those sentiments calculated to arrest the progress of the Gospel. They believe that the progress of the truth is more likely to be promoted by proclaiming the Saviour by the name, pregnant with meaning, given to him from heaven, than by perpetuating the corruption of it by those who deny his claims.

In coming to their conclusion on this very important subject, the Committee have not kept out of sight the fact that they are acting in opposition to the opinions of some of the most experienced Missionaries in Upper India.‡ They have felt indeed that this was the only real difficulty with which they had to contend, but they trust that it will not be one of long continuance. They are not aware whether their Christian friends have made the subject one of critical investigation, or historical research; but to these points the Committee would request their attention, and invite their brethren, whose cordial co operation on other occasions they most thankfully acknowledge, to unite with them, and other bodies, in their endeavours to restore the true name of the Redeemer to the Christian literature of the East. And at the same time that they thus seek the union and co-operation of their brethren in the Lord, the Committee would look up, humbly and believingly, to that divine Saviour whom they seek to honor, beseeching him so to over-rule and direct the hearts of his servants, that while "striving together for the faith of the Gospel," they may be "of one spirit and one mind" in all that concerns his glory.

* It is a remarkable fact that in an ancient Persian translation of the Gospels, of uncertain date, a copy of which is to be found in Walton's Polyglot, while the Mahomedan form of the name of Jesus is generally used, the form يشوع is given at Matthew i. 21 and 25, and Luke i. 31, and ii. 21. The translator evidently felt himself constrained to use the Hebrew form in passages wherein allusion is made to the meaning of the name.

† The Committee are informed that the same form has also been adopted by the Tract Society, since this minute was recorded.

‡ Some of the Missionaries did not reply to the Committee's circular. The opinion of the Baptist Missionaries as a body may be gathered from their having adopted in their version of the New Testament the form advocated by the Committee. One of the Missionaries who advocated the form of ايساع has, since this discussion commenced, withdrawn his objections to the Committee's proposition, and now concurs in their decision.

BABOO DUKINA MOOKERJEE'S SPEECH.

Baboo Dukina Mookerjee then addressed the meeting in a lengthened and animated speech which called forth much applause. He congratulated those around him and his countrymen at large upon the arrival of Mr. Thompson on these shores. That gentleman had not come seeking silver or gold, but the real welfare of the children of the soil—(cheers.) He had not come to domineer over those whose ancestors had existed here for thousands of years, but to cast himself among them as a friend and a brother, without pride and without prejudice. Nay, Mr. Thompson had at a former meeting said that in all save religion, (and all men had a just right to enjoy their own opinion on that sacred subject) he could wish he were a Hindoo, that with his present views and feelings he might plead their cause as one of themselves, (loud cheers). For that noble sentiment he had at the time it was uttered given Mr. Thompson his hand, and claimed him as a brother, and should ever afterwards call him by the name of Hindoo Thompson, a title which he was sure all around him would be ready to confirm (general applause). An organization had been spoken of, and no native who knew any thing of the state of his country could doubt the necessity for such a step. Had not the Government repeatedly violated engagements the most solemn, the observance of which was essential to the security of property and the improvement and prosperity of the people? (hear, hear.) Need he refer to the resumption measure, a measure which exhibited the Government in the act of trampling on their own regulations and breaking their own most sacred pledges? Need he describe the terror, the distress and the ruin which this measure had brought upon thousands? Was it necessary to point to the manner in which justice was administered? Justice! no: out of Calcutta it was not justice. The streams of justice had been poisoned even of the fountain-head remained pure. It was a system of bribery and corruption throughout, and must remain so unless the natives, to whom justice was so dear, undertook the work of exposure and reformation. The last charter had ordained that no native of India should by reason only of religion, place of birth, descent, or colour, be disabled from holding any place, office or employment under the Company, but of what use was such a clause, while at the same time an education at one of the Company's colleges in England was deemed an indispensable pre-requisite for all the higher situations in the gift of the government? The law was a dead letter. Its benefits were unattainable. It opened the door with one hand, but effectually closed it with the other. And so it would be with regard to every similar law unless the people themselves took up their own cause. Was it not right and proper that those who necessarily knew so much of the country in consequence of their having been born and educated on the soil, should be permitted to share the places of trust and emolument now monopolized by Europeans, and contribute their aid in the due administration of the law? He had been much affected by Mr. Thompson's statement respecting the good feeling of many persons in England. They were bound to co-operate with such disinterested friends. They would be unworthy of the aid of those at a distance if they made no effort to serve their own cause. He trusted the time would soon come when such an amount of public opinion would exist as would remove the evils of which they complained. (Cheers). Mr. Thompson said the reference which had been made to the last charter, showed the necessity there was for taking some such course as he had ventured to point out. The present was the proper time to originate such enquiries as would result in the collection of all the information necessary to guide the Imperial Parliament when they should be next called upon to legislate for India. At the same time, let the existing charter be thoroughly studied and the benefits it guaranteed be claimed by all to whom its provisions applied. All that was now attainable should be sought, and plans matured against the renewal of the charter. (Hear).—Hurk. Feb. 9.

Head Quarters, Camp Sirhind, 31*st January*, 1843.

No. 8.—At a General Court Martial assembled at Loodiahnah, on Friday the 20th day of January 1843. Colonel John Shelton, of Her Majesty's 44th Regiment of Foot, and Major General in the East Indies, placed in arrest by order of His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, was arraigned on the following Charges:

Charges.—1st. For having, during the time he was in Command of a body of Troops in the Bala Hissar of Cabool, between the 2d and 9th November 1841, and subsequently, after his return to the Cantonments, on or about 11th November 1841, prematurely, and without authority, given orders for the emptying of Ammunition Waggons, for the purpose of being refilled with grain for the Artillery Horses; the making up of bags to contain food for the Men, European and Native, and the Horses of the Cavalry; and other preparations for Retreat from Affghanistan: no instructions to that effect having been issued by either the Chief Political or Military Authorities; and such order being calculated to create alarm and despondency in the troops.

2d.—For having, on or about the 10th of November 1841, in the presence and within the hearing of the Men of a Detachment, which had been immediately before dismissed from parade, made use of highly disrespectful language with reference to the late Major General W. K. Elphinstone, C. B., then Commanding the Troops in Affghanistan.

3d.—For having, on or about the period between the 11th and the 23d of December 1841, during the time that negociations were going on between the Envoy at the Court of Cabool, and the Insurgent Chiefs, for the cessation of hostilities, unwarrantably entered into a clandestine correspondence with Mahomed Akbur Khan, one of the said Chiefs, with the view to procuring a supply of forage for his own Horses.

4th.—For having, at Jugdulluck, on the 12th of January 1842, during the Retreat of the British force, from Cabool towards Hindustan, suffered himself to be taken Prisoner by the Enemy, by want of due precaution.

Finding.—The Court, upon the Evidence before them, do find as follows:

On the 1st Charge.—That the Prisoner, Major General John Shelton, of Her Majesty's 44th Regiment, did give the orders for preparations for a Retreat from Affghanistan, mentioned in the Charge; but the Court find, that the orders were not given prematurely, nor without authority, nor in the absence of instructions from the Chief authorities; and that the orders given were not calculated to create alarm and despondency in the Troops: the Court, accordingly, find Major General Shelton not Guilty of the Charge, and acquit him accordingly.

On the 2d Charge.—That the said Major General Shelton is not Guilty; and the Court acquit him of the Charge accordingly.

On the 3d Charge.—That the said Major General Shelton is Guilty.

On the 4th Charge.—That the said Major General Shelton is not Guilty; and the Court do fully, and honourably acquit him of this Charge.

In regard to the 3d Charge, the Court, being of opinion that the matter was disposed of at the time, by the censure for its impropriety, by competent Authority, abstain from passing any Sentence against Major General Shelton.

Confirmed,

28th January, 1843.

REMARKS BY THE COURT.

The Court deem it an act of justice to the witnesses examined before them, on the prosecution, to record the expression of their regret, at the terms in which Major General Shelton has alluded to them in his Defence; but the Court cannot close their proceedings without expressing their conviction that Major General Shelton was placed under circumstances at Cabool of a most unexpected, unusual, difficult and distressing nature, and that the evidence and documents before the Court, exhibit proof on his part of very considerable exertion in his arduous position, of personal gallantry of the highest kind, and of noble devotion as a Soldier.

REMARKS BY HIS EXCELLENCY THE COMMANDER IN CHIEF IN INDIA.

I concur in the finding of the Court upon the first Charge, excepting that part in which it is implied, that "instructions" to prepare for Retreat had been, at some time anterior to the 11th November, given by the Chief Authorities.

No trace of written instructions can be found in these proceedings; neither does Major General Shelton bring forward the name of any Officer, by whom such were delivered to him, nor give the substance of such orders.

The grounds, on which this construction has been founded, are the following: That Major General Elphinstone was present when Sir W. Macnaghten expressed dissatisfaction at any arrangements being made for preparing bags, and did not censure Major General Shelton, for having issued such order without his sanction.

2dly.—That the mention of Retreat had been introduced into letters, which passed between the Envoy and General, before Major General Shelton returned from the Bala Hissar, on the 9th November; and again in his presence, on the 11th November, or thereabouts.

3dly.—That Major General Shelton asserts, that Major General Elphinstone give him instructions, to cause preparations for Retreat to be made: of which assertion the Court have given him the benefit.

Still the issue of any such instructions either by the Envoy or General, is not made clear; and, in the case of Sir William Macnaghten, the framing, even the proposing, any such order was more than doubtful.

The finding upon the 3d Charge is quite in accordance with the Evidence; but I fully approve of the Court's declining to pass any Sentence thereon.

The Major General's acquittal, upon the 4th Charge, is most satisfactory and complete.

Major General Shelton is to be immediately released from arrest, and to follow the remainder of Her Majesty's 44th Regiment to Great Britain.

(Signed) J. NICOLLS, General, and Commander-in-Chief in India.

COPY OF A LETTER FROM MAJOR GENERAL ELPHINSTONE, C. B., TO THE ADDRESS OF THE SECRETARY TO GOVERNMENT, SECRET AND POLITICAL DEPARTMENT.

Buddeeabad, 23rd Feb. 1842.—SIR,—With the deepest regret I have the honour to forward, for the information of the Right Honourable the Governor General in Council, the annexed memorandum of occurrences, preceding and during the insurrection at Cabool up to this date.

2. The state of my health and mental sufferings, previous to and consequent on these unfornate occurrences, render me little competent to furnish such complete information as I might have done, had it not been for the total destruction of my entire staff and all official documents and memoranda, and I have only been able to remedy the deficiency, through the kind assistance of Major Pottinger and Captain Lawrence, who having aided me with facts and dates, I trust, however meagre the account may be, that its tenor is upon the whole perfectly correct.

3. I beg to be allowed to express my sense of the gallant manner, in which the various detachments sent out were led by Brigadier Shelton and of the invariably noble conduct of the officers, on those occasions, particularly of those, who fell leading their men, viz: Colonel Mackerell, Captains Swayne, Robinson, McCrea and Lieut. Raban, H. M.'s 44th Foot, Colonel Oliver and Capt. Macintosh, 5th N. I., Capt. Westmacott and Lieut. Gordon, 37th N. I., Capt. Walker, 4th Local Horse, and Lieut. Laing, 27th N. I.

4. I hope I may also be permitted to record my sense of the zeal and exertions of my lamented A.-D.-C. Major Thain and my Assistant Quarter Master-General Capt. Patton, both of whom were severely wounded, as also Captain Grant, Assistant Adjutant-General, and my A.-D.-C. Capt. Airy. I had inadvertently omitted Capt. Bellew, Assistant Quarter-Master-General, who at the storm of the Ruka-Bashee, and Mahomed Shureef's forts, evinced the greatest gallantry and volunteered to carry the powder bags.

5. From Brigadier Anqustil, commanding the Shah's force and Colonel Chambers, commanding the Cavalry. I on all occasions received the most cordial assistance, and I take this opportunity to record the ever ready zeal and gallant conduct of Capain Troup, Major of Brigade, Shah-Soojah's Force.

6. Throughout the whole siege, the utmost zeal was manifested by Lieutenant Sturt, engineers, and by Lieut. V. Eyre, Commissary of Ordnance, who in consequence of the paucity of Artillery Officers on all occasions volunteered his services, and was unfortunately wounded. Capt. Colin Mackenzie, Assistant Political Agent at Peshawur, volunteered to take charge of a body of Jezailchees, and was engaged in every affair, his and their conduct being most conspicuous.

7. The manner in which the soldiers, European and Native, bore up without a murmur against all privations and very harrassing duty at a most inclement season, was highly creditable to them, and more particularly the Horse Artillery, who on all occasions upheld the character of that distinguished corps.

8. Among the many valuable and promising officers, who have fallen in the recent retreat, I would especially mention Capts. Skinner and Hay, 61st and 35th N. I., Lieutenant Legeyt, Shah's 2nd Cavalry and Lieutenant Bird, Shah's 6th Infantry; the latter officer distinguished himself in the assault and capture of the Ruka-Bashee fort.

9. Of the surviving officers, my thanks are especially due to Major Eldred Pottinger, C. B., Political Agent, and Captain George St. P. Lawrence, Military Secretary, to the late Envoy and Minister, for their cordial assistance and co-operation since the death of their lamented chief; and to Captain W. Anderson, Shah's 2nd Cavalry and B. Bygrave, Field Pay Master for their zeal and alacrity in the performance of their duty under trials and difficulties almost unprecedented.

I have the honour to be, &c. &c.

FESTIVITIES IN HONOUR OF OUR RECENT TRIUMPHS.

On Wednesday evening, Colonel Powney, Principal Commissary of Ordnance, set a splendid example, in every sense of the words, to the good people of the ditch, by giving a grand party in honour of the recent victories in China and Affghanistan. The illuminations, which extended to a considerable length along one side of the fort, were magnificent in effect, and of highly appropriate devices. The names of "Pollock"—"Nott"—"Sale"—"Gough"—"Pottinger"—"Parker," "Ellenborough" were blazoned forth in brilliant characters of gigantic stature—with "Peace in India"—"Peace in China"—"Captives recovered," &c., &c.—mural crowns, laurel wreaths, and the usual loyal devices, V. R.—P. A.—crowns and Ostrich-feather. The effect from the strand road was most imposing, and crowds were gathered outside to gaze upon it. Within doors everything was equally superb—the only fault being, that the rooms were a leetle too much crowded. That numerous and respectable assembly, which goes by the name of "all the world and his wife" was there, including Sir Hugh Gough, and other lions of the first water. The music, under the superintendence of Mr. Linton, who was assisted by all the professional and amateur talent of Calcutta, was most excellent—the walks along the garden on the parapet of the fort most enticing—the supper, of course first-rate—and the jugglers, &c. in the booths all that they ought to have been.—*Hurk. Mr. Amos has gone home, and the Friend of India says 'it is much to be questioned whether, while the last Charter continues in force, any Act of the Council would be valid, without the presence of such a Member.' There is no question about it: the Charter requires no such Member. The Government can pass no law or regulation as the Council now stands, not because Mr. Amos is gone home, but because there are not Members to form a quorum, which must consist of three besides the Governor General for the purpose of legislation. The Governor General loses his voice by absence, as the Act requires that 'all laws and regulations shall be made at some meeting at which the said Governor General, and at least three of the Ordinary Members of Council shall be assembled.' The Honorable Mr. Prinsep and Col. Casement are the only Members in Calcutta, the Hon. Mr. Bird being the Governor General's representative and exercising all his powers under a specific enactment. The Friend adds—'and it is generally understood to be the wish of Lord Ellenborough that thus it should remain'—that is without a successor to Mr. Amos. If the Lord of Lollipops means that he wants to see the Law Commission abolished we heartily agree with him, but a successor to the Council, to sit at meetings for making laws, must be appointed under the Charter, unless indeed the inconvenience is to be faced of having only the exact number that are necessary to form a quorum.—*Cal. ### THE SANGSCRIT COLLEGE—IMPORTANT TO EDUCATION.

We extract the following items from the last Annual Report of the Sangscrit College, which, we are sure, will afford sincere gratification to those who desire to see European knowledge pierce the Cimmerian gloom of Brahminism, "Under orders of the Honourable the Court of Directors, and of the Government of India, and consonant to the wishes of a very great majority of the students, English classes were established in October last, and since their establishment, up to this period (27th Dec., 1842), 108 students are now enlisted in the English classes, the whole number on the list being now 164. The time for study in the English classes has been fixed at two hours daily. The avidity with which the students seek English education is such, that the section apprehending the neglect of their Sangscrit studies, considered it proper to notify, that if any of the students failed very materially in any branch of Sangscrit examination at the annual and half yearly examinations, he should be liable to expulsion from the College." It is important that Sangscrit studies should be prosecuted with vigour in this country; but the Sangscrit College under its present management, is inadequate to that object. As the vernaculars should be combined with the study of English, so should English be taught simultaneously with the Sangscrit. Missionaries can have little hope of making any religious impression on Brahmins, so long as their minds are mystified by the subtleties and abstruseness of Sangscrit lore; as well might we attempt to make the principles of common sense self-evident to an admirer of Berkley's Idealism, or Thomas Aquinas Schoolmen's web. The murky haze of Vedantism and Sangscrit metaphysics does not allow of an opening for the beams of the Sun of Righteousness to penetrate. Could the Brahmins be induced to co-operate in the spread of European knowledge as Mr. Wilkinson aimed so strenuously after, a mighty impediment to the reception of truth would be removed.—Christian Intelligencer.

NEW PERIODICALS.

Periodical literature is of great importance in the present day—by diffusing knowledge previously stored up in bulky folios—exciting a taste for reading, and calling forth talent in short essays, &c. It is important that those vehicles should be rendered subservient to the cause of religion. America first set the example in this respect. India is imitating it. We have lately received through a kind friend some numbers of "The Morning Star," a weekly periodical issued at Jaffna in Ceylon, containing articles on Missions, native customs, religious intelligence, &c. both in the Tamul and English languages. It is calculated to be useful to the Native Christians in Ceylon. On observing the cumbrous nature of the Tamul characters, we wished that Ceylon had only some Trevelyan who would agitate the question of introducing the Roman character. This is the second weekly periodical of a religious nature started in Ceylon; the former one was discontinued because it "had plenty of subscribers who did not pay." As education and the English language are making rapid advances in Ceylon we hope there will be sufficient interest excited to support this one.

The Madras Christian Herald, a weekly publication, at the low price of 8 Rupees per annum, also deserves notice. It is conducted by an Evangelical Churchman, a Chaplain, on the principles of the Church of England Magazine. We hope it may check the spreading of the pestilential principles of Tractarianism which are so rife at Madras. Why should there be so much political news in it?—Christ. Intelligencer.

THE CONVERSION AND BAPTISM OF A HINDOO YOUTH.

A student of the Hindoo College, (2d class, senior department,) named Modoosoodun Dutt, had for some time past determined to renounse the religion of his fathers and to embrace Christianity. It is very singular, that before he had actually made up his mind to take this step, he had received no clerical instruction whatever,—having been in the habit of reading books and tracts by himself. A few weeks ago, he presented himself before a clergyman, in Calcutta, as a catechuman, and stated his willingness to embrace the religion which reason, conscience, experience, all conspired to tell him was the true one. He was shortly after introduced to the Archdeacon, who was highly satisfied with the proofs he exhibited in himself of a sound faith and a well-grounded conviction. His relations having been men of wealth and respectability, he was subjected to a great deal of annoyance and trouble. He withstood their opposition with great firmness and continued unshaken in his determinations. A thousand rupees in Government security were sent to him, with a request, that he should immediately take his passage to England and get baptized there,—that no obloquy might be cast upon his family by his embracing Christianity on the spot. He refused to accept of the gift upon such conditions, and was baptized in the Old Church last Thursday, by the Venerable Archdeacon Dealtry. He had been accustomed to write poetry in the Hindoo College, and several of his productions were printed in the Literary Gazette and other periodicals. He composed a hymn on the occasion of his baptism, of which the following is a copy:—

HYMN—BY M. S. DUTT,
[A HINDOO YOUTH.]

I

Long sunk in Superstition's night,
By Sin and Satan driven,—
I saw not,—cared not for the light,
That leads the Blind to Heaven:

II.

I sat in darkness,—Reason's eye
Was shut,—was closed in me;—
I hastened to Eternity
O'er Error's dreadful Sea!

III.

But now, at length thy grace, O Lord!
Bids all around me shine:
I drink thy sweet,—thy precious word,—
I kneel before thy shrine!

IV.

I've broke Affection's tenderest ties
For my blest Saviour's sake;—
All, all I love beneath the skies
Lord! I for Thee forsake!

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.

THE PRISONERS STILL IN AFFGHANISTAN.

To the Editor of the Friend of India.

SIR,—In your issue of the 5th instant, you forcibly and ably alluded to the events of the past year, especially the providential and happy deliverence of our captives, at the eleventh hour, from a hopeless and dreary captivity; all hearts must respond to this feeling: but one sad and painful omission has been made on our retirement from Affghanistan: shall no effort be made to rescue the still remaining unfortunate but faithful Sepoys and followers left in the enemy's hands? And such an enemy: if reports are at all to be credited, it is much to be feared that we still left many Hindoostanees to linger out a sad servitude, and experience the revenge of our enemies. Surely some effort, for the sake of our honour and humanity, should be made to recover those still missing. Why was not their release made a condition of Dost Mahomed's? who has been sent so hurriedly back, it would have been a simple and efficient one. The "Hurkaru" of the 6th instant reports the sale of these unfortunates into Toorkistan slavery. Let whatever good faith or feeling Dost Mahomed may possess, be appealed to; and a liberal sum (300 Rupees or more) be offered for every sepoy and camp follower produced. Government ought to bear this; if not, the Affghan fund—it is probably the only means now left of rescuing them. And as their value to the Affghans is small, it might yet avail. The Dost at least would trust us for payment, and be perhaps disposed to listen to us; at all events something should be tried, and the unhappy creatures not given up unpitied to their sad fate; hoping you will advocate their cause in your able columns,

I am,
YOUR CONSTANT READER.

EUROPE.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE PENINSULAR AND ORIENTAL STEAM-PACKET COMPANY.—The half-yearly general meeting of the above company was held on the 30th ult., when the fourth report from the Court of Directors to the proprietors was read by the chairman, Sir John Campbell, K.H. Want of space prevents us from doing more than briefly noticing some of the leading points of this document, which is ably drawn up. The Company have two efficient steam-boats on the Nile, and two iron luggage-boats and two packet-boats on the Mamoudia Canal; these means are ample for the water navigation through Egypt, a distance of 160 miles—viz. from Alexandria to Cairo. From the latter place to Suez, across the Desert (eighty-four miles), the directors state that the conveyance is not so convenient as it ought ere this to have been, and that if they continue to find it impracticable to procure the facilities for the public which they have a right to expect from the parties who have hitherto been connected with this branch of the company on fair terms, they will no longer hesitate to put into operation the Egyptian Oriental Transit Company, which will assuredly place the whole transit through Egypt on an improved and efficient footing. Every facility has been given to the company by his highness the Pasha, who has granted firmans for navigating both the Nile and the canal by steam; he has also established telegraphs across the Desert, and is now taking measures to erect a coal depôt at Alexandria, and a large hotel at Suez, at the expense of the Egyptian government. The surplus profits of the company on the 30th Sept. last amounted to 34,539*l* 13*s.* 5*d.*, after paying 12,333*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* as premiums for insuring their vessels; the amount insured for is 220,000*l.* The reserved fund to provide against loss by the damage or deterioration of the property is 21,500*l.* The expense hitherto incurred by wear and tear of the shipping has been made good and paid out of the profits before closing the year's accounts. Of the 11,493 shares issued, 1,085 were taken in Calcutta; 1.023 in Madras, and the remainder in Great Britain. The amount paid up on them is 432,838*l.*, leaving instalments not yet called for of 141,82*l.*, which is stated to be fully sufficient for the existing engagements of the company. A dividend at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum was declared, and the proprietors seemed highly satisfied with the report.—Atlas.

COAL-MINE AT SUEZ.—It is said that a valuable coal-mine has been discovered at Suez. If true, this is very important to the Bombay steamers, as coal there now costs 4*l.* 10*s.* per ton.—Ibid.

SUGAR MAKING IN JAMAICA.—The Jamaica planters, we observe, are beginning to seek after improved modes of cultivating their great staple sugar. At a meeting of the St. Thomas in the Vale Agricultural Society, held on the 17th of September, a resolution was adopted, offering a prize "to the overseer, attorney, or proprietor, who shall make the greatest quantity of produce at the least proportionate expense." The prize is to be a silver cup, value thirty guineas, to be competed for on the 1st of November, 1844. The gentleman will, of course, have an eye to the quality, as well as quantity, of the produce; and will scarcely sanction any attempt to raise the price by enforcing reduced wages for labour.—Anti-Slavery Reporter.

THE FRUIT TRADE is increasing. The supply this year to London of oranges, we are told, will be 58,183 boxes from St. Michael's, 6,096 boxes from Fayal, 9,763 boxes from Terceira, and 41,872 chests and boxes from Lisbon, with the other quantities received at the outports, besides the general supply of lemons, nuts, grapes, &c. make this an important branch of business. Hitherto a monopoly is said to have existed in the brokering department of this description of merchandise, which is now likely to give way under the spirit of competition introduced by some new firms who have started, and are transacting the necessary duties at rates much more reasonable than those usually charged.—Times.

PAUPERISM.—A Letter to Sir Robert Peel appeared in the Chronicle of Monday, giving, by means of statistical tables, a view of the alarming increase of Pauperism, which is adapted to excite the most serious apprehensions. The Writer, availing himself of the Reports of the Poor-law Commissioners, has brought into comparison the mean amount of the money spent by the Unions in 1837 and 1838, and the mean amount of the money spent in 1840 and 1841, in the maintenance and relief of Paupers; and the result of the comparison is, that, in the latter two years, the relief and support of the paupers, in England, cost upwards of a million more than in the former two years. The increase of half a million each year is equivalent to one-seventh, or 14 per cent. per annum. The average increase varies considerably in different counties, from 3 per cent up to 32 per cent. In Lincolnshire only, there is a small decrease. The counties in which the rate of increase is the lowest, are Warwickshire, Shropshire, Norfolk, Suffolk, and Huntingdon. The highest rate of increase is in Dorsetshire, Lancashire, Berkshire, Gloucestershire, Devonshire, Surrey, Sussex, Somerset, Monmouthshire, and the North Riding. In fifteen agricultural counties, containing a population of about three millions and a half, the increased amount is 270,902*l.*; while, in twelve of the principal manufacturing and mining counties, containing an equal population, the increased amount is 153,198*l.*; showing that the agricultural counties, with some exceptions, have far surpassed the manufacturing in the increase of their expenditure on the poor.

By another series of Tables, it is shown, that the amount and ratio of the increase of paupers have corresponded to the increase of expenditure. The number receiving relief, in England and Wales, in the quarter ending Lady-day, 1840, was, 1,199,529; and in the same quarter of 1841, 1,300,928; showing an increase of eight and a-half per cent. The proportion of paupers to the population varies from 1 in 20 in Derbyshire, to 1 in 7 in Buckinghamshire, Dorsetshire, Essex, Sussex, and Wiltshire. A decrease of pauperism, in 1841, appears to have taken place in five counties; viz. Cheshire, Cumberland, Devonshire, Nottinghamshire, and Southampton. Yet, in Devonshire, 1 in 10, and in Hampshire 1 in 9, are paupers. And, on comparing, as before, fifteen agricultural with twelve manufacturing counties, it appears, that, while the latter have increased their paupers 11,630, the former have increased nearly threefold that amount; viz. 32,562. While the average of paupers to the population, in the one case, is 1 in 13, in the other, it is 1 in 8. It further appears, that the increase of able bodied paupers is nearly equal to that of all other classes. In the county of Essex, the able-bodied paupers have increased nearly 3,000 in one year, or 33 per cent. Middlesex has increased its adult paupers from 15,290, in 1840, to 26,122, in 1841; and the increase on all descriptions of paupers has been 50 per cent. And, on comparing, as before, the agricultural and manufacturing districts, the astounding result is elicited, that, in a period of high prices of corn and cattle, the adult able-bodied paupers have increased twofold more in the former than in the latter counties.

In conclusion, the Writer observes:—

"The actual number of paupers forms no just guage of the vast extent of misery which pervades the land, and which is far more extended and prevalent than is generally supposed. There is in a large proportion of our population a spirit of independence, unsubdued by almost inconceivable privations, which refuses to become suppliant on the will of the relieving-officer, and submits to starvation and to gradual death, rather than be branded pauper. If nearly 30,000 individuals, able-bodied adults, have been added in one year to the list of dependants on the bounties of parish charity, how imperfect must all imagined estimate be of the wretchedness to which hundreds of thousands have submitted, in order to maintain their independence! And it is for this suffering and deserving class that the Legislator should exhaust his remedial measures, rather than allow the honest artisan to perish in uncomplaining want.

"These Tables do not show the evil in its full extent. They carry the scene no further than the middle of 1841. The Poor-law returns, up to March, 1842, will furnish details more black and alarming than any this paper contains. Visit the houses of our peasantry, and the dwindling stores of our lesser shopkeepers; count the tenantless dwellings, and the crowded cellars and attics; examine the furniture, or rather the lack of it, of clothes, and of bedding; and you will find that everything bears out the fearful truths which these Tables so plainly indicate.

"The evil is not yet at its full. It is not yet sufficient, that in some parts one in seven of our people are paupers; that the expense of maintaining them has increased 30 per cent.; that our adult paupers have increased one-third, two-fifths, ay, even, in one case, two-thirds in one year. Each succeeding year has aggravated this history of destitution; and, if Providence interpose not, a cry of universal pauperism will fill the land."—Pat.

HANOVER.—The Municipality of Hanover went to King Ernest with a congratulation on his son's marriage, begging that he would take this opportunity of giving up his prosecution of the City Magistracy. King Ernest bade the worthy citizens to go about their business, and not to trouble him a fourth time on the subject.—Ibid.

PRUSSIA.—The Prussian State Gazette publishes an ordonnance respecting the mode of deliberation in the commission of the States. The following are the rules or articles:—

"Art. 1. The chief of the department or the province, where the object of the deliberation exists, must conduct the deliberation as royal commissary. He is supported in his function by a marshal, chosen from the members by the King.

"Art. 2. The King will also choose the secretaries.

"Art. 3. All communications to the commission come from the Government through the Home Minister. The article mentions other forms.

"Art. 4. The Minister arranges the order of deliberation, if more than one proposition be presented.

"Art. 5. The members for each province will assist.

"Art. 6. A memoir on each question shall be presented to each member previous to discussion, and a project of the law, if such be proposed.

"Art. 7. The deliberation opens by a statement, which the chiefs of departments get prepared, containing general considerations. But explanations may be joined to the statement.

"Art. 8. Members are called on alphabetically to give their opinion. Each can speak but once, and on the question exclusively; else he will be called to order by the Marshal. But the chiefs of departments can speak as often as they please.

"Art. 9. Orators can only address the chief of department, not the person they may wish to refute.

"Art. 10. A chief of department is judge of whether a summary of the discussion need be taken or not.

"Art. 11. There are times of free discussion, when each member can speak as often as he pleases; and the Marshal points out who shall speak when two have risen at the same time.

"Art. 12. The Marshal closes the debate, when no one demands to speak. He may also close the discussion, unless three members should demand a vote as to the continuance or not of the debate.

"Art. 13. After the debate, the chief of department puts the vote, and states it.

"Art. 14. No vote is necessary, when there has been no divergence of opinion.

"Art. 15. Votes are to be given alphabetically, but different letters beginning at different times, in rotation.

"Art. 16. A summary of the deliberations and the results will be drawn up. This summary is to contain, besides the statement of the discussion, 1. An account of the different opinions (without entering into the detail of the arguments of the several members), as well as observations made by the head of the department, or by the employés present, either to give explanations or to rectify errors. The names of the orators to be inserted after the summary; 2. The questions upon which the assembly shall have voted, and that in positive terms; 3. The result of the vote, as well as the vote of each committee.

"Art. 17. The summary is to be read over in the next sitting for observation and assent.

"Art. 18. The summary is to be sent to the Minister of State.

"Art. 19. The final act shall not be published; but the Home Minister closes the assembly."

The King of Prussia has exempted from the censorship all publications of more than 20 sheets. The expected law on the press has dwindled to this.

The Prussian State Gazette announces, that the Committees of the Provincial States had resolved, by a majority of 90 voices to 8, that it would be advantageous to the country to construct railroads through the several Provinces of the kingdom.—Pat.

The Journal des Debats states that, according to the official returns made to Government on the 1st instant, the population of the kingdom of France amounts to 34,494,875 inhabitants, divided amongst 363 arrondissements, 2,846 cantons, and 37,040 communes.—Ibid.

INSURRECTION OF BARCELONA, AND SUDDEN SUSPENSION OF THE CORTES.—The news from Spain during the week has been looked to with intense anxiety. The rising of new towns and cities to join the revolutionary movement at Barcelona has been much talked of, and two regiments were said to have revolted in Arragon. At Barcelona the foreign consuls have interfered to prevent a threatened bombardment of that place by the Queen's troops. The streets are barricaded by the insurgents. Upwards of 500 soldiers have been killed, and the popular cause has also lost great numbers of partizans by death. The junta has taken measures to preserve order. It is the 30th battalion of Barcelona National Guards that has suffered most from the firing of the troops.

The Regent at once decided on visiting the scene of action, and the senate voted an address of confidence. The deputies were shuffling and irresolute. Before the Regent left Madrid he convoked all the National Guards and addressed them for twenty minutes. The air was rent with "Vivas!"

Letters from the Catalonian frontier state that Figueiras, so far from having declared in favour of the junta of Barcelona was organizing a force on the 24th, to be sent in pursuit of the band of Terradas. This band is but a small one, although it has done much mischief in the way of stopping coaches, mails, &c. Gerona, and the other towns, which were at first disposed to join the movement, returned to their allegiance on the 24th ultimo.

On the 23d of November the Regent was at Calatayud, where he was well received.

On the 22d a decree of the Regent was read by the Minister of Marine, directing that the sessions of the Cortes be temporarily suspended. This message was sent to the Chamber to prevent the continuance of a most stormy and violent debate, on a vote of censure on the Regent, proposed by the Count de Las Navas. The Regent was to be censured for making his present journey in the provinces; but the vote and the whole proceedings were quashed by this energetic step of Espartero. It is thought that the present Cortes will not meet again, but will be dissolved on the return of the Regent. Generals Seoane and Serrano left for Barcelona on the 22d—the first, it was expected, to succeed General Van Halen, in the command of the army.

A violent attack on the English, and on Espartero, charging the latter with making a British colony of Spain, has been industriously circulated in Barcelona. It was also reported that British ships of war were to leave Gibraltar for Barcelona, and aid the Spanish authorities. The junta has issued a proclamation to the army inviting it to join the popular cause.

A movement of an insurrectionary character broke out in Valencia on the 20th, but it was put down the next day. All these movements are decidedly republican.

There are 27,000 troops assembled in Catalonia, fully prepared to treat Barcelona as a city occupied by a foreign enemy, should it not make the most unqualified submission. Espartero is also most decided. His whole conduct has been very energetic, but he has been opposed in the lower house of the Cortes by unbridled passions, raucorous accusations, and even court menaces.

It was reported at Madrid that the Infante Don Francisco de Paulo had been proclaimed Regent in Arragon—but this is incorrect. The Regent was accompanied in his journey by 14,000 troops.

Although it is undoubtedly very difficult to predict what events may occur in Spain, yet the present insurrection looks like a failure; and if so, the power of Espartero will by it be much increased.

A movement at Lerida was reported, but the rumour is not confirmed.—Atlas.

LATEST NEWS FROM SPAIN.—The Captain-General of Catalonia signified to the insurgents at Barcelona that the bombardment would begin on the morning of the 28th ult. The insurgents were disposed to yield. The Regent arrived at Saragossa on the 24th, was received with enthusiasm, and was still there on the 26th. The port of Barcelona and the neighbouring coast were declared in a state of blockade. Madrid was tranquil on the 28th.—Ibid.

THE SLAVE-TRADE.—The question of the Slave-trade having been of late so frequently a topic of discussion, it may not be disagreeable to your readers to know something of the enormous profit made by West Indian and North American slave-dealers; I shall, therefore, hand you, for publication, a letter addressed to me when I was in America, in 1841, proposing to me to take a share in a speculation of the kind.

The original was written in French, and was addressed to me by Captain Auguste L, one of the most notorious slave-dealers, and was delivered to me by his own hand.

The calculations of Captain L., it will be seen, are not quite accurately summed up; still I have sent them as they are, a nearly literal translation, without altering any part of the original.

CONTO FINTO OF THE PROBABLE RESULT OF A CARGO OF 250 NEGROES.

| PRELIMINARY EXPENCES. | Dols. |
|---|---|
| Purchase of a suitable vessel ................ | 4,000 |
| Equipment and advances to the crew ....... | 2,000 |
| 300 muskets, of the usual quality .......... | 700 |
| 600 machetas, or negro knives ............... | 300 |
| 1,500 pieces of calico, gingham, &c ........ | 3,000 |
| 1,000 pieces of cloth ........................ | 1,000 |
| 1,000 lbs. of tobacco ........................ | 200 |
| 1,500 lbs. of gunpowder ...................... | 400 |
| 800 casks of tafia ........................... | 200 |
| Fittings up between the decks, chains, 300 small demi-feaunts, water casks, and medicine chests ........................ | 800 |
| Total ...... .................. Dols. | 13,0[illegible] |

The captain's wages are 150 dollars a month, besides 12 per cent. on the gross produce of the slaves. The first mate's wages are 80 dollars a month, and four dollars a head on each negro; the second mate 60 dollars, and two dollars a head. The cook receives monthly 50 dollars, the carpenter 50 dollars, and each sailor 35 dollars.

| EXPENCES AFTER LANDING THE NEGROES. | Dols. |

| The gross proceeds of the sale, estimating the 250 negroes to bring the very low price of 22 Spanish ounces, or 374 dollars a head (they seldom bring less than 400 dollars) would be........................ | 93,500 |
| Deduct expenses ........................ | 37,000 |
| There will remain a net profit of ....... | Dols. 56,500 |

Every 1,000 dollars share will, therefore, produce 4,345 dollars netto.

The equipment may take place either at Havannah or in the United States. In the latter case, however, the muskets and machetas must be bought at Havannah, as these articles would not be easily obtained in an American harbour.

It will be well to let the equipment begin immediately, as about four months are required to complete the affairs; namely, between the departure from Havannah and the return thither. It would be possible, therefore, to be back in August; and, at this season, there are few or no cruisers to be apprehended, most of them taking shelter for the winter in the harbours. The moment of landing the slaves is, perhaps, the only one of real danger.

It would be better, in many respects, that this affair should be undertaken in shares.—Hamburger Nachrichten.

THE PALI LANGUAGE.—Cabul, as the name of a place, occurs in the book of Joshua, chapter xix., verse 27, and Mr. Masson remarks that many localities in Affghanistan bear scriptural names. He notices Zour, Shinar, Gaza, Sheva, Sidim, Tabar, Amân, Kergha, and concludes that these names were borne by the localities when they became first known to the Israelites, and that they were not conferred by them. The question instantly occurs, what names then are they? Mr. Masson replies, Pâlî names, given by the Pâlî settlers in the region called Pâlistân, the land of the Pâlî—our Palestine. We will pause to remark, that evidences of the existence of this ancient people are scattered over the globe, and to that most important of uses might the collection of these indications be consecrated—namely, to the elucidation of the early history of mankind, and the confirmation of the Biblical narrative of the origin and progression of the human race. In Tyre we have Pâlitûr, the Pâlî tower or fort. The Palatine Hill of Rome is that Pâlitan, the Pâlî town over the ruins of which Rome was built. The Pâlî spread themselves over ancient Scythia. Recent discoveries in India and Central Asia have proved that the language of those countries at the period of the Macedonian conquests was Pâlî; the language of Persia was Pâlî; Phœnician is Pâlî; Pâlî words occur in the vocabulary of the savages of Western Australia, as we noticed in our review of the travels of Captain Grey; and traces of the same ancient tongue are discernible in the language of the red man of North America. The common origin of the Tartar, the North American Indian, and the Australian aborigines, may thus be traced, and a ready refutation given to the scepticism of Humboldt and the French physiologists on that point. An industrious reader will find throughout Mr. Masson's volumes many valuable notices to serve for the illustration of the theory we have taken so many occasions to inculcate, which perhaps it would be more correct not to designate a theory, but a confirmation by existing evidence of the facts recorded in the sacred Scriptures.—From an article in the Times of Friday.

THE AFRICAN PALM OIL TRADE.—The following statement respecting this important trade has been transmitted to us, and we give it a place in our columns, as we doubt not measures may be adopted for increasing the production and consumption of palm oil, and thus extending a powerful means of improving the physical and moral condition of Africa.

In the year 1838, which may be taken as the average of the three preceding and succeeding years, there were imported into the United Kingdom, from Russia, 51,938 tons of tallow, of the value of 2,77,522*l.*, for which we have to pay in money instead of manufactures, for our whole exports to Russia amount in value to only 1,663,342*l.*, though our whole imports from that country amount in value to 6,977,396*l.* annually.

The quantity of palm oil imported into the United Kingdom, chiefly from the western coast of Africa, gradually increased from 98,070 cwts. in 1827, to 285,000, in 1840. The quantity of palm oil entered for home consumption at London, Liverpool, and Bristol, independently of a quantity entered at Hull and sent coastwise, amounted during the last three years to 41,696 tons, of the value of 1,249,880*l.* The whole quantity imported in 1841 was about 19,000 tons, and it is expected that considerably more will be imported during the present year.

This large quantity of palm oil has hitherto been consumed in the manufacture of yellow and mottled soaps, and in the preparation of grease for railway, and other machinery; its dark orange colour having, until very lately, precluded its use in the manufacture of candles and white soap.

About six years ago a very simple method was discovered of so bleaching and refining palm oil as to render it perfectly white by the action of heat, light, and atmospheric air, without the use of chemicals, all of which injure it; and since then the importance and consumption of it for these purposes has greatly increased, and these trades only require to be enabled to purchase it in this bleached state at about 2*l.* 10*s.* per ton above the market price of the raw palm oil, to induce them to use it to a much larger extent. Independently of the colour, however, another drawback to the larger consumption of palm oil is, the immense quantity of dirt and water existing in it as at present prepared abroad, amounting on an average to about one cwt. per ton, and producing a fluctuation in its value and price amounting to 3*l.* or 4*l.* per ton. A few years ago, Russian tallow was imported in a similar state, but the Russians soon learnt the English method of refining it, and now Russian tallow is as valuable,—and a short time ago was more valuable than the best London town-made tallow.

It is a well-known fact, that the palm oil tree grows wild in the greatest abundance in Africa, and that the collection of the nuts, and preparation of the oil therefrom, might be increased to any extent if the natives were encouraged and assisted in the undertaking; that their present processes of procuring the oil are not only inefficient but injurious to the oil, and might be very considerably improved, both as regards expense and quality; and that so far from this mutually advantageous trade being encouraged, the native chiefs and palm oil factors, by their frequent quarrels, not only sometimes prevent the preparation of the oil, but actually make the native holders refuse to sell what they have already procured.

The expense of the carriage of palm oil from the docks to a bleaching factory, of unpacking and repacking, of carriage thence to the consumer, of artificial heat for bleaching it, and the loss by dirt and water, prevent the possibility of carrying on the manufacture in this country at a profit of only 2*l.* 10*s.* per ton above the market price of the raw palm oil. But nearly the whole of these expenses might be avoided by bleaching the palm oil before put up for exportation at our settlements on the coast of Africa.

Thus it appears that we are paying annually to Russia about 2,000,000*l.* in money only, for an article we might very easily supply ourselves with from Africa in exchange for our own manufactures, to the great physical and moral benefit of the negroes and advantage of ourselves,—provided such exchange is effected on the good Christian principle of "doing as we would be done by."—Friend of Africa.

Camp Futteypore, 21st January, 1843.

In continuation of General Orders of the 14th ultimo, the Right Honourable the Governor General of India is pleased to make the following Promotion and Alteration of Rank:

5th Regiment N. I.

Lieutenant and Brevet Captain John Bascombe Lock (deceased,) to be Captain of a Company, from the 10th January 1842, vice Captain and Brevet Major John Jervis promoted.

ALTERATION OF RANK.

| Rank and Name. | To rank from. | In whose room. |
|---|---|---|
| Captain Joseph Carleton Salkeld, | 10th Jan. 1842, | Vice Captain Rawdon Muir Miles, killed in action. |

The promotion to the rank of Captain, of Lieutenant Frederic White Burkinyoung (deceased.) announced in General Orders of the 14th ultimo, is cancelled.

Numerous applications having been received from Officers recently Prisoners of War or Hostages in Affghanistan, for the adjustment of their Pay and Allowances while detained in Captivity, the Right Honourable the Governor General is pleased to direct the re-publication of the Orders of the Honourable the Court of Directors, originally published in General Orders by the Governor General in Council of the 15th December 1810, for the information and guidance of parties and departments concerned.

"When an Officer shall be considered by the Enemy as "a Prisoner of War in India, he shall during his residence on shore in India receive the Pay and half Batta "of the Rank he may hold at the time of his Capture or "may obtain by promotion there, but upon all other occasions, during his Captivity, whether on board ship in "India, or ashore or on boardship in Europe, he shall receive the Pay of his Rank only."

No Regulation has yet been framed defining the extent to which Pay and Allowances can be passed to officers who may be placed in the hands of an Enemy as Hostages, for the period of their detention, but pending the result of a reference on the subject made to the Court of Directors, the Governor General directs, that the provisions of the foregoing Order fixing the Pay and Allowances of Prisoners of War shall extend to Hostages also.

By this Order the claims of every Officer concerned will be adjusted, and certain decisions on individual cases lately passed by the Governor General, before the General Order of the 15th December 1810, was brought to his knowledge, are hereby superseded.

EUROPEAN AND ORIENTAL AGENCY.

MR. PARKE PITTAR

HAVING arranged the formation of an Agency, the particular object of which will be the transaction of affairs, connected with this country and Europe, begs to offer his services to the community of India, in any way they can be rendered available.

A peculiar and important feature in the Agency now established, will consist in the annual return of Mr. P. Pittar to India. Taking advantage of the Peninsular and Oriental Company's Steam Vessels, he purposes re-visiting Calcutta about the latter end of every October, and returning to Europe about the middle of the following February, thus affording to persons entrusting the management of their affairs to his care, the opportunity of a personal conference and explanation of their views and intentions,—an advantage in the transaction of affairs of a complicated, or family nature, the greatness of which need not be commented upon.

A long residence in India, combined with an intimate knowledge of almost every description of manufactured article, and its various manufacturers, rendering him peculiarly fitted for the office of Agent to persons procuring their supplies or other articles, such as Table Equipages, Philosophical and Optical Instruments, Books, Maps, Sporting Apparatus, Musical Instruments, Military Equipments, Wines, &c. &c. direct from Europe, he offers them his services with every confidence that his selections will give the most perfect satisfaction, whether as regarding quality, cheapness, or adaptation to the climate; but in the execution of these commissions, a previous remittance for their full amount, or reference for payment, will invariably be required.

Every article purchased through this Agency will be most minutely examined previous to its being packed and the same care under every circumstance, taken, as if persons were themselves individually present and superintending. Packages of a large size will, as usual, be shipped by fast-vessels to their destined port; but those of smaller dimensions, will, (unless otherwise instructed,) be sent through the Peninsular and Oriental Company's Office, Overland: thus enabling persons in most instances to receive their orders fully executed within four months from the date of the transmission of their instructions.

In transactions of a private and confidential nature a fair remuneration, according to circumstances, will be expected; in those of the ordinary nature of Agency Business, the Commission will be regulated by the customary rates; and for the selection, purchase and shipment of goods, a Commission of 5 per cent. on the gross amount will be charged.

Letters to the address of MR. PARKE PITTAR, EUROPEAN AND ORIENTAL AGENCY OFFICE, LONDON, will meet with the most prompt attention.

Reference in Calcutta, R. J. Lattey, Esq. of the firm of Messrs. Lattey, Brothers and Co.

PROSPECTUS.

IT is proposed to publish, by subscription, a work, in Eight Books, blank verse, to be entitled PARADISE, OR THE INVISIBLE WORLD.
BY W. ROBINSON, Baptist Missionary.

The Work treats on the state of disembodied souls, both that of the saved, and that of the lost; but chiefly on the state of happy souls.

It is a commonly received opinion among Protestants, that disembodied souls go at once to Heaven or Hell; but this opinion appears to some, and to the author among others, to be unsupported by Scripture. The doctrine taught in Scripture seems to be that of an intermediate state; not a purgatory, nor a state of probation; but a state of rest and happiness for the righteous, and of misery for the wicked; while Heaven and Hell seem reserved till after the resurrection and the judgment. The righteous, it is believed, will not enter Heaven till they all enter it together at the invitation: "Come ye blessed of my Father," &c. nor the wicked enter Hell, till they all enter it together, when the Great Judge shall say: "Depart ye cursed into everlasting fire," &c.

The arguments in favour of an intermediate state, and replies to the objections usually brought against that state are limited to the Second Book; so that those, who differ in opinion from the author, may, it is believed, read the other parts of the work without finding any thing materially different from their own views of the state of departed souls.

The author is quite ready to acknowledge, that the doctrine of an intermediate state is a non-essential; and he has treated it as such; but as truth is preferable to error, even in non-essentials, he has thought the subject of sufficient importance to be laid before his fellow-Christians for their consideration; and he hopes, that his manner of handling it will not inflict the least wound on the feelings of those, who differ from him.

The advocacy of this doctrine was but a part, and that not even the main part of the object, which the author proposed to himself; his chief object was that of calling the attention of his fellow-christians to the great concerns of another world, and thus promoting their spirituality of mind; and he ventures to hope, and his hope is corroborated by the testimony of a few plain christians, that have seen the whole manuscript or parts of it, that the serious reader will not peruse the work without some spiritual advantage.

_ The work will be printed in Demy 8vo. and will contain about 400 pages. Price bound in cloth 6 Rupees.

Persons desirous of subscribing to the work are requested to send their names and address to the Rev. J. THOMAS, Baptist Mission Press, or to the Serampore Press, or to Mr. John Robinson at Serampore.

Revival of the Landholder's Society.—Some time back we stated that the Landholder's Society had apparently become extinct. For more than a twelvemonth it had given no signs of existence, and we naturally applied to it the old legal maxim de non apparentibus et non existentibus eadem est ratio. A letter which appeared last week in the papers, with the signature of the Secretary attached to it, however, convinces us that the announcement of its death was premature. It has only been in a state of somnolency. If we are not mistaken it is the arrival of Mr. George Thompson which has broken its long sleep. At one of the meetings at which he has addressed the Natives of Calcutta upon their own interests, he alluded to the apathy which the Native community manifested in regard to the legislative movements of Government, in the following terms. "You see, week after week, announcements of proposed changes, and new laws, and new systems. You offer no advice, you threaten no opposition, you recommend no modification. What is everybody's business is nobody's business; and the law is passed, or it is not passed, according to the sole will and pleasure, or views of the Government. May not the Government justly say afterwards, that you are yourselves to blame in the matter, if any injury is done, or any benefit withheld?" These remarks appear to have roused the dormant faculties of the Landholder's Society, and it now comes forward again to assure the public of its existence.

The occasion which has been selected to prove that the Society is not defunct, tells heavily against its utility. During the long slumber in which it has been indulging, the subject of a general Registration of all deeds throughout the three Presidencies, upon a uniform and a reformed system, has engaged the attention of the Government and the European community. The draft of an Act, formed upon the model of similar Acts in England, was published both in English and Bengalee, twenty-one months ago. It was manifestly drawn up with the greatest care and attention, and was intended to give this country the benefit of those improvements which had been gradually introduced into the system of Registration at home. It was fully canvassed in the European journals, not only by the Editors, but by many of their correspondents who had the benefit of local experience. The draft was remodelled and republished thirteen months ago; but Lord Ellenborough on his arrival, appeared to be averse to its being passed, chiefly we believe because his Lordship's attention was too much engrossed in giving "peace to Asia" to allow him leisure for mastering its complicated details. A simpler enactment was therefore substituted for it, with the view of rendering the existing rules more effective. The draft of this Act was published four months ago; and the Act itself was enacted on the 1st of the present month. During the whole period in which these two Acts were under consideration, the Landholders' Society remained, as far as we can judge from their silence, totally inactive. A fortnight after the law had passed, the Secretary of that Association calls the special attention of the members to it; and announces that the Society have it "in contemplation to address the Government in reference to the existing laws of Registration, with the object of promoting the greater efficiency and completeness of the system." Why was not this done while the subject was on the tapis? Why was it delayed till the Act in reference to Registration was actually passed? Simply because Mr. George Thompson upbraided the Natives with their inactivity, when Government invited their opinions regarding the laws which it was proposed to enact. Mr. Thompson's visit will therefore be doubly beneficial; beneficial to himself, in shewing him the extent to which the vis inertiæ pervades the Native community; and advantageous to the Natives by rousing them from their torpidity, and teaching them that something more is required of them than to denounce the Government under which they live.

The subject of Registration will of course come on again as soon as the Governor General has leisure for internal improvements. The question is one of paramount importance both as it regards the security of property, and the due administration of justice, and Government will require all the assistance which it is possible for the community, European or Native, to contribute. The registration, must be made compulsory, or it will fail to be a complete check on fraud. The Scottish law must be our model, and the validity of a document must date from its registration, not its execution. There may be some little inconvenience produced by so peremptory a law among so dilatory and so slippery a people; but it will infinitely less than the inconvenience which will inevitably result from leaving even the smallest loop hole by which a man can escape from Registration. And, moreover, it is only by sufferings that the national vice of procrastination can be cured. To make this compulsory law equitable, however, we shall require such a system of local registration as may give every man an opportunity of registering his documents, without the necessity of a journey of four or five days to the chief station in the district. We shall require also such a system of supervision as shall effectually prevent a suitor's being kept a week dancing attendance at the Registry office, bargaining for the registration of his deed with the venal Native officer.—But this is not the time for entering upon this large subject; our chief object at present is to congratulate the Landholder's Society upon the symptoms of returning vitality which it has begun to exhibit.

The College of Fort William.—The last number of the Calcutta Gazette contains the Report of the College of Fort William for the past year, and the observations of the Deputy Governor upon the progress made by the students. Those observations are marked by a sound judgment and a benevolent regard for the welfare of the people. His Honour reminds the students that "they are destined to be the future administrators of this great and populous country; that upon the qualifications they are found to possess, will depend the happiness of the people committed to their charge; that to possess a competent knowledge of the language which the people all speak and in which alone public proceedings are conducted, is so essential, that to be unable to communicate with the highest and the lowest without the aid of an interpreter, would be considered a disqualification—and that the languages of the people ought to be the first study of those who are entrusted with the public administration, and to whom the people have to look up on all occasions for protection against oppression and injustice." These are noble sentiments and manifest a just appreciation of the responsibility of Government. Let us now examine how far the studies of the College, during the past year, have corresponded with them.

This Presidency is divided into two parts; the North Western Provinces, and Bengal; the former are said to contain forty millions of people; among whom the official language is Oordoo; the latter is supposed to comprise thirty millions of people who understand no language but Bengalee, in which all public proceedings are conducted. The number of Civilians employed in the civil and criminal courts and the revenue department in the provinces in which Oordoo prevails, is about Two Hundred; the number now stationed in the districts in which Bengalee is the only language in use, is about One Hundred and Thirteen. On turning to the report, we find that during the past year only One solitary Civilian passed an examination in Bengalee; all the rest were reported qualified in two languages, neither of which was Bengalee, but one of which was the exploded Persian. It is therefore manifest, that only one student during the last year was qualified for office in Bengal, and that any other student of the year who may be appointed to any office in the Lower Provinces, must enter upon his public career disqualified for the discharge of his duties. Against the continuance of such a course of instruction we would venture to offer three objections:

1. It is in direct contravention of the published orders of the Court of Directors. Those orders are positive, "We desire that it may be laid down and promulgated as a standing rule, that no member of our service shall hold the appointment of Judge, or of Collector, or of Magistrate in any district with the language of which he is unacquainted." Yet while this order remains unrepealed, it was not deemed necessary to qualify more than one Civilian out of fifteen, during the past year for the public service in the populous kingdom of Bengal. If it be said, that the orders of the Court refer only to Judges, Collectors and Magistrates, and that for some years the young Civilian will be employed only in subordinate situations, we plead that the spirit, not the letter, of the despatch is to be the guide of the public authorities. We will venture to assert that it never could have been the intent of the Directors that the vast public interests entrusted to Joint Magistrates, Deputy Collectors, and Assistants, should be superintended by men entirely ignorant of the language of the people. But after having dismissed men from College and planted them in the public service, without any knowledge of the language current in the subordinate Courts [illegible] which they are to preside, what arrangements have been made for ascertaining that at any future period they have acquired this essential qualification before they rise to the higher dignities of Judge, Magistrate and Collector? None whatever. There is no subsequent examination, by which their acquaintance with this vernacular tongue is ascertained. There is no inducement held out to them to acquire it; neither is there any penalty attached to their ignorance of it. They obtain appointments without any reference to this qualification. And there is every reason to fear that they will never acquire it. When men fail to obtain a colloquial familiarity with a language within the first two or three years after their arrival in the country, in nine instances out of ten they will not acquire it at all.

2. This course of procedure is liable to the charge of inconsistency, and exposes the public authorities to the ridicule of mankind. Where is the consistency of obliging every student in the College to pass an examination in Persian, after that language has been excluded from all the public Courts? If the subject was not too serious for a laugh, the idea of extolling men for the acquisition of a language, the use of which has been abrogated, would recall the witty line in the Rejected Addresses:

> "God bless their pigtails, though they're now cut off."

This pigtail, the badge of Mahomedan dominion, we have by a public enactment cut off: and it is therefore inconsistent to extol men for wearing it.

Where is the consistency of declaring a knowledge of the vernacular language indispensible to a due discharge of public duty, and of allowing fourteen out of fifteen men to leave College unqualified for service in Bengal? After Bengalee has become by public appointment the language of public business among thirty millions of people, is it not a strange anomaly that it should be far less studied by those who are to preside over the administration of public business among them, than when it was not the official language? Is it not the dictate of consistency and of common sense that, if the students are required to qualify themselves in two languages before they enter on the public service, these should be the two languages which are current in the two divisions of the Presidency, and no other?

3. This course is also unjust to the people of Bengal. It is of the last importance that the Civilian who is to be employed in this province, should be well acquainted with its language. We venture to say that not one-fourth of the Civilians now employed in it, have any thing like a competent knowledge of its language. This is more their misfortune than their fault. Their education was completed, while Bengalee was yet proscribed; and they have been accustomed during their official career to Persian and Oordoo. But there can be no excuse for sending a single individual from the College of Fort William, to take charge of a public office in Bengal who is not acquainted with that language. Without it, he becomes immediately, as the Deputy Governor admirably remarks, the "instrument of fraud and chicanery." He is totally unable to protect the people committed to his charge. The distance by which his European habits and his official character separate him from the people, is indefinitely increased by his ignorance of their language. In vain does Government laboriously and conscientiously devise means for improving the administration of justice, and watch with vigilance over the conduct of its servants, European and Native, if the European functionaries are allowed to preside in Courts totally ignorant of the language of the people. Even when possessed of the most intimate knowledge of that language, the European officer finds it difficult to do justice between man and man; what then must be the amount of injustice perpetrated in his name when that knowledge is entirely wanting?

We are not certain that though the system which we have animadverted on has been pursued in the College during the past year, it may not have already received its death blow. We have heard that an improvement has been already made in the studies of the young Civilians; and that greater importance will be attached in future to the cultivation of Bengalee, and less to that of Persian. We consider it a matter of justice to make this statement, lest it should be supposed, when the change is announced, that it has been owing to the importunity of the press and not to the spontaneous impulse of the public authorities. Perhaps when the improvement is announced, it may encounter opposition from antiquated prejudice; and our labour in thus pointing out the impropriety of the present course will not then have been lost. The fact is, the whole system of study in this Institution requires to be radically remodelled. It is a great misfortune that no change has been made to accommodate it to the altered circumstances of the country, and that its arrangements are the same as they were eight years ago, when Persian was the language of business, and Bengalee was not. We require not only that the Bengalee language should be cultivated to the extent to which it will be required in the public service; but that a considerable modification should be made to improve the qualifications of those students whose sphere of action will hereafter lie in the North West Provinces. The official language in those Courts is the Oordoo, which is not at all studied in the College. It is true that Persian bears a very close affinity to Oordoo, and that the student who has acquired a knowledge of the one, will find little difficulty in mastering the other. But why should he not be directed at once to apply to Oordoo, instead of being set to acquire it through the medium of Persian? Why should Hindee form any part of his qualification, when it is used in no Court? We would not advise; we would peremptorily command that every student should devote his time to the study of Oordoo and Bengalee, and thus qualify himself for the discharge of public duty in every district of this Presidency. We look with confidence to the efforts of Mr. Bird before he bids adieu to the country to complete the improvement introduced under Lord Auckland's administration, by a thorough reformation of the system of study in the College of Fort William. This must be done in conjunction with the Court of Directors. To effect this salutary change, it is necessary to begin with the studies at Hayleybury; and to direct the exertions of the student, from the very beginning, to those languages which shall qualify him for public duty. But the impulse must originate in this country.

THE GOVERNOR GENERAL'S NEW APPOINTMENTS.—Our readers can scarcely have failed to remark the number of direct, substantive appointments in the Civil branch of the Service which Lord Ellenborough has made since he assumed charge of the administration in the North Western Provinces. One Gazette, that of the 8th, contained no fewer than twenty-one appointments, of which only two were of a temporary nature. A careful examination of the character they bear, will perhaps furnish us with some clue to the principle on which his Lordship seems resolved to act in reference to Civil offices. We find that each district is supplied with a substantive Civil Judge, a Magistrate and Collector, a Joint Magistrate and Deputy Collector, and one or more Assistants. His Lordship is evidently averse to the system of allowing a man to stand appointed to an office, while he is acting elsewhere, and his own duties are performed by another. Apparently, every individual will be required to join his office as soon as he has been posted to it, and will not be allowed to draw the salary without performing the duty. The appointment of three or four officers in regular subordination, to the Magisterial and Fiscal duties of a district, will also enable Government to provide for the temporary absence of any one of them, without creating a series of officiating officers,—by simply directing the juniors to act for their superiors. This will serve to correct to a considerable degree the great inconvenience which results from acting appointments; for it sometimes happens that the departure of one individual occasions the shifting of five or six others in different and distant parts of the country. Thus the service appears to be perpetually on the move; and the country is deprived of those advantages which can be secured only by giving a more permanent character to the possession of office, and thereby enabling an officer to become acquainted with his district. When the means of supplying a vacancy are at hand in the district itself, the inconveniences of change will be less felt.

This plan has yet to be tested by experience. It remains to be seen how far it will provide for those mutations which inevitably result from the loss of health. To all appearance it is likely to accomplish the object for which it is evidently designed; and if it should succeed, it will serve as a model for the lower Provinces, where the evils of officiating appointments, and the constant change of officers tells so much against the efficiency of the Service. May we be allowed to suggest the propriety of erecting bungalows, in centrical positions in each district at a moderate expense, to which the young Assistants might be sent periodically, for the purpose of administering justice on the spot. Nothing acts so effectually as a check on the oppression of a Native officer as the presence of a European functionary in his vicinity. The tour made by the Magistrate through his district during the cold season, is a great blessing; but we want something of the same nature during every month of the year. The establishment of such bungalows would enable the junior officers to visit the various portions of the district, at short intervals, without inconvenience. This would not only serve to bring justice in a measure to every man's door, to inspire the natives with confidence, and to infuse a salutary terror into the minds of their oppressors, but give our European functionaries such a knowledge of the interior of the country as they have at present no means of obtaining. If the position of these bungalows be judiciously chosen, it is possible that they may hereafter become the station of fixed officers with subordinate police jurisdiction. It is not merely the multiplication, but the diffusion of European influence that we require, to afford adequate protection to the people.

MR THOMPSON'S ADDRESSES TO THE NATIVES.—Since Mr. George Thompson's arrival in Calcutta, he has been employed not only in prosecuting enquiries for his personal information, but in striving to arouse the natives to a course of patriotic exertion. He has held several meetings, which have been attended by a large and increasing number of the best educated men in Calcutta, to whom he has pointed out the course they must pursue if they would benefit their country. It is gratifying to find so large a body of natives capable of appreciating the eloquent appeals of a man like George Thompson. We can well remember the time, when, if he had landed in India, not five natives would have been found in Calcutta, able to comprehend a single sentence delivered by him. Accustomed as we are to periodical reports of education, we become in a measure insensible of the progress of improvement effected by the labours of Government and of private associations, till it is suddenly presented to the mind by some unexpected association like the present, when we find hundreds of educated natives listening with admiration to that eloquence which has produced so powerful an effect in our native land.

The addresses which Mr. Thompson has delivered at these meetings, appear to be eminently calculated to improve the native community, and to give a beneficial direction to their efforts. He seems to be already at home with the native character. He has measured the extent of its weakness, and his discourses are therefore characterized by a very practical tendency. When he advises them to study their own country, its past history, its present state, its various institutions, and their influence on the national character, and affirms that without this knowledge their efforts will be powerless, he shows at once that he has discovered wherein the deficiency of his audience lies. There are few subjects of which the educated natives are more lamentably ignorant than of those which refer to the actual condition of their own native land. They have in fact scarcely any knowledge of it beyond what has been forced on them by daily observation, or which can be said to owe its origin to their own researches. When he counsels union, he is addressing a people among whom discord is the only heirloom, and jealousy of each other the feeling which pervades every rank of society. When he advises concessions on minor points in order that they may move forward as a "compact whole," he is appealing to those whose ancestors have invariably allowed private interests to swallow up all concern for the general good, whose independence has repeatedly been lost, while they were engaged in petty bickerings; and among whom a compact union, founded on much mutual forbearance, and great national principles, appears at present all but impossible.

In the course of his address, Mr. Thompson stated that "England was the fountain head from which benefits must flow to India;—and that great measures in behalf of India must originate in England." This may possibly be true as it regards the future, but the past history of India would scarcely warrant any such expectation, except under a very altered state of circumstances. For many years after this empire had been subjected to the crown of Britain, it was governed with a view to the promotion of British, and not Indian interests. Till within a very recent period, the commercial legislation of Parliament was stimulated by a desire to promote the welfare of the mother country, without one thought of the consequences entailed by such a course on India. Under the influence of this partial system of Government, the resources of this vast country have been neglected and its prospects blighted. A brighter period however has now dawned on us; and we hear even within the walls of Parliament of Justice to India. But this improvement of public feeling is still to be attributed mainly, though not entirely, to a calculation of the benefits which may accrue to England by an improved system of administration. We have gained nothing by any sacrifice of interests, or even prejudices, at home. It is chiefly because the other nations of Europe are closing their markets against our manufactures, that England has turned her attention to the large outlet for her produce which India presents, and which can be turned to account only by a liberal system of policy.

And, with reference to those measures of internal policy by which the domestic administration of the country has been improved of late years, we have no hesitation in saying that there is scarcely a single instance in which any improvement can be traced to the direct interposition of the Home authorities. Some of those measures, as for instance, the Liberty of the Press and the abolition of the transit duties, have been carried in a great measure against the wishes of the Court of Directors. It was long before they could be prevailed on to sanction the establishment of a monthly steam communication with India. On more than one occasion, Lord William Bentinck was sharply censured for having sent the Hugh Lindsay up the Red Sea with public despatches. We acknowledge with gratitude that the Directors have long since retrieved their character, and are now as warm advocates for this intercourse by steam as they were once opposed to it—but the impulse was given from this country. It used indeed to be a common remark not many years ago, that if India was well governed, it was in spite of the Government at home. Without subscribing to this assertion in its fullest extent, we may yet remark with perfect confidence, that, with few exceptions, every great and beneficial measure has originated on this side the water, and that the public authorities in India here have generally been found ahead of the home authorities in liberality of views. The impulse which was given originally to native education, arose from the enlightened sentiments of Lord Hastings, who was encouraging the establishment of Schools in India, long before the Directors had abandoned the principle that ignorance was the mother of obedience. The abolition of Suttee was the work of Lord William Bentinck. To the same great mind do we owe the introduction of Natives into the administration of the country which has given so vast an impulse to native improvement. To his bold policy are we indebted for the settlement of the Western Provinces. It is to Lord Auckland that we owe that magnificent boon, the restoration of the vernacular languages to the Courts at this Presidency; and it was through his recommendation that an addition was made to the funds of the Education Society. To the energetic and persevering efforts of Mr. Bird are we indebted for the abolition of Slavery in India. In all these instances—and they might be abundantly multiplied,—it is in India and not in England that the fountain head of benefit in India has been opened. To the Government here belongs the merit of having taken the lead in this career of national benevolence; to the Government at home that of having honoured these efforts by its sanction. Far be it from us to undervalue the importance of bringing the moral influence of England to bear upon the Government of this country and the improvement of its inhabitants; but justice demands that the due meed of praise for having originated good measures should not be withheld from those great men who have presided over the administration of this country.

EXPULSION OF DWARKENATH TAGORE FROM SOCIETY.—The Bhaskur, the ablest Native Journal published in Calcutta, informs us that a large meeting was convened a few days ago at the house of Hurukoomar Tagore, of the whole kith and kin of the Tagores, when it resolved to punish Dwarkenath Tagore for having visited Europe, by turning him out of society. The individuals from whom he has received this unkind and ungenerous cut are his own relatives, who have generally been supposed to belong to the liberal party in Calcutta. All family intercourse is to cease; he is not to be admitted to their domestic parties; neither will they or their friends accept of any invitation to his house. The non-intercourse act was, we farther learn, put in force soon after the meeting. The anniversary shraddu of Dwarkenath Tagore's wife came round, and the usual invitations were sent, but universally refused. Thus the individual upon whom the highest distinction has been conferred by the rulers of this Empire which has ever been bestowed on any Native, is debarred from all social intercourse with his own kindred, and tabood by the members of his own house. The individual, whom the Queen of England and the King of France have delighted to honour, is proscribed in his own country and among his own people. Instead of considering the family honour augmented in the person of its illustrious head, his bigotted kindred have made the very marks of distinction which he has received from crowned heads the reason for visiting him with their highest displeasure. He is not without honour, save in his own country.

If the members of the Tagore family, who have thus exposed the nakedness of their bigotry to the contempt of mankind, were men of unblemished purity in their own circle, if they had never violated the rules of their own shastras, there might have been some small excuse for this conduct. We might have admired that high sense of religious duty, which constrained them to adopt the painful resolution of excluding so distinguished a member of the family from their society. But there is not one of them whose conduct will stand the test of the most ordinary scrutiny. They have long ceased to honour by their observance the rigid rules of the Hindoo creed. They have themselves eaten that which it is forbidden to eat; they have drunk that which it is forbidden to drink. In their own social intercourse they have been governed by their own love of indulgence, and not by the laws of the Hindoo ritual. Their bigotry is marked with the deeper stain of hypocrisy. They are fully aware that Dwarkenath has for many years disregarded the restrictions of Hindooism; that he has freely entered into the enjoyment of European society; and that on the principle they now make a shew of honoring, he was unfit for their society long before he embarked for England. Yet they urged no objection to the most unrestrained intercourse with him. They eat and drank at his table; they attended the poojas given at his house; they accepted invitations to the shraddus he performed. Yet, because he has now ventured to visit the countries of Europe, to enlarge the sphere of his observations, and see with his own eyes the triumphs of civilization, he is, forsooth, become too polluted for their immaculate society.

Infidelity of the Post Office.—During the last two or three months we have received repeated remonstrances relative to the non receipt of the copies of the Friend of India sent to England by the overland mail. To mention only one instance. Not a single copy of the Journal sent to Sir Edward Ryan, since his arrival in England, has ever reached him. We have assured our friends that the papers have been regularly despatched and paid for, and acknowledged by the Post Office in Calcutta. On applying to that department, we have been informed that a reference to the office records will prove, that in every instance they have been transmitted to Bombay. The charge of neglect therefore lies at the door either of the Bombay or the London Post Office. At first we supposed that this infidelity of the Post Office might have been confined to the despatch of our Journal, but within the last week we have found other parties who had sent home other journals make the same complaint. The copies they had transmitted never reached their destination. It is a subject of great importance to the public. We pay largely for the postage of our newspapers to Bombay, not less than three annas a cover, and we have a right to expect that those papers shall not be withheld from those to whom they are addressed. We have a right to know where this dereliction of duty occurs. If the papers are faithfully made up into packets at Bombay and committed to the Captains of Steamers;—and we have every reason to believe that this is the case—if a statement of the number and contents of each packet is sent to the London Post Office and compared with the deliveries, this neglect is clearly chargeable on the Post Office authorities in England; and it behoves this Government to make a representation on the subject to the proper authorities. Perhaps our Bombay contemporary of the Times will kindly inform us whether any such complaints have reached him regarding the non-delivery of the two or three thousand Summaries which he sends home.—Meanwhile we beg to assure all our friends who have honoured us by ordering this Journal to be sent to their friends at home, that their wishes have in every instance been punctually attended to; and that we hold Post Office receipts for every copy which has been sent.

Seaman's Friend Society.—We have been favored with the Fifteenth Report of this useful Institution, the object of which is to impart religious instruction to the numerous seamen in the Port. The means adopted for this end consist of stated services at the Bethel, or Floating Chapel, personal visits to the ships in the river, and conversation with the Sailors; the circulation of loan libraries, and the distribution of Bibles and Tracts. Mr. Chill, the agent of the Society has, it appears, faithfully prosecuted his arduous but too often unthankful duty, and during the last year visited 278 vessels, conversed with upwards of 3000 individuals, distributed 2200 English and Foreign Tracts, 93 English Bibles, 41 English, 9 French, 5 German, 1 Spanish, 1 Italian, 1 Dutch, 1 Arabic New Testament. He has also put in circulation twenty loan libraries. The number of hearers at the Bethel since the last Report has been four thousand six hundred and eleven, being an increase of one-third on the attendance of former years. The services on the Sabbath are conducted in turn by the Ministers of various denominations in Calcutta, and on Wednesday evening by Mr. Chill. The number of libraries in circulation at the present time is 27, and they comprise 869 volumes. Of these, eight have been placed on private vessels, and the remainder in vessels belonging to Government. The books ready for new libraries amount to 460; but the means of the Society in this department of labour are evidently far below, both their wishes, and the wants of the port. Mr. Chill, the agent, has also at the request of the Committee established a daily morning service at the Sailor's Home, but the attendance has been very discouraging; the highest number present on any occasion was twelve, but frequently not more than three attended, and on some occasions not a single individual. The subscriptions to the Institution during the eighteen months embraced by the Report, was a trifle above 3000 Rupees; its expenditure, 3520 Rs. leaving a balance against it of nearly 500 Rupees, for which the Society are suitors to public generosity.

The sphere of labour which belongs to such an Institution, is large and important. The number of English vessels which resort to this port, has been doubled within the last eight or ten years; the number of sailors who stand in need of that religious instruction which is the most effectual check on the excesses into which they plunge on being released from the restraints of a ship, has also been doubled since this Society was first established. Yet its means and opportunities are without increase, and its success is very disproportioned. By no class of men is the British and the Christian character more exposed to the contempt of the heathen than by the sailors in Calcutta. The most strenuous efforts are therefore needed, not merely with a view to their individual benefit, but for the common honour of religion. The Society we perceive have contemplated the establishment of a Naval Temperance Institution, the object of which is to board the officers and seamen in this port in an establishment from which liquor should be excluded. We scarcely think the plan, however benevolent, is likely to succeed. The funds required for its establishment and maintenance would be very large, more indeed than the members of the Society could expect to command, while another Institution existed in the city, differing in no respect from the proposed Home, except by the admission and temperate use of ardent spirits. The two Institutions would, we fear, be placed in a state of rivalry; and the weakest would go to the wall, or to the Insolvent Court. We are inclined to think that the Society would do better to confine its efforts within the present channel, and strive to enlarge its opportunities of doing good by endeavouring to bring as large a number as possible of the seamen under the influence of religious instruction. The great success which has attended the labors of Mr. Taylor in Boston, among the sailors of that port, proves clearly how much may be effected by strenuous and acceptable ministrations among them.

Sir Hugh Gough came up to Barrackpore on Sunday evening last, and on Monday morning reviewed the troops at the station. On coming up to the Bengal Volunteers just returned from service in China, the gallant General addressed them in the following language, which we are enabled to give from the recollection of an officer who had an opportunity of hearing him.

"Comrades in arms as brother soldiers, whose determined gallantry in the field has ably supported me, and nobly upheld the distinguished character of the Native army whilst under my command in China, I have been highly pleased with your orderly conduct in quarters, I have done all I could to bring you to the notice of the Sovereign of Great Britain, and I am sure the next Mail will bring an order for a remuneration of your services, and reward of your valour. Should my Sovereign call me into the field again, it would give me the highest gratification to have under my orders, either collectively or individually, any commissioned, non-commissioned officer or sepoy of the Bengal Volunteers." Then turning to Colonel Lloyd, he expressed "his sincere thanks to him for his able management of the Regiment, and to him and the officers for their support of him in every way, wishing them every happiness and success."

This address was explained to the sepoys in their own language by Col. Lloyd, the Commander of the Corps. His Excellency's address was highly gratifying to the feelings of the officers and men present, and they will long continue to remember with satisfaction, the opportunity they have enjoyed of distinguishing themselves in that novel and distant scene of operations; and the kind manner in which their services were appreciated by the General who led them on to victory.

WEEKLY EPITOME OF NEWS.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 16.

— The Governor General entered the city of Delhi, with military parade on the morning of Sunday, the 5th instant. He was accompanied by a large cortége of Native Chiefs; and a still greater number are on their way to the imperial city to make their obeisance to the Head of the British dynasty. The Rajah of Bhurtpore alone has a splendid retinue of 3000 men. The reports which were spread that his Lordship intended to interfere with the King of Delhi, have died away. It is a sufficient humiliation to that family that in its own metropolis, it is eclipsed by those who now occupy the imperial throne and wield the destinies of India.

— The Star announces the arrival in the river of thirty horses in a French ship. The speculation, according to our contemporary, has a promising appearance. Good French horses may be shipped from Marseilles to the Mauritius for 300 piastres or 600 Rupees; and of course they may be brought on to Calcutta for 700 Rs.

— The Delhi Gazette gives us intelligence from Lahore to the 20th January. Dost Mahomed was still at that Court. He had expressed his desire to depart for Affghanistan, but had been courteously detained by Shere Sing. Four Regiments of Infantry had been despatched to Peshawur, to strenghen General Avitabile, and the Sirdar Lena Sing has been placed at the head of them. The bridge of boats at Ferozepore had been broken up: and orders had been issued to draw all boats at night fall to the right bank of the river. Instructions were also issued to prepare cantonments for the Regiments in the immediate neighbourhood of Ferozepore.

— Mr. Clerihew, employed by the Steam Tug Association, lost his life by a melancholy accident on Monday. He was engaged in getting a boiler out of the Jess, when the tackle broke, and he fell into the boiler which was precipitated into the water. His body was subsequently found; and it appeared that he had been killed by a blow on the head.

— Mr. C. H. Cameron, a member of the Law Commission, has been called up to Council to supply the vacancy created by Mr. Amos's departure.

— We perceive that the Assam Company's Steamer, having returned to Calcutta, will be again despatched on the 28th instant. From this announcement we are led to suppose that her recent voyage has not been without profit. We wish the Secretary had furnished the public with some account of her performance on her first trip to Allahabad and back. She had only four small cargo boats in tow. What was the rate of her speed? Was it greater or less than that of the Government vessels? Eventually we must look to private enterprise for the occupation of this line of communication; and every fact which may serve to illustrate the subject will be found valuable.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 17.

— We do not know that our contemporaries have noticed the fact, that a recent sale of American reprints of English books, which had been advertised on behalf of a mercantile firm, was stopped, in obedience to the recent Act of Parliament. The Attorney General has, we know, delivered his opinion that any such sale would subject the vendor to the penalty of the Act. It is of some importance, that this opinion should be known; and we hope our contemporaries will procure and publish it. We learn that powers of Attorney have been received from booksellers in London, empowering their representatives here, to prosecute for any breach of the law in reference to books of which they hold the copy-right.

— The Hindostan Steamer, which left Madras on the 21st, at 9 P. M. reached Galle on the 24th. Her progress hitherto has been highly satisfactory: and there is every reason to hope that she will reach Suez in less than the month.

— Mr. Aylwin is delivering a series of lectures at the Mechanics' Institute on commerce. The second was delivered on Tuesday evening, to a very miserable and discouraging audience of thirty persons, which however is stated to be larger than the first audience.

— A letter from Allahabad, published in the Englishman, states that the crowds of pilgrims at that place at the last mela, was unusually large; and that the resort to this 'sacred' place for the purpose of bathing, has been annually increasing since the tax was abolished.

— The crowd of shipping in the river is very unusual for this season of the year. This arises from the return of the transports in such large numbers from China. Many of them after so long a service, stand in need of repairs, and all of them require examination. The owners of the docks will therefore reap as great a harvest as they did from the gale, which did no body any good but them.

— The report of fires during the past year in Calcutta is thus announced in the papers.—Pucka houses 6; Tiled houses, 828; Straw houses, 1560. From the great preponderance of straw huts it is manifest that the law passed some years ago prohibiting the use of thatch, or other combustible materials, is a dead letter.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 18.

— Some person, whose initials, real or fictitious, are J. E. R. is writing letters to Mr. George Thompson on the Government of India, and publishing them in the Hurkaru. The second letter which appears this day, proposes as "slight changes in the constitution of Government," that a knowledge of the languages of the natives be an indispensible qualification for the Governor Generalship of India—that is a knowledge of Persian, Oordoo, Assam, Bengalee, Ooriya, Burmese, Teloogoo, Tamil, Canarese, Malayalim, Guzeratee and Mahratta—that the selection be made from among those who have served in India; that the period of service be extended to twelve years; and last, not least, that a Native be appointed Legislative member of the Supreme Council. We think we shall give our vote for that eminent patriot, Baboo Dukhina Mookerjee.

— A letter from Meerut states, that Sir W. Nott had left that station for Lucknow.

— A Agra Ukhbar extraordinary, which reached us yesterday afternoon, announces the death of Maha Rajah Janockeejee Rao Scindia, at the age of 27. There is little prospect that the tranquillity of the state will be disturbed, but it is said that the musnud will remain vacant until the pleasure of the Governor General is known. There have been no female immolations.

— The entertainment given by the community of Calcutta to Sir Hugh Gough, at the Town Hall, on Thursday night, is described by those who were present as a very interesting affair. The aristocracy of Chowringhee and the aristocracy of the Cossitollah, met in the same hall to do honour to the hero, who has humbled the Dragon throne, and to eat, drink and dance.

— Among the Police reports there is a case headed "Cannibalism." It appears that a Portuguese woman brought up another for having—both being the worse for liquor—bitten off a part of her ear and swallowed it. The case was dismissed by the Magistrate.

— Mr. T. C. Robertson, late Governor of Agra, has arrived at Bombay, having gone down the Indus, and then embarked in a steamer at Kurrachee.

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 20.

— The Sans Souci Theatre is advertized for sale by auction.

— The Madras papers state, that at the public entertainment given by the Marquis of Tweeddale, at the Banquetting Room, in honour of our successes in China, the gentlemen of the bar were intentionally not invited;—also that no barrister has been asked to the private parties of the Governor. This is said to arise from their having omitted to attend His Lordship's first levee, and this omission is ascribed to the fact that the Court was setting at the time, and that they could not be in two places at the same time. We, of the fourth estate, are so liable to be mistaken on matters of fact, when those facts come to us at second hand, and still more so in drawing inferences, that we are disposed on this occasion, to question first the fact, and secondly the cause. A Governor would scarcely proclaim his own incompetence for the high station he occupies, by the indulgence of such narrow and contemptible feelings.

— The very important Act, relative to the sittings of the Sudder Court, of which the draft was published some months back, has just become law. The great inconvenience experienced by suitors, when one Judge differed from another, and a cause had to run the gauntlet, sometimes of the whole bench, will thus be avoided. When the Act was first proposed we explained the nature of the improvement, and need not therefore enlarge upon it again. It provides that in every case in which a Judge of the Sudder may differ in an appeal case from the decision of a lower Court, he shall call in two other Judges and the case shall be at once settled by the opinion of the majority.

— In consequence of the demise of the Raja of Gwalior, the Governor General has altered his plans and instead of going to Meerut, has determined to proceed forthwith to Agra, to be near at hand during the time when the question of the succession is settled. There is little difficulty and no opposition to his Lordship's will anticipated; the latter would be promptly met and overcome, by the large forces at Lord Ellenborough's disposal.

— A very important case was tried in the Supreme Court yesterday, a report of which we have taken from the Hurkaru. Mr. G. F. McClintock, on going to the Cape, applied to his Agents Messrs. Boyd and Co. for a credit to the extent of 2000£ on their London Correspondents Messrs. Small, Colquhoun and Co. which he obtained. He drew on them for this sum; and they drew for the 2000£ on Messrs. Boyd and Co. who at the time were possessed of funds belonging to Mr. McClintock to that extent. Boyd and Co. failed, and the bills were never paid, and the London House now commenced an action against that gentleman. A verdict was given in their favour, with liberty to the defendant to move for a verdict or to reduce the damages. It would appear from this decision, that any man taking a letter of credit from his Agents for money deposited with them is liable for the whole amount if they fail before the account is adjusted between them and with their correspondents.

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 21.

— The subscription to the Greenlaw Testimonial has reached 2000 Rupees, though the number of subscribers does not exceed 84.

— Mr. Dampier, as we learn from the Star, has found that there is no disorganization in the district of Jessore which is not to be attributed to an inefficient Magistracy and Police. His report is said to be very favourable to the Planters. He was allowed two months to make enquiries, and two weeks has been found sufficient to complete them. He recommends the appointment of two Assistant Magistrates. We sincerely hope that the recommendation will be attended to not only in the case of this district, but of all other districts; and that when two Assistants—to be stationed in the interior; not segregated at the Sudder station—are found to be insufficient twice that number will be appointed.

— A correspondent of the Englishman on Saturday alludes to the injustice of Government "boning" the 15 per cent. paid as deposit on the sale of lands, and forfeited by the non fulfilment of the contract. Our contemporary has an odd kind of article on the subject in his paper of this morning. The fact is that the deposit is five, not fifteen per cent.; that it belongs to Government by Reg. XLV. of 1793, the approaching repeal of which law has been announced four months. By the new law the Sudder Court will be empowered to make rules for the sale. Prig, must prick on the Sudder when the new law is passed.

— The letters and papers sent by the last Mail on the 10th instant from Calcutta as stated in the Englishman, was 4,938; but we want the number sent by the express to complete the account; to this number must be added 2,030 letters and 470 newspapers sent by the India steamer on the 10th instant.

— The Hurkaru has just published a General Order by the Governor General of India, which places his Lordship's character in a most favourable light. He has resolved generously to assist the officers who may be appointed to the new stations of Subathoo, Kussowlee, Umbala, Kotra and Nursingpore, and who may be obliged to erect bungalows, by allowing them to the extent of three years tentage, with interest at five per cent. The sum is to be repaid by a monthly deduction of this tentage. [We are obliged to exclude the order to make room for the Mail news; but will give it next week.]

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 22.

— Public entertainments are the order of the day, or rather of the night. Last week the community of Calcutta entertained Sir Hugh Gough. On the 20th Rustumjee Cowasjee, Esq gave a very splendid entertainment to Mr. H. T. Prinsep on the occasion of his approaching departure for Europe. On the same day, as it would appear, from the Star, H. M. 20th gave an entertainment to Sir Hugh Gough. On Tuesday evening, the Deputy Governor entertained Sir Hugh and the officers who have returned from the China Expedition at a Ball and Supper.

— A large meeting of the most respectable gentlemen in the Native community was held at the College Hall, when it was resolved to present an address to Mr. H. T. Prinsep, who quits the Supreme Council and India, on the 5th of next month, to embark for England in the Tenasserim steamer.

— The London Mail of the 6th January is just arrived, and we annex a precis of the most interesting intelligence.

OVERLAND MAIL.

The London Mail of the 6th of January reached Calcutta early yesterday morning. The Steamer bearing the Mail quitted Suez on the 23d of January.

Her Majesty and Prince Albert continued in the enjoyment of excellent health. It is said "in quarters whose information can be relied on that Her Majesty's accouchment will take place early in March."

Parliament was appointed to meet for the transaction of business on the 2d of February. The next Mail, if despatched on the 6th of February, will therefore bring us not only the Queen's speech, but the opening debate of the Session.

The most important intelligence brought by this opportunity, relates to the return of the Revenue for the quarter ending January the 5th. Notwithstanding the addition made to the revenue by the Property tax of two quarters, to the extent of 570,000*l*. there is a deficiency in the revenue of the past year of One Million Sterling. The quarter's revenue exhibits still more unfavourable appearances. The deficiency in the Customs is 581,000*l*.; in the Excise of 717,000*l*; in these two main branches of revenue, there is a deficiency of nearly 1,300,000*l*. The financial position of England is therefore any thing but gratifying. The calculations of Sir Robert Peel have not been realized, and some other system of taxation must be devised to meet this alarming deficiency; and some more extensive measures must be adopted to revive the prosperity of the country. It is confidently asserted by the Globe, that Sir Robert Peel intends to propose to Parliament a fixed duty on corn of 12*s*.; to be reduced to 6*s*. in favor of those countries which are disposed to adopt moderate tariffs in reference to England. The Standard strenuously denies that there is any such intention on the part of Ministers. On the other hand it is affirmed that the Member for Leeds having breakfasted with the Premier, was informed, that the Ministry saw the necessity of making farther concessions.

The amount of Bills drawn on India by the Court of Directors in the mouth ending January 5th, was 41,253*l*.

The Indian Mail of the 1st of December had not reached London on the 6th of January.

— Her Majesty has been pleased to confer a very extensive Brevet on the officers who have served in China and Affghanistan.

Lieut.-Col. Malcolm, C. B., left town late on the evening of the 4th with the China Treaty, the precise nature of which will not transpire before the meeting of Parliament.

The Precursor steamer is still lying in the East India Dock. It is understood that the sum of 40,000*l*. was offered for her by the Royal Mail Company, which was of course refused.

The obituary of the month is heavy. Among the deaths we find those of the Countess of Denbigh, Mr. Robert Haworth Peel, the brother of Sir Lawrence Peel, our Chief Justice, and first cousin to Sir Robert Peel.—Lord Gillies at the age of 80—Viscount Hill, one of the heroes of the Peninsular War, and late Commander-in-Chief, at the age of 71.—Sir S. Wethrall, who was many years ago on the Staff of the Indian army, aged 88—Archdeacon Wrangham, well-known for his poetry and the Edition of Plutarch, in his 74th year,—and Mr. Robert Haldane, who about forty years ago sold his estates in Scotland, with the intention of coming out to assist Dr. Carey in the evangelization of India, but was prevented coming by the Court of Directors.

We regret to state that private letters have been received in town, which fully confirm the distressing intelligence relating to the dangerous illness of his Excellency the Governor-General of Canada.

It appears that there has already been collected in the following places towards the sum of 50,000 which the Anti-corn law league are raising: Manchester, in two days upwards of 4,000*l*.; Liverpool, up to Monday last, 1,527*l*.; Nottingham, upwards of 1,300*l*.; Leeds, upwards of 1,000*l*.; Huddersfield, 1,220*l*.; Halifax, 73*l*.; Bradford (tea party), 425*l*.; Holmforth (tea-party), 100*l*.; Blackburn (tea-party), 600*l*.; Rochdale, 1,700*l*.; in all 12,752*l*. Thus, in ten towns, above one fourth of the estimated sum has already been secured.

There are now twelve new churches in the course of erection, or about to be commenced, in various parts of the metropolis.

A curious experiment is being made at the head of the chain pier, Brighton, that of raising fresh water from below the ocean by means of an Artesian well. It is intended to bore to the extent of 700 feet, at which depth the chalk formation will, it is expected, be penetrated, and fresh water obtained, which will be applied to the formation of a jet d'eau.

About 6 o'clock in the morning of 22d, a fire broke out in Liverpool in the tar and rosin works of Messrs. Platt and Son, at the south end of Liverpool. The loss has been estimated at from 70,000*l*. to 100,000*l*.

The Dublin Corporation, for some reason not clearly expressed, has declined to vote thanks to the heroes of China and Affghanistan; but at a recent meeting of the Limerick Corporation, Alderman Watson gave notice of a motion of thanks to the gallant officers, natives of Limerick, who distinguished themselves in China, namely—Sir Hugh Gough, Capt. Bourchier, and Maj. Sergeant and his son, 18th Royal Irish. Councillor N. Kelly suggested that, as Limerick had ever been distinguished by the gallantry of its ladies, the name of Lady Sale should be included. Alderman Watson said he would do so with great pleasure.

A monument has been raised to the memory of Mungo Park, in the old burying ground at Galashiels, the resting-place of the family.

The Caledonian Mercury states that the Government are firmly resolved not to yield to the demands of the majority of the Scotch Church, as expounded at the last General Assembly and at the recent Confocation.

The leading members of the late Convocation have commenced addressing their congregations from the pulpit on the approaching dissolution of the connection between Church and State, intimating their intention of leaving the Church if the grievances of which they complain be not speedily removed by the legislature, and appealing to their several flocks whether they would not follow them when the crisis arrived. Meetings are also held for devising as to the ways and means to uphold the new secession church of Scotland. A fund is expected to be realised by donations and yearly subscriptions from the wealthy of their supporters, and in order to reach the means of the poor, penny-a-week subscriptions are to be got up, the amount from which sources they anticipate will exceed 100,000*l*. In addition to this they count on a goodly sum to be derived from seat-rents in the new wooden churches to be built, all which sums after defraying the cost of erecting the churches, are to be massed together, and divided equally among the seceding clergy. This is a new working of the voluntary system, the popular preacher placed in a rich locality not being entitled to receive from the accumulated fund more than his less gifted, though not less zealous brother in the poorest district.

We have great pleasure in stating, that the marble remains of elder times redeemed from the ruins of Xanthus, have safely arrived in England. Of these interesting specimens of ancient Lycia, not less than a hundred and eighty tons have been transported hither by the Cambridge and deposited in the British Museum.—Literary Gazette.

The celebrated chemist Berzelius was nearly killed a few weeks ago, by the explosion of a retort in his laboratory at Stockholm. Fortunately, he escaped with some contusions.

The triumphal arch of Djemilah (Cuicullum), the most complete of the Roman monuments discovered by the French in Africa, is to be taken asunder stone by stone, and transported to Paris, where it is to be erected as it now stands, agreeably to a wish manifested by the Duke of Orleans during his expedition from Constantine to the Bibans or Iron-gates.

The great seal of England was affixed on the 31st December to the treaty recently ratified between this country and China, at the residence of the Lord Chancellor, in Great George-street, Hanover-square; after which it was transmitted to the War-office, for the purpose of being forwarded to the "Celestial" empire, under the care of Major Malcolm.

In compliance with the recommendation of the Governor General of India, it will be proposed to Parliament to grant to Sir Robert and Lady Sale, with the benefit of survivorship, an annual pension of 500*l*., as a special public recognition of signal merit.

We see announced for publication, "A Personal Narrative of the Campaigns in Affghanistan, Sinde, and Beloochistan, &c. detailed in a series of letters of the late Col. W. H. Dennie, C. B., Junior Lieut.-Colonel of Her Majesty's 13th Light Infantry, Aide-de-Camp to the Queen." Also, "Diary of a Prisoner in Affghanistan, with Notes of the Operations which gave rise to the evacuation of Cabul by the British Army, and of its disastrous retreat towards India, in January, 1842. By Lieut. Vincent Eyre, Bengal Artillery, late Deputy-Commissary of Ordnance at Cabul."

The authorities at the Horse Guards are anxious for the return from India during the present year of the 13th, 41st, 44th, 49th, and 55th.

TURKEY.

Light has at length broken in upon the nature of certain manœuvers of Russia at the court of Constantinople. The ambassador of that power has had an interview with the Sultan, and very grave matters indeed are on the tapis. The Czar sets himself up as protecter of Servia, and protests against the recent revolution in that country. The ratification by the Sultan of the nomination of the new regent has been severely blamed by the Russian government, and the Czar insists on maintaining all his rights of protectorate! After reminding the Porte that, by virtue of treaties, Russia was entitled to intervene by force of arms, the Czar proceeded to state that he trusted to the Sultan's wisdom for the adoption of such measures as might restore Servia to its former condition. But otherwise, he should submit the questions at issue to the wisdom of his allies, the Great Powers. The letter which was placed in the hands of the Sultan added, that Prince Lieven had been despatched to Belgrade for the purpose of making himself well acquainted with the whole of the facts, and that afterwards he would proceed to Constantinople, in the hope of adjusting the whole matter. In reply to this letter, the next day (26th Nov.) a diplomatic note was forwarded, which stated that the Porte had two motives in ratifying the nomination of the new regent:—first, to exercise an undeniable privilege as suzerain, which privilege was supported by Russia in the simultaneous deposition of Prince Ghika; and, secondly, to act in a strictly constitutional manner, by acknowledging the right vested by the charter in the Servian people of deposing their regent, and of electing another, in the same manner that the Wallachians were about to elect a successor to their late hospodar.

The great question now is, what part will Great Britain take in this European affair? Russian influence has been overthrown in Servia. This is a great point indeed. Is it to be re-established? We hope and pray not.—The Atlas.

SIXTH REPORT OF THE SERAMPORE HOSPITAL.

In submitting to the Public the sixth Report of their Institution, the Committee of Serampore Hospital cannot but deeply regret the loss they have sustained, by the departure to Europe of their able and disinterested co-adjutor J. O. Voigt, Esq. To him, in conjunction with the late Dr. Marshman, the Hospital may be said to have owed its origin; and to him it owed all its efficiency, until the failure of his own health, within these few months, put an end to his benevolent services. The Committee have been grieved to see him, whose skill, under the blessing of God, has restored life and strength to so many, sunk beyond the power of human recovery: but they fondly hope that the voyage on which he has proceeded will effect what no zeal or science could; and gladly do they follow him with this testimonial of their affectionate and grateful esteem.

On Dr. Voigt's relinquishment of his medical duties, both the Hospital and the community in Serampore generally, were happy in obtaining the services of W. Stevenson, Esq., whose eminent skill and assiduity, notwithstanding his residence on the other side of the River, have converted the loss sustained by Dr. Voigt's departure into one of personal friendship rather than of medical aid. Dr. Stevenson has kindly furnished the following medical Report of the Hospital for the past year; and its completeness and force render it unnecessary for the Committee to do more than append to it the financial statement of the Treasurer.

"It having fallen to my lot to draw up the Medical Report for the past year, of the Native Hospital at Serampore, after a connexion of only a very few months with it, I cannot but record my testimony to the very great utility of this humble Institution, and take the opportunity of drawing the attention of the community at large, and more particularly of the British residing in the vicinity of Serampore, to the benefits the poor from both sides of the River derive within its walls. In it, many who have not the means of procuring in sickness the aid of even a common Native Doctor, and who during the period of such visitation have not the means of obtaining even a scanty meal, here find a comfortable asylum. Medicine, food and blankets are provided for them, and many who would otherwise have perished, are again restored to health, to return to labour for their own support and that of the family dependent upon them. Many poor miserable wretches, travellers from all parts of the British Territories, houseless, pennyless, and in the last stages of disease, without friends, or any to give them even a mouthful of water, here find a resting place where their wants are provided for, their pains alleviated as far as possible, a place where they can at least die in peace and not by the road sides with jackals and parriah dogs for attendants, ready to tear them to pieces before the breath is fairly out of their bodies. Besides the in-door patients, the poor of Serampore and its vicinity are supplied with medicine daily on application at the Hospital; and, during the past year, Medicine has been thus dispensed to 1046 poor persons, of whom no less than 734 were from the surrounding British villages. It will be seen that the greater number of deaths occur under the head of Diarrhœa. These were generally poor creatures brought from the road sides and ditches by the Police, beyond the power of Medicine, but who had here their last sufferings much relieved. If the deaths from this cause are deducted from the total, only about 4½ per cent will remain, which, considering the class of patients treated, is very small indeed.

An Institution of this kind, is certainly deserving of public support, as no one, if an object of charity, whatever his caste or country may be, is refused admittance, and during the few months I have been attending the Hospital, poor travellers from Allahabad, Lucknow, and even from Delhi, have sought and obtained relief from it.

To Correspondents.

A Member of the Bible Society,—J. H. S. and Mr. Stainforth's letter, next week.

The following will be noticed at the earliest period:—The twenty-fourth Report of the Bengal Auxiliary Missionary Society; the Report of the Free School, Calcutta, and the Delhi Relief Society.

CONTEMPORARY SELECTIONS.

SMALL, COLQUHOUN AND CO. v. G. F. M'CLINTOCK.

The defendant in this case was a member of the Civil Service. Before his departure from the Cape, on sick leave in 1840, he applied to his agents Messrs. Boyd and Co. for a letter of credit, to the extent of £2,000 on their London correspondents, the plaintiffs in this action. A letter accordingly was given in the following terms:

Calcutta, 11th June, 1840.

DEAR SIR.—We request that due honor may be shewn to Mr. G. F. McClintock's drafts on you to the extent of £2,000 during his stay at the Cape of Good Hope, on sick leave, placing the same to his debit in account. We are, &c.

(Signed) BOYD AND CO."

MESSRS. SMALL, COLQUHOUN AND CO.

Under this letter of credit, Mr. McClintock, drew four bills of exchange on the plaintiffs for £500 each, which were duly accepted and paid by them. A correspondence took place between the plaintiffs and Messrs. Boyd and Co., respecting these bills, and after making applications to Boyd and Co. for remittances on Mr. McClintock's account, on finding that none were made, the plaintiffs drew on Boyd and Co. for the equivalent amount in rupees. In consequence, however, of Boyd and Co.'s failure, these bills drawn by Small, Colquhoun and Co. were never paid, and the plaintiffs applied to the defendant to reimburse them for the £2,000 paid by them for his use. The defendant objected, urging, that though his account was overdrawn at the time when the letter of credit was given he had subsequently paid Boyd and Co., a sufficient amount to cover the sum so drawn by him whilst at the Cape, and that the plaintiffs had never given any credit to him, but to the firm of Boyd and Co. The plaintiffs urged, that the credit was given to the defendant, and that the letter from Boyd and Co. was a mere introduction. The case came before the Court on admissions as to the facts.

Mr. Leith and Mr. Fulton were for the plaintiff.

Mr. Morton and Mr. Wylie for the defendant.

The Chief Justice said, that as the amount was appealable, and as some nice points arose out of the particular circumstances of the case, the court thought it right to state there were many facts, which might be urged as strong evidence on either side to shew to whom the credit was given. The court thought the whole must turn upon the letter of credit and not upon the subsequent correspondence, for here the terms of the credit had been reduced to writing. Those cases in which subsequent acts had been taken into consideration to assist the interpretation to be put upon the terms of the credit, were cases relating to the sale of goods, in which the guarantee was verbal. Here the letter of credit must be the guide, and he thought as the defendant had been cognizant of its terms before its transmission should any ambiguity arise upon it, that he was the person to suffer by the ambiguity rather than the plaintiffs who had acted upon it. The Court found a verdict for the plaintiffs with liberty reserved to the defendant to move for a verdict or to reduce the damage.

AKBAR KHAN'S NOTIFICATION.

We take the following amusing extract from a recent Mofussil letter :—

"By the way, did I ever tell you of Akbar Khan's 'Notification,' on his assuming the sovereignty of Caubul, after the flight of Shahpoora? He beats Lord Ellenborough hollow *in re*proclamation. The Sirdar's was somewhat to this effect : That Pollock Sahib had written to him (when the camp was at Jellalabad) to say that it was necessary for the sake of the British honor to re-capture Caubul : that he had no particular wish to renew hostilities, but that it was incumbent on him to march to the capital ; that if Akbar would agree to offer no effectual opposition, he (Pollock Saaib) would engage, on the part of the British Government, to evacuate Affghanistan, and to release Dost Mahomed Khan and other Affghans in exchange for the British captives. To this arrangement, Akbar says, that he consented, that the fight on the Huft Kotul was a planned affair to keep up appearances, and that he intentionally lost the battle. With regard to the release of the prisoners, Akbar further states, that Sala Mahomed acted under his orders ; and that he himself did not appear prominently in the transaction, lest there should be a suspicion of connivance between the British and Affghan leaders! Not so bad this for an Affghan chief—a pretty good specimen of Akbar's powers of diplomacy. He issued it directly after his return to Caubul—and I have no doubt there were many found fools enough to believe him."—Hurkaru, Feb. 1.

THE GOVERNOR GENERAL AT DELHI.

The Governor General having announced his determination of making his public entree into Delhi, on the morning of Sunday, the 5th inst., the necessary preparations were arranged, and shortly before sunrise the whole of the troops of the garrison (having been relieved from their respective guards and posts by the 10th Grenadiers for the occasion,) were drawn up in one continued line on the right side of the high road to Kurnaul, beyond the Sappers' Lines facing the race course. The Artillery with Light Field Battery, under Captain B. Brown on the right, the only Company of Sappers in Delhi next to them, commanded by Captain Reilly ; the 15th N. I., under Lieut. Col. Carnegy, and the 73d in charge of Oliver, Col. Swinhoe of that Regt. commanding the whole. There were several parties of European ladies and gentlemen, but many who would have been there on any other day, abstained from going in consequence of its being Sunday. The amount of the respectable population of the Native portion of the city, who went out to witness the entree, was unusually scanty. The morning was most beautiful,

Even Mr. Sol

So tifted out, so glorious,

Glittered like a beau in a new birth-day embroidery.

As the appointed hour drew near, the distant sounds of music announced the approach of the "Illustrious Garrison," and at a little after seven the head of the 35th Regt. of Light Infantry preceded by its band and the standards which had been captured in the different engagements at Jellalabad and since, reached the right of the line, and was received by the troops in succession with the honours decreed to them by the Governor-General. Colonel Monteath rode at the head of his distinguished regiment, which was followed by No. 6, Light Field Battery, each gun drawn by eight of the stout yaboos, who had done such good service in Affghanistan. It was commanded by Lieut. Dawes, and succeeded by Major Broadfoot and his little band of Goorkha Sappers, looking not a little proud of forming a portion of so distinguished a cortége. The troops had scarcely time to carry arms before they were called upon to pay the honours due to the Governor General himself, who, preceded by the body guard and mounted on a handsomely caparisoned elephant, dressed in a cocked hat and blue cloak, with a numerous train of Secretaries, Aides-de-Camp and of the Native nobility under the Delhi Agency,* who had been some distant out to meet his Lordship, presented a "spectacle" such as an Eastern procession alone can afford —— a train of princes swarmed

Like bees behind his car."

Most conspicuous, and immediately in rear of the Governor General, rode the Maharajah Hindoo Rao mounted on an enormous elephant, which by far over-topped his huge brethren, and in the line on the right of his Lordship, the howda, dress and trappings of Nawab Ahmed Allee Khan, for the time Wazeer to His Majesty of Delhi, commanded attention by their unusual splendour. The number of elephants in the procession, all more or less handsomely decked out, cannot have been less than seventy, and as they advanced in a line, with the Governor General a little in front and the rest diverging slightly from that point presented a most gorgeous coup d' œil. As the procession progressed his Lordship courteously touched his hat to every Officer and on arriving opposite the colors of the two regiments took it off, the united bands striking up "God save the Queen." On reaching the vicinity of his tents the Suwarree turned to the left and the Agent intimated to the Native Grandees that His Lordship dismissed them, but had some difficulty in making himself understood by some of them who thought they ought at least to see their Governor to the doors of his tents. The scene was altogether an imposing one, and we cannot better describe it than in the words of the renowned Doodle, from whom as well as from his companion in courtesy we have already pirated a few lines :—

"Sure such a day,
So renowned, so victorious,
Courtiers so gay,
And the mob so uproarious,
Nature seemed to wear an universal grin."

Hitherto, nothing very remarkable beyond the arrival of the Governor General and the numerous Regiments of all arms has occurred, but what with the Mohurrum and the "gathering," the whole city is in a constant state of excitement. As yet no military spectacle has been got up, but we suppose, now that the whole of the escort has arrived, something of the kind, if room can be found for it, will be attempted. His Lordship gives burra khannas every day, and we have heard intends to give a ball, that of this station takes place to-morrow evening at nine o'clock, in the house lately occupied by Mr. Lindsay, and we have been requested particularly to state that it has been the desire of the Stewards to invite all the visitors at the Station, but owing to the really great difficulty of finding out the names and residence of all, some omissions may have occurred, it is hoped, however, that all the Ladies and Gentlemen at the station will honour the subscribers with their company.

The Rajahs of Bhurtpore and Ulwar are to be received in Durbar by His Lordship to-day.

His Lordship has paid some visits to the city merely with a view of looking at the sites of the principal buildings, more particularly at those connected with the alterations and improvements said to be in contemplation. His quiet visits pass almost unnoticed by the Delhi people, who require a long train of half dressed riff-raff and tour-tours to excite them.

The King is, as yet, unmolested, and begins to think our version of the "turning out" the correct one.

A slight difference arose between the Rajah of Bhurtpoor and the authorities consequent on an intimation that his Highness should not enter the City, at which he was excessively annoyed and enquired the cause of the prohibition. There appearing however on subsequent enquiries no good reason against his visit, the point was conceded, and his Highness came yesterday evening with a retinue of some 3000 men, all splendidly attired, to see the imperial City. The drums of those celebrating the Mohurrum were hushed by common consent, a circumstance which gave unusual satisfaction to our distinguished visitor.

The two Light Battalions to march in, and the Buffs, to leave for Agra and Allahabad, this morning."—Delhi Gaz.

* The following is a list of the noblemen who attended on the occasion :—Nuhur Singh, Rajah of Pullumgurh ; Fyz-Alli-Khan, Nawab of Jujjur ; Bahadur Jung Khan of Bahadurghur ; Nawaub Hizam ood deen Hyder Khan, Jagheerdar ; Nawaubs Aumeen-ood-deen and Ze-rood-deen of Luharoo (brothers of the late Shumshooddeen of Ferozepore) ; Aga Hyder Nazir of the Palace troops ; Rajah Sohun Lall ; Husun Alee Khan, uncle to the Nawaub of Jujjur ; the Rajah of Shahpoor, (not one of whose 300 sowars mounted on miserable tatoos, had a decent bridle to boast of,) &c. &c.

DEATH OF THE RAJAH OF GWALIOR.

We have just received the annexed intelligence of the death of the Maharajah of Gwalior. From the well-known character of Colonel Speirs, the Resident, we have little apprehension of any serious disturbance ensuing, all necessary precautionary measures having no doubt been taken at the moment of the Rajah's decease. The event being one of some importance in a political point of view, we have lost no time in announcing it.

Gwalior, 8th February, 1843.

His Highness Maharaj Januckojee Rao Scindiah departed this life at 6 P. M. yesterday. Colonel Jacobs and Majors David Jacobs and Filose immediately at the announcement of His Highness' demise, very properly adopted the necessary precautions to prevent disturbance in the palace, as well as for the security of the "Gunga Jullee," (State Treasury,) at the suggestion of the Mama Sahib. Every Avenue round the Lushkur has been strongly guarded, and not a single soul allowed egress or ingress.

The body of the poor Maharaj was, this morning at sun-rise, after the usual Maharatta custom, committed to the flames, close to the Umtree of the late Maharaj Dowlut Rao. The Resident was at the palace last night at about 11 o'clock, and after giving every consolation to the young Baee and advice to the Mama Sahib, and Baboo Sitooleeah to look after state affairs and see that no disturbances took place, quitted the palace. The Musnud remains still vacant, and will continue so till orders come from the Governor General. The Chief of the Hoozoorias "Nunlajee" and about sixteen of his accomplices have been taken into custody.

There is a rumour that Dada Khasgeewallah and Sambahjee Angria are also to be taken up and confined. Every thing in the Lushkur is in great confusion and a breaking-out of the Troops is much apprehended, if proper measures be not speedily adopted.—Agra Ukhbar Extra, Feb. 10.

BATHING AT ALLAHABAD.

The Rajah of Rawah arrived at this place on the 29th instant, to bathe and present his offerings at the junction of the Ganges and Jumna, on the holy Amawus. He was saluted with fifteen guns on his arrival and departure. The pilgrims have been annually increasing in number since the Government withdrew the Pilgrim Tax, and this year, the crowd was immense. Multitudes for days covered every road leading to Allahabad and on the last day, the 30th, the rush to get across the Bridges of Boats was at one time nearly causing one of them to break, when the consequences would have been most serious. As it was, but for the humane exertions of the Magistrate, who was on the spot, the loss of life might have been great. No other consideration weighed with the Pilgrims than to arrive at the proper time fixed on by the Brahmins for the sacred dip. Pain, fatigue—life itself were as nothing in the scale. The Magistrate permitted them to pass for five hours over the Bridges without paying fare. All his arrangements for preserving the peace, as well as the safety of the people were excellent and crowned with complete success. The Mela has passed off without accident or serious offence and the people are now returning. There are yet fifteen days ere the Holy tide closes.—Agra Ukhbar, February 9.

CEYLON MEDICAL STUDENTS.

We have been put in possession of letters of a very recent date, announcing the safe arrival at Colombo, of the first batch of Ceylon Students educated in Calcutta, for the medical department of the colony to which they belong. They were sent down by the Council of Education, in an excellent ship, and every arrangement made to secure their comfort and safe conveyance. Their reception by the local authorities appears to have been most gratifying—and their advent hailed by all classes of the community as a boon to the country, deserving of special gratitude for the liberal and wise spirit, which provided them with the means of affording much benefit by their labours to their fellow-countrymen. We understand that they are very soon to be distributed to different stations upon the Island, and sincerely hope that the patronage of the Ceylon authorities will be bestowed impartially, and in such a manner as best to secure the interests of the service. Some of them have particularly distinguished themselves in special departments of medical science, and to those the greatest advantages should be given, with a view to hold out encouragement to their successors, to follow in their footsteps and earn the sure reward of ability and exertion.—Engl.

EUROPE.

RELIGIOUS.

THE CAMBRIDGE PUSEYITES.—The Cambridge Tracts for the Times (yclept The Ecclesiologist) are growing even worse than their defunct Oxford predecessors. What will our readers think of the following passage in the very last Number?

"And now that we are on this subject, it may be allowed us to say a few words on the state of another large district in the Metropolis. We doubt if there can be a more painful contemplation for the Churchman than the erection of that magnificent temple in St. George's Fields; not only that this beautiful building should be designed for a church not in our communion, but that our own incredible apathy should have left the enormous population, in the heart of which it is rising, so absolutely without churches or clergy, as to make it almost a subject of congratulation that the inhabitants may at last obtain access to the Holy Sacraments, though at other Fonts and other Altars. In strange and fearful contrast to the northern bank of the Thames, we believe that the only effort made of late years, in this most neglected part of the diocese of Winchester, to remove overwhelming spiritual destitution, has been the licensing of two small, inconvenient, and unecclesiastical conventicles as pue-rented Episcopal chapels! When we think, that, in a few months, in the midst of this spiritual desert, there will be open to all, even the poorest, without the odious intrusion of pues or the yoke of pue-rents, a church such as St. George's, with an active and numerous clergy, continual services, and a solemn ceremonial, we are constrained to say that we tremble, as Churchmen, for the consequences."

The parish of Lambeth, although in the diocese of Winchester, is more peculiarly under the charge of the Archbishop, whose Palace is situated in it, who is the patron of the living, and whose former Chaplain, Dr. D'Oyly, is the incumbent. For the Bishop of Winchester to show any peculiar activity in this portion of his diocese, would certainly be regarded as disrespectful to the Primate.

But, in the first place, the southern bank never was in so destitute a state as the northern. The parish of Stepney, with some 80,000 inhabitants, had, we believe, some ten years since, only one church. The parish of Lambeth, with about the same population, had four.

But let us look at "the southern bank of the Thames!"

The churches either already consecrated, or in progress, are as follows:—

Lambeth ..............St. Mary's.
Do. ..................Holy Trinity.
Do. ..................St. Michael's.
Battersea ............St. George's.
Bermondsey ..........St. James's.
Clapham ..............St. James's.
Do. ..................(building.)
Camberwell ..........Christ Church.
Do. ..................(building.)
Peckham ..............Mary Magdalen.
Rotherhithe ..........Holy Trinity.
Do. ..................Christ Church.
Do. ..................All Saints.
Southwark ............St. Peter's.
Do. ..................St. Saviour's.
Do. ..................St. George's.

These sixteen churches will seat about twenty-two thousand persons, and they have all been consecrated within the last ten or twelve years, on the Southern bank of the Thames, and by the present Bishop. And in the face of these notorious facts (for sixteen large new churches cannot easily be hidden), the Ecclesiologist talks of nothing having been done, save the licensing of two small conventicles as Episcopal chapels. Are not such representations as these quite outrageous?

But we pass to another and a yet more fearful part of the subject. This Ecclesiologist, in the forefront of which the patronage of the Bishops of Chester and Winchester is paraded, holds the erection of a great mass-house "almost a matter for congratulation." And why? Not that the poor may have the Gospel preached unto them, for even the Ecclesiologist cannot venture to hope that this will be the case; nor that they may have opportunity for the worship of God; for this will not be the worship carried on in that place. No, but the inhabitants "may at last obtain access to the Holy Sacraments,—though at other Fonts and at other Altars."

Now, this is sheer hypocrisy. The writer of the paper in the Ecclesiologist speaks of having seen the mass-house in question. He knows, therefore, that, instead of being placed where no other fonts or altars (as he calls them) are to be found, it is within the sight, and within the hearing of the bells, of several churches and chapels of the Establishment. It is within sight, for instance, of Saint John's, Waterloo-Bridge-road; of the Asylum Chapel, of the Philanthropic Chapel, and of one or two others.

How, then, can it be said that "the inhabitants may, at last, obtain access to the Holy Sacraments?" There may have been a want of accommodation for hearing the word, or for conveniently worshipping God; but means of access to the Sacraments were not wanting. Did the Ecclesiologist ever hear an inhabitant of St. George's-fields who could find neither Baptism nor the Lord's Supper within his reach? No; the whole thing is a miserable pretext. The Ecclesiologist feels a secret joy at the uprising of Romish Churches and Cathedrals, and only wants courage to express his feelings frankly and honestly.—Record.

APOSTOLIC SUCCESSION.—In the Preface to the second portion of Mr. Froude's remains, Messrs. Keble and Newman thus enunciate this doctrine:—

"That, before Jesus Christ left the world, he breathed the Holy Spirit into his apostles, giving them the power of transmitting this precious gift to others by prayer and the imposition of hands: that the apostles did so transmit it to others, and they again to others, and that IN THIS WAY it has been preserved in the world to the present day."

Hence "to dispense with Episcopal ordination is to be regarded not as a breach of order merely, or a deviation from Apostolical precedent, but as a surrender of the Christian priesthood; a rejection of all the powers which Christ instituted Episcopacy to perpetuate; and the attempt to substitute any other form of ordination for it, or to seek communion with Christ through any non-Episcopal association, is to be regarded, not as a schism merely, but as an IMPOSSIBILITY."

Such is the nature of the position taken. "The gift of the Holy Ghost" has been preserved in the world solely by means of the Episcopal succession; to seek communion with Christ" by any other channel is to attempt an "impossibility."

It is, perhaps, hardly possible for any proposition to be more broadly and palpably oppose to historic truth.

1. That "the gift of the Holy Ghost" was handed down from bishop to bishop, and only thus preserved in the world: Why, how is this reconcileable with the notorious fact that Rome herself, viewed, throughout the West, as the "mother and mistress of all Churches," was ruled during the ninth, tenth, and eleventh centuries by a set of men whom Cardinal Baronius calls "monsters of wickedness? And Genebrard tells us, that "for nearly a hundred and fifty years, about fifty Popes, from John VIII. to Leo. IX, deserted wholly the virtue of their predecessors, being apostatic rather than apostolic."

But was this confined to the middle age? Far from it. Did we not quote, only a week or two back, a sentence or two from the Times newspaper, to the following effect?

"Dr. Phillpotts seems to claim some mysterious dominion, which it is impious to resist, over the minds and consciences of the clergy of the diocese of Exeter, because a layman, a Minister of the day, has made him its Bishop. Was there any miraculous effusion of the Holy Spirit upon two such worldlings as I could name, because Pitt gave each of them for secular services the richest bishoprics in the kingdom? the progeny of one of whom is as infamously wasting the revenues of the Church in gaming, as they were shamelessly heaped upon him by his unprincipled father."

And is it not matter of general notoriety, that one of the parties alluded to in the last clause of this paragraph, a clergyman and a cathedral dignitary, was a defaulter at the last Epsom races to the amount of some 3,000*l.* or 4,000*l.*! We touch not upon private scandal; we speak merely of what has already appeared in half the newspapers in London.

So much, then, of "the gift of the Holy Ghost" being thus transmitted, and in no other way preserved among mankind.

2. But now of facts of an exactly opposite character.

About a century since there lived an honest oilman in London, who left behind him an orphan of such promise, that a Noble Lady offered him an University education for the Church, with her patronage afterwards. This offer, which set before him a certain provision for life, the youth declined, casting in his lot with the Independent Dissenters, among whom he lived and died, the minister of one of their meeting-houses in a country town.

He left behind him a little volume, entitled, The Rise and Progress of Religion in the Soul, of which it is but moderate praise to say, that it has been the means of conferring "the gift of the Holy Ghost" on more souls than any bishop since the apostles' times can hope to welcome in heaven as his spiritual children.

Just fifty years after, a copy of this little book fell into the hands of a young gentleman of gay and worldly habits, immersed in pleasure and public business, and who, though baptized and confirmed in the Church, and educated at one of our Universities, was an utter stranger to the very first rudiments of spiritual religion. It was read, and thought over, and, in his case, as in thousands of others, it was made the means of changing his heart. He became "a new man;" he received "the gift of the Holy Ghost:" and the medium by which this entire change was effected, was that little volume, the work of a Dissenting minister,—The Rise and Progress of Religion in the Soul."

But the change became manifest by its fruits. The young gentleman himself, though only a layman, felt inwardly moved to become a teacher of religion. He writes and publishes a book, called, A Practical View of Christianity,—of which it may perhaps be said with truth, that the good wrought by it emulated that done by the volume to which its author owed his conversion.

We pass on a few more years, and we behold a volatile young clergyman, who has just taken orders, without any just or serious views of his responsibilities, and without any personal knowledge of that Christianity which he has undertaken to teach. A copy of the Practical View of Christianity is put into his hand. He opens it; is arrested by the power of the Holy Spirit; the night passes on, but he is unable to lay down the book until its perusal is completed; and he rises up a changed man. And the fruits of this change, even if we only think of what has already past, have probably exceeded either of the former. But when we add together the three works, The Rise and Progress of Religion in the Soul, The Practical View of Christianity, and The Annals of the Poor, and contemplate their united effects on the Church of Christ,—not in England only, nor merely in Europe, but throughout the world,—how do these squabbles about "apostolical succession" fade into insignificance, or only excite a feeling of indignation, that men's minds should be drawn aside from realities, to dispute about external forms and points of order.

When we trace up the Annals of the Poor to its providential cause, and find it to spring out of the Practical View of Christianity; and then follow that work upwards to its source, the Rise and Progress of Religion in the Soul, and find its author a Dissenting minister, we call to mind from whom "all holy desires, all good counsels, and all just works do proceed," and we see, in the evidence of undeniable fact, that it is not true that "the gift of the Holy Ghost" is limited, as Messrs Keble and Newman would teach us, to any external lineage of so-called apostolical succession.—Record.

CASE OF THE REV. MR. DRUMMOND.—A considerable sensation has been caused in the religious world, by the resignation of the Rev. Mr. Drummond, clergyman of the Trinity Episcopal Chapel, which we announced in our last. The correspondence which passed betwixt the Right Rev. Bishop Terrot and the Rev. Gentleman on the occasion, has been laid before the public, and at once exhibits the cause of this secession and of the schism which threatens to ensue. The Rev. Mr. Drummond has been in the habit of holding private social prayer-meetings, and giving weekly expository lectures, at which, instead of using the liturgy of the Church, the prayers were extempore. Such meetings the Bishop considered as falling under the condemnation of the 28th canon of the Scottish Episcopal Church on the uniformity to be observed in public worship, which canon decrees, "That, if any clergyman shall officiate or preach in any place, publicly, without using the Liturgy at all, he shall, for the first offence, be admonished by the Bishop." Mr. Drummond, on the other hand, differed as to the interpretation of this canon, and asserted, that he considered these meetings as private or congregational: "First, because they are privately announced, that is, to the congregation alone; and, secondly, the room in which they are held is, for the time, my own private room." The Bishop, however, could not view those meetings in this light, for he comes to the following firm and decided conclusion:—"My conviction that your ministrations in the Clydestreet Hall are illegal, is founded on the conviction that they are public, and that they are officiating." In these circumstances, Mr. Drummond, remaining conscientiously stedfast in his opinions that these meetings are essential to the fulfilment of ministerial obligation, resolved to resign his charge instead of bringing the question before the Episcopal Synod, from whence an appeal lies to the College of Bishops. Mr. Drummond, in the course of the correspondence, also states, that the meetings to which the Bishop has thus taken exception, have been uniformly held by him during the ten years of his ministry in this city and previously, while he had the cure of a parish in the county of Gloucester; that the same were, in the last instance, approved by Dr. Gray, the Bishop of Bristol, and in the first by Bishop Walker, of Edinburgh, as well as by other Episcopal clergymen; "that, in fact," adds the Rev. Gentleman, "there is not a diocese in England in which such meetings do not exist—I believe there is not one Bishop of that Church who has thought it right to prohibit them, while several are known warmly to recommend them."—Caledonian Mercury

CONFESSIONS TO CLERGYMEN.—The Standard of Thursday contains the following remarks as to whether confessions made in contemplation of death to clergymen ought to be privileged. The question is of great practical importance in reference to a fearful confession which has been made by a female in the Forest of Dean:—"The doctrine of the Scripture is clear, that a public confession before all his brethren ('one to another') is the only confession upon which the sinner can place any dependance as a means of grace, and thus in a Scripture view a private confession is no confession at all. But if the law once comes to sanction private confessions by its protection, the public confession will rarely, if ever, be made. Of this the practice of Roman Catholics affords painfully frequent proof. As regards the clergy, we do not understand how a minister of religion can be justified in receiving a confession, involving proof of wrongs offered to the State or to individuals, without impressing upon the penitent the awful consequences of withholding these proofs. For ourselves we should very much dislike to be the depositaries of secrets of the kind; for we cannot help thinking that he who conceals the evidence by which a crime may be punished or prevented, or a just right asserted against a wrong doer, is very much in the condition of a partaker of other men's sins. The Church of England has gone on very well for three centuries without auricular confession; but let the law privilege such confessions, and we must naturally expect that the system of compulsory periodical confessions made in private will creep into our Church, as it crept into the Church of Rome. After all, what evil is said to result from the actual state of the law? A criminal withholds from the clergyman who attends him some piece of evidence (for it is about evidence only we are concerned) necessary for the administration of justice: is the disposition which permits the desire to withhold this piece of evidence that truly religious disposition which the laws ought to respect? or, is it the disposition in which a clergyman can safely leave a penitent? We think not; and therefore upon every ground we maintain the advantage of that state of the law which gives the clergyman a motive to urge his penitent to a proper frame of mind."—Record.

THE KINGDOM OF ASHANTI.—The adventurous journey of the Rev. T B. Freeman, Wesleyan missionary, to Kumasi or Coomassie, the capital of Ashanti, in 1839, must be well remembered; as well as his subsequent return to England for supplies with which to revisit Kumasi with a view to establish a Christian mission among that benighted and sanguinary people. Mr. Freeman's proposal excited the liveliest interest among the Wesleyan body; and a mission to Ashanti was resolved on. This important undertaking was conducted with their usual spirit A band of missionaries, some destined for the Cape Coast Mission, some to penetrate into the interior, was collected, and a considerable fund raised for their support. Valuable presents, amongst which was a very handsome carriage, were selected for the King and Chiefs of Ashanti. Mr. Freeman was likewise the bearer of presents from Her Majesty to the West-African monarch. Thus provided, the party sailed for Cape Coast at the close of 1840; where they arrived in due course On the 6th of November, 1841, Mr. Freeman set out for Kumasi, accompanied by the two Ashanti Princes, who had been educated in this country, and who had gone out in the Niger expedition; also by Mr. Henry Smith, of Cape Coast; the Rev. Robert Brooking (Wesleyan missionary); an interpreter; some servants; about 150 carriers from the coast; 160 Ashanti carriers; and a sergeant and six soldiers from the fort. The distance from Cape Coast Castle to Kumasi is about 200 miles, through the forests of Guinea; and although the King had caused the paths to be cleared for the missionary party, yet the journey was one of great difficulty. Often were they obliged to cut their way through the thick jungle, and to have recourse to various means in order to transport the carriage across rivers and deep ravines. Mr. Freeman had to travel on foot for not less than 150 miles. Happily, however, every peril was surmounted; and on the 13th of December the party entered the capital of Ashanti. There, according to the King's promise, the missionaries were favourably received, and a house was appointed for their residence along with their companions, the Ashanti Princes. The intelligence from Kumasi is now brought down to a recent date: at which time a school for Christian instruction had been established; the worship of the true God had been publicly commenced, and was frequently attended by natives of high consideration; and a large and convenient mission-house was in course of building. Mr. Freeman had returned to the Coast; leaving his missionary brethren, Messrs. Brooking and Rowland, permanently settled at Kumasi. A letter, dated Cape Coast Castle, 17th April says: "All things are going on admirably well in Kumasi. Mr. Brooking writes full of spirits, and big with hopes of abundant success." And Mr. Freeman himself, in a letter to the General Secretaries of the Wesleyan Missionary Society, dated Cape Coast Castle, 9th May, remarks: "I have seen one of the most powerful monarchs of degraded Africa becoming a nursing father to the infant Church!" We wish our limits allowed of our giving the details of this very interesting missionary movement, which appears to have been planned with sound judgment and executed with consummate prudence. An impression, most favourable to Christianity, has manifestly been made upon the King, and also upon the heir-apparent to the throne and several of the principal men in the capital. The results may be most important. Not only may Christianity eventually supersede one of the most horrid and bloody systems of superstition on the face of the earth; but—as a very secondary consideration, certainly—a large commercial intercourse between this country and the populous kingdom of Ashanti may reasonably be expected to follow in the train of the higher benefit.—Record.

ROME.—ACADEMY OF THE CATHOLIC RELIGION.—SITTING OF SEPTEMBER 1.—The Rev. Father J. Peronne, of the Society of Jesus, of Professor of Theology at the Roman College, and Censor of the Academy, read a dissertation full of interest, and distinguished by scientific knowledge, entitled, "Reflections on the method introduced into Catholic Theology, by George Hermes, and on some particular errors in theology of the same professor." After remarking that in science generally the good or evil character of the result to which inquiry after truth will lead, depends on the method in which scientific investigations have been conducted, the eminent academician observed, that this might be most justly affirmed of theological studies, the nature of which is so sublime, the dangers that beset them so many and so perfidious. In support of this view he cited the example of the celebrated Abelard, who, in the twelfth century, notwithstanding the respect which he professed for the doctrinal authority of the Church, and without any intention to subvert its teaching, was nevertheless led into Rationalism and the most grave errors by the method which he had embraced in studying theology. The academician then proceeded to speak of George Hermes, who, in our days, had proposed to himself not to destroy the foundation of the Catholic religion, but to consolidate it by establishing an invincible demonstration of the truth of Christianity in general, and of Catholicism in particular; but having entangled himself in the meshes of Kant, had become attached to a method, both in Evangelical and dogmatic demonstration, which conducted him not only from the path of doctrine, but to results altogether contrary to doctrine. To throw light on this subject, the learned academician then established the following three propositions:—Hermes, in virtue of the method adopted and followed too faithfully by him, first, fixes, as the foundation of his demonstration of Christianity and Catholicism, a philosophic system that conducts to scepticism; second, by the effect of this principle, from which he reasons in demonstrating Christianity and Catholicism, he interdicts all means drawn from the historical proofs of the truth of the faith; third, he throws himself into a theological system that confuses and contradicts the most essential doctrines of Catholic theology. Each of these positions was developed with admirable order, with elegance of style, and power of logic. The numerous arguments were fortified by irrefragable evidence, extracted from the work themselves of Hermes; thus the dissertation left no doubt of any sort. The words of the Reverend Father were received with unanimous applause by their Eminences, the Cardinals Pedicini, Marchi, Ostini, Polidori, Orioli, Bianchi, Ferretti, Bernetti, and Gazzoli, and an assembly both select and numerous. —Diario di Roma.

RELIGION IN RUSSIA.—The Leipsic Gazette of the 28th ult publishes a correspondence from the frontiers of Russia, stating, that, notwithstanding the losses sustained by the Roman Catholic Church in Russia, in consequence of the persecutions of the Government, it still had hopes of holding its grounds. The Emperor of Russia, not satisfied with persecuting the Roman Catholics, had induced the Sultan to issue firmans against them. By one firman the Christians of the Greek Church are authorised to close all Roman Catholic churches and schools wherever the Catholics endeavoured to make proselytes. By another firman, the Greeks alone are authorised to guard our Saviour's tomb and the Church of Bethlehem; thus the Catholics are excluded from those churches. Russia equally attacks both the Protestant and Catholic churches. Although the treaty of peace concluded at Nystaed the 10th of September, 1721, secured full enjoyment of their religion to the Protestants of the provinces of the Baltic, where the members of the Greek Church are a mere coterie, the children of Protestants are, nevertheless, compelled to be educated in the religion of the Greek Church.—Pat.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE PRINCESS AUGUSTA.—It is expected that the marriage of her Royal Highness the Princess Augusta of Cambridge with his Royal Highness the Hereditary Grand Duke of Mecklenburgh Strelitz will be solemnized very shortly. Her Majesty's consent to the nuptials having been obtained in due form at the Privy Council on Wednesday, the necessary state document has had the great seal of England attached to it.—Record.

TESTIMONIAL TO LORD MORPETH.—At a numerous meeting of gentlemen who have interested themselves in this public tribute to the Noble Lord, held at Wakefield last week, it was determined that the presentation should take place early in the ensuing year, at the Earl of Carlisle's seat, Castle Howard. The subscriptions amount to 4 000*l*.—Pat.

LORD CARDIGAN has again got himself into a mess at the Horse Guards, one of the junior officers of his regiment having made a complaint of him to the Commander-in Chief. We shall see whether the hero of Waterloo will treat a lord with as much deference as did his predecessor, Lord Hill. At all events, it is strange that this is the first intimation which the public will receive of this new screw being loose in the Cardigan hussars.—Hants Independent.

MONUMENT TO GEORGE BENNET, ESQ.—The friends of our late respected townsman have erected a monument, by subscription, to his memory, at the Sheffield Cemetery. It is a square structure, and is situate nearly opposite the chapel; its height from summit to base being about ten feet. In its upper part is a marble slab, about four feet in height, on which is exhibited, in basso relievo, a figure of the deceased, reclining on a terrestrial globe, with a book in his hand, and an idol of Tahiti broken at his feet. Beneath this, is another marble bust, with the following inscription:—"This Monument was erected by subscription in memory of George Bennet, Esq., who was born at Sheffield, Dec. 13, 1776, and died, November 13, 1841, at Hackney, where he lies interred." Several verses, composed by James Montgomery, Esq., are engraven on the other sides of the monument. The structure is exquisite, both in design and execution, and reflects great credit on the ingenuity and experience of our townsman, Mr. Edwin Smith, sculptor.—Sheffield Independent.

FUNERAL OF ALLAN CUNNINGHAM.—On Friday the remains of the above lamented author and artist were removed from this late residence, in Lower Belgrave-place, to the general Cemetery, in the Harrow-road. The funeral was conducted in a very private manner, and consisted of a hearse and two mourning coaches. In the first carriage were the youngest son of the deceased, Mr. Peter Cunningham (his brother), Dr. Tweedie, and Archibald Hastie, Esq., M. P.; in the second rode Mr. Lockhart, Mr. Walkinshaw, Mr. Martin, and Mr. John Murray, the bookseller of Albemarle street. The deceased has left three other sons, all of whom are at present residing in India.—Record.

FILIAL PIETY.—On the 29th ult., the creditors of a firm, (Mr. T. Nash,) that failed in Chesham, nearly thirty years since, paying 3s. 4d. in the pound, were summoned together by Messrs. T W. and J. Nash, sons of the above, when each one received the remaining 16s. 8d. We hear that upwards of 1,000*l*. was paid away that day. One creditor received upwards of 3·0*l*. We hope this will stimulate others to "go and do likewise."—Aylesbury News.

A LONG LIVED SURGEON.—The Journal de Lot et Garonne announces the death of M Morange, surgeon at Tregimont, canton of Porte Sainte Marie, on the 28th ult., in the 117th year of his age. It is added, that "this venerable centenary was, up to his last moments, in full possession of all his faculties. By his death, the commune has lost a zealous councillor and a skilful surgeon."—Pat.

GUIZOT.—Whilst speaking of M. Guizot, I must no omit to make you at least acquainted with the title of a pamphlet that has just appeared with reference to him, as it will suffice to show you what the grievances are which the Opposition bring against him, and the means they employ to injure this great politician. The pamphlet is entitled, Histoire peu Française de Lord Guizot, Ministre des Etrangers en France. It is useless, however, to joke now, for happily ridicule is no longer sufficient to overthrow a man. M. Guizot's has proved the only Ministry since 1830 that has lasted two years, and which at the end of that period finds itself still as firmly established in power as at first.—Record.

EDINBURGH UNIVERSITY.—On Tuesday the winter course of the University was opened by Principal Lee with the usual introductory address. The hall was densely crowded, and among others present we observed Professors Sir H. Bishop, Sir G. Baiingall, Brunton, Welsh, Wilson, Dunbar, Pillans, Bell, Christison, Thompson, Graham, Traill, Munro, &c. The number of students present was very great. The Reverend Principal referred to the facilities now afforded for study compared with those of former days, and pronounced a high eulogium upon several of the eminent individuals who had sprung from the University, particularly Dr. S. Brown, Leyden, Horner, Stewart, Cockburn, and Brougham whom few could equal, and hardly any surpass, in scientific and intellectual attainments. At the conclusion of his address, the Very Reverend Principal referred to the numerous changes that had taken place in the chairs of the University, either by resignations or death, since they last separated, and pathetically alluded to the death of Sir Charles Bell—a man whose talents and attainments, and especially whose kindness as a friend, rendered him universally lamented; while to him (Principal Lee), the loss was almost irreparable.—Record.

OPENING OF QUEEN'S COLLEGE FOR THE EDUCATION OF LADIES IN GLASGOW.—The formal opening of Queen's College, for the education of ladies, took place on Friday at two o'clock, in the Assembly Rooms, Sir James Campbell, Lord Provost, in the chair. The large hall of the Assembly Rooms was filled to overflowing by a highly respectable company, almost entirely composed of ladies, the gentlemen present being chiefly accommodated on the platform. Among the latter were the Rev. Dr. Hill, Professor of Theology in the University; Rev. Dr. Fleming, College; Rev. Dr. King, Greyfriars; Rev. Dr. Heugh, Rev. Mr. Rose, Rev. Mr. Hunter, Rev. Dr. Symington; Professors Penney, Wilson, Easton, &c., of the Andersonian University; Drs. Weir, Baillie, Leadbetter, Convener Ure, Andrew Rankine, Esq., James M'Lellan. Esq., James Simpson, Esq., from Edinburgh, Dr. Gibson, William Church, Esq., John Loudoun, Esq.; Messrs. Greig and Nelson, Western Academy; Mr. D'Orsey; and numerous other gentlemen interested in the cause of education. Dr. Penney addressed the meeting on the advantages and pleasures of knowledge, and the importance of the present Institution. He concluded by remarking:—Glasgow has ever been celebrated for the intelligence of its citizens; it has numbered among them men of the highest intellectual and moral attainments—nay, the very foremost in literature, science, and art; and I would ask the simple question, why the ladies of Glasgow should not be equally eminent? Every effort, every institution, which endeavours to promote the attainment of this object, which strives to correct and dispel the prejudices attached to female education, which affords the opportunity of acquiring under one roof, knowledge in all its important, useful, and ornamental departments, is indeed worthy of consideration, worthy of encouragement, and worthy of congratulation. (Cheers.)—Scotsman.

A CLERGYMAN ON FIRE IN THE PULPIT.—As the Rev. William Bathurst was delivering his customary Wednesday evening lecture at St. Giles's Church, Oxford, his bands, by some means, managed to get caught in the flame of the candle lighted at the side of the pulpit. Immediately, to the great consternation of the congregation, his face was enveloped in flames. Many persons rose simultaneously from their seats, to offer their assistance, on seeing the imminent peril in which the Reverend Gentleman was placed. Fortunately, however, he had the presence of mind to envelope his face in the velvet hangings of the pulpit, which immediately had the effect of extinguishing the flames, not, however, till his neckcloth had also caught fire; and we regret excessively to say, that his face was dreadfully burnt. Prompt assistance was given, and the Reverend Gentleman conveyed out of the church. Medical aid was instantly procured; but we regret to say, that, although his burns are not of a very serious nature, yet they are sufficiently so to be productive of inconvenience for some time to come. The sensation produced by this unhappy occurrence was extreme; several of the congregation fainted; and shrieks were heard in all parts of the church. Although evidently suffering acutely, the Reverend Gentleman bore his calamity heroically.—Pat.

The first wood pavement that was put down in London, at the east end of Oxford-street, four years since, is now being reversed and relaid, and causes much surprise by its great durability; many of the blocks not being reduced half an inch of their original length, which was one foot, though exposed to all the traffic of Oxford-street.—Record.

TRIAL BY JURY.—Sir Francis Burdett, although he does not now attend the dinners to celebrate the triumph of "Trial by Jury," and toast the memory of Horne Tooke, Hardy, &c., allowed Hardy a pension from the time of his trial to his death, and he still generously continues a pension of 50*l.* per annum to Hardy's widowed sister. It is paid regularly, is her only means of support, and furnishes the old lady with a neat cottage, and every comfort, in her native place near Falkirk, Stirlingshire.—Ibid.

RAILWAYS VERSUS CANALS.—As an instance of the extraordinary effects which railways have had in causing a depreciation of canal property, particularly in the Yorkshire and Lancashire canals, a Correspondent mentions, that, about two years ago, the shares in the Rochdale Canal were worth about 150*l.* each; but that, since the opening of the Manchester and Leeds Railway, owing to the necessary reduction of the tolls arising from the competition, the dividends have been so much reduced, that the shares now fetch barely 40*l.* each. Some two or three years ago, the shares of the Calder and Hebble Canal Navigation sold at the rate of 500 guineas each; but, from the same causes, they are freely offered at 180*l.*; being, in each case, a reduction of about 70 per cent.—Liverpool Chronicle.

The Times publishes a record of an astounding fact, that twelve of our best railways can now be purchased for six millions, which cost twelve millions.—Record.

One fact we must notice here, as illustrative of a wonderful change in the history of mankind. The Britannia, which left Liverpool on the 5th instant, had actually made the American land in seven days and a-half! from the English coast! but one week's sail from the old world to the new!!—Standard.

DUBLIN.—The Dublin journals of both sides are at present engaged in a controversy arising out of a speech delivered by Alderman Butt at the inauguration déjeuner of the new Lord Mayor on Tuesday last. Mr. Butt, it may be recollected was one of the, if not the most, fierce opponent of all and everything in the shape of reformed corporations, and his speech against the measure before the bar of the House of Lords may not probably have escaped the memory of the public. It appears, however, in this instance as in all others time effects wondrous changes, for on the recent festive occasion, this stalwart defender of the old nuisances candidly declared himself a false prophet, and that the new Repeal Corporation of Dublin, presided over as it had been for the past year by the great apostle of Repeal himself, has agreeably disappointed him. This declaration, interlarded with some flourishes anent nationality, &c., called forth from the Evening Post the exulting remark that the speech might have been pronounced by Alderman O'Connell. But the Pilot of this evening boldly claim the ex-professor, the ci-devant denouncer of Mr. Shaw, as the "treacherous machinator of the Popish corporations," as a convert to O'Connellism and revolution. Speaking of the oration of Mr. Butt, the Pilot says, "To entertain such sentiments must be inseparable from the constructed mind of a high order, which even brief observation had previously impressed upon us as possessed by Mr. Butt, but expressed in a manner few others could accomplish. If Mr. Butt be possessed of such a mind he has a glorious career before him. There is in Ireland the elements of making one great man, and that should be a Protestant O'Connell. Let Mr. Butt be that man, and he at once takes an eagle flight." The Statesman, on the other hand, fiercely assails the quondam opponent of all reform, and asks, "Is Alderman Butt about to mount the sanctified and potent pike? Or is he only going to recur to the more sanctified ethereal process of O'Connell?"—Morning Paper.

CHINESE AVAILING THEMSELVES OF THE PROTECTION OF ENGLISH LAWS.—The Lord Mayor's Court of London was occupied, on Saturday, in adjudicating on claims made by four Chinese merchants, bearing the respective names of Pwankhequa, Sumqua, Watchtsing, and Thonching, against a British subject, for the several sums of 12,000*l.*, 4,000*l.*, and 1,600*l.* The first case was—"Watschsing v. Stevens—G. and J. Horsley Palmer and Co. Garnishees"—Mr. Ryland, in stating the plaintiff's case, said his client was a tea merchant, at Canton. The defendant, John William Stevens, was a tea-dealer in the City of London; and the garnishees were the well-known large wealthy tea-dealers trading under the firm of George and John Horsley Palmer and Co. This suit was an attachment against some property belonging to the defendant, now in the hands of the garnishees. This was an ancient custom peculiar to the City of London, and its benefits would, in this instance, be very apparent. Actions having been brought, and verdicts obtained, against a party who could not be found, but property of his being found in the hands of a third party, was attached, and through the Jury the plaintiff would get possession in aid of his claim,—and the defendant, though not present, could not be damaged, as he would be allowed a twelvemonth to come in and dispute the claim. This was the case of a person who, although residing and carrying on business in China, could, nevertheless, through his agent, attach property in the hands of persons in the City of London—a proof of the goodness of this salutary custom. Mr. Gurney said, to save trouble, he would admit that the garnishees had in their hands money amounting to 1,672*l.* 17s., and 400 pieces of silk of the value of 500*l.*, belonging to the defendant. The Jury, under the learned Recorder's direction, then gave the plaintiff a verdict for 192*l.* 12s. 6d., being a share of the above property proportionate to his claim of 1,600*l.* The other cases were not gone into, but verdicts in like manner were taken by consent, awarding Pwankhequa 1,623*l.* 3s.; and to the firm of Sumqua and Thonching 457*l.* 1s. 6d.; the parties thus only receiving 2,172*l.* 17s. in lieu of 17,600*l.*—Pat.

THE CHOPPING SYSTEM IN FRANCE.—According to the Parisian journals, it appears that the wholesale dealers in human hair have had a most successful harvest this year, not less than 200,000lbs. having been procured. Brittany is the province of France in which the traffic is mostly carried on, and all the fairs are regularly attended by purchasers, both male and female. The Breton peasants have particularly fine hair, and generally in great abundance. Their beautiful tresses they are perfectly willing to sell, and it is no uncommon sight to see several girls sheared one after the other like sheep, and many others standing ready for the shears, with their caps in their hands, and their long hair combed out and hanging down to their waists. Every successive crop of hair is tied up into a whisp by itself, and thrown into a large basket placed by the side of the operator. The highest value given by these abominable hair-merchants for a fine crop of hair is twenty sous, but the more frequent consideration is a gaudy, but trumpery, cotton handkerchief, worth about sixteen sous. The profit thus netted by these hairmongers must be enormous.—Record.

The Augsburg Gazette of the 5th inst. states, that "the object of the Prince de Joinville's voyage to the Brazils is to form a matrimonial connexion with the sister of the Emperor." The same journal adds, that the differences on a point of etiquette existing between the Courts of Paris and St. Petersburgh had been adjusted. M. de Barante and Count Pahlen were to meet at Berlin, when the former would proceed to St Petersburgh, and Count Pahlen would return to Paris.—Ibid.

The Echo de la Frontière announces that Monsieur Delegorgue, who left Douai four years since with some companions with a view to penetrate into the interior of Africa, through the country of the Caffres, had returned to that city, after having fully succeeded in his perilous Expedition. He brought with him an immense chest of ivory, and various other cases filled with rare and precious specimens of natural history, native arms, and hitherto unknown insects and vegetables.—Pat.

STORM AT MADEIRA.—We have been favoured with the following particulars of this calamity from a Correspondent residing in another quarter of the island:—

"CAMPANARIO, MADEIRA.—On Monday, 24th Oct., —— left us early in the morning. As he approached Funchal the rain began to fall, although then lightly, but soon after he reached his destination in safety, it descended literally in torrents until night. The fall of water in the mountains, at the foot of which Funchal is situated, must have been tremendous, it swept down the beds of rivers, which in summer are nearly dry, devastating and destroying everything, in the widest and best paved streets and roads leaving ravines fifteen and thirty feet deep, and carrying large heavy stones, with much earth, &c. from the vineyards and gardens already destroyed, into the midst of Funchal. ——, who slept in a house close to the best and most frequented road leading from the middle of the town to the mountains above, said, the rush of water was like a great river, and he could hear the great stones rolling down with the force of the torrent. He expected the house he was in would be undermined, and in the morning looked out to see if Funchal, which was below him, was not quite destroyed. Mercifully this was not the case, although they say the damage done to houses, streets, &c., cannot possibly be repaired in two years. More than 200 houses have been either quite destroyed or rendered uninhabitable. Many wine stores were filled with water, which, in the streets, was as high as a man's waist, and much wine lost from the bungs of casks being washed out. In one house a piano washed out from a room, not on the ground floor, carried across the street by the water, and lodged in the window of an opposite house. The maid servant of an English family who landed from the Dee just as the rain began, was literally washed out of her palanquin by a current of water which met her, and would have been drowned had not a gentleman providentially been at hand to save her, and conveyed her on his horse to her home. We, up here, had much heavy rain on that day, and at night most strong thunder and vivid lightning, but although many of the poor people lost their little patches of ground, in many instances laid on the rock of the mountain sides, it did not appear anything so extraordinary as what was at the same time taking place at Funchal. On the Wednesday following, however, we were visited by a most awful hurricane, which tore up one large chesnut tree by the roots, and laid it parallel with the house at the distance of only about ten feet from it! and so maimed and cut up every tree about us, that the appearance of the place is quite changed, but by no means improved. There was considerable danger, at one time, of the wind blowing any one of the trees by which the house is surrounded upon it—the roof would not have stood such a blow. The awfulness of that night, I think, we shall never forget, nor, I trust, the goodness of God in keeping our minds in peace, and enabling us to hear his voice in the storm, and trust in him for the disposing of ourselves and all belonging to us, as seemed him best. Two villages have been partially destroyed on the east coast of the island, and another poor vessel wrecked on the northern coast. The poor people have been made by this visitation still poorer in every way, and we have several each day here who say they have lost their little all, their houses unroofed, fazendas (vineyards) washed by the torrents into the sea. May the calamities which have visited their island be made the means of leading its poor people to righteousness! The visitation has had the effect of softening many."—Record.

MILITARY.

GENERAL ORDERS BY THE RIGHT HONOURABLE THE GOVERNOR GENERAL OF INDIA.

Camp Kurnaul, 26th January, 1843.

The Right Honourable the Governor General of India is pleased to make the following Appointments:

Major General Edward Henry Simpson, (Colonel of the 24th Regiment Native Infantry), to be a Brigadier of the 2d Class on the Establishment, in succession to Major General Forster Walker, who has embarked for Europe.

Major General George Cooper, (Colonel of the [...] Regiment Native Infantry,) to be a Brigadier of the [...] Class, during the period Major General Vincent may be employed in the command of the Dinapore Division, in succession to Colonel C. R. Skardon, whose temporary appointment to the Brigade Staff has, under the operation of Government General Orders, No. 20, of the 26th January 1842, not taken place.

Camp Kurnaul, 27th January, 1843.

The Right Honourable the Governor General has much pleasure in publishing, for general information, the following Extracts paras. 1, 2, 3 and 5 of a Military Letter from the Honourable the Court of Directors, to the Government of India, No. 16, under date the 30th November 1842.

Para. 1. The momentous events which have just occurred in Affghanistan—their great importance to the interests of the British Empire in India, and the distinguished gallantry, perseverance and discipline which have marked the conduct of the European and Native Troops engaged in their accomplishment, fully justify the Resolution taken by the Governor General, after communication with the Commander-in-Chief, to confer on the East India Company's Troops Medals in commemoration of the particular services in which they have been engaged.

2. We therefore cordially approve of the Resolutions to grant Medals to the Company's Troops engaged in the defence of Jellalabad during its memorable siege, to those engaged at Candahar and in the gallant defence of Kelat-i-Ghilzie, and to the Forces by which Ghuznee and Cabul have been again occupied.

3. We also fully approve and confirm the other measures taken for perpetuating the recollection of these important services as announced in the General Order by the Governor General, dated the 4th October 1842.

5. The donation of six months' full Batta to the Troops specified in para. 1 of the same General Order has our entire approbation.

Camp Kurnaul, 28th January, 1843.

The Right Honourable the Governor General of India is pleased to cancel the transfer of Ensign Edward [...] from the 32d, as a Lieutenant in the 5th Regiment N. I., and to make the following promotions, transfer, and alteration of rank:

32d Regt. N. I.

GENERAL ORDERS TO THE QUEEN'S TROOPS.

Head-Quarters, Camp Ferozepore, 31st December, 1842.

At a General Court Martial assembled at Dinapore, on Monday the 12th day of December 1842, Ensign Walter Swayne, of Her Majesty's 44th Regt. of Foot, was arraigned on the following charge.

Charge.—For conduct, unbecoming the character of an officer, in having been drunk when on the sick report in camp at or near Nuggra on the morning of the seventeenth day of October, one thousand eight hundred and forty two.

Finding.—The Court find the prisoner Ensign Walter Swayne, of Her Majesty's 44th Regt. of Foot, guilty of the charge preferred against him.

Sentence.—The Court sentence the prisoner Ensign Walter Swayne, of Her Majesty's 44th Regiment of Foot, to be severely reprimanded in such manner, as His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief shall be pleased to direct.

Confirmed.
(Signed) J. NICOLLS, General and Commander-in-Chief, East Indies.

29th December, 1842.

REMARKS BY HIS EXCELLENCY THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF IN INDIA.

This sentence was too lenient but His Excellency trusts that the disgrace of having been found guilty on such a charge may, in his future career, cause that officer to be at once cautious and abstemious.

This opinion and reprimand are to be made known to Ensign Swayne, on parade, and he is then to return to his duty.

By Order of His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief,
H. G. SMITH, Major General,
Adjutant General H. M. Forces in India.

IMPERIAL TEA WAREHOUSE.

No. 6½, Tank-Square,

THE Proprietor respectfully solicits the Patronage of the Public and begs to subjoin a list of Teas for sale at the Warehouse, which were most carefully selected at Canton by a professional Tea-taster.

The object of the Proprietor is to supply the Public with TEAS of the HIGHEST CHARACTER, at the LOWEST POSSIBLE PRICES; and he is confident of meeting both these ends, from the means he has at his command.

In offering these Goods for CASH, the Proprietor is enabled to sell them at 25 PER CENT. LESS than could be afforded, were credit allowed; as the expense of Bill-collecting and losses from deaths, &c., fully amount to that per-centage.

All packages leaving the Warehouse will be carefully put up and sealed; and it is recommended that no Tea be deposited in glass vessels of any description.

All applications are requested to be made to Mr. Richard Harris, who is authorised to effect Sales and receive payment for the same.

PROSPECTUS.

IT is proposed to publish, by subscription, a work, in Eight Books, blank verse, to be entitled PARADISE, OR THE INVISIBLE WORLD.

BY W. ROBINSON, Baptist Missionary.

The Work treats on the state of disembodied souls, both that of the saved, and that of the lost; but chiefly on the state of happy souls.

It is a commonly received opinion among Protestants, that disembodied souls go at once to Heaven or Hell; but this opinion appears to some, and to the author among others, to be unsupported by Scripture. The doctrine taught in Scripture seems to be that of an intermediate state; not a purgatory, nor a state of probation; but a state of rest and happiness for the righteous, and of misery for the wicked; while Heaven and Hell seem reserved till after the resurrection and the judgment. The righteous, it is believed, will not enter Heaven till they all enter it together at the invitation: "Come ye blessed of my Father," &c. nor the wicked enter Hell, till they all enter it together, when the Great Judge shall say, "Depart ye cursed into everlasting fire," &c.

The arguments in favour of an intermediate state, and replies to the objections usually brought against that state are limited to the Second Book; so that those, who differ in opinion from the author, may, it is believed, read the other parts of the work without finding any thing materially different from their own views of the state of departed souls.

The author is quite ready to acknowledge, that the doctrine of an intermediate state is a non-essential; and he has treated it as such; but as truth is preferable to error, even in non-essentials, he has thought the subject of sufficient importance to be laid before his fellow-Christians for their consideration; and he hopes, that his manner of handling it will not inflict the least wound on the feelings of those, who differ from him.

The advocacy of this doctrine was but a part, and that not even the main part of the object which the author proposed to himself; his chief object was that of calling the attention of his fellow-christians to the great concerns of another world, and thus promoting their spirituality of mind; and he ventures to hope, and his hope is corroborated by the testimony of a few plain christians, that have seen the whole manuscript or parts of it, that the serious reader will not peruse the work without some spiritual advantage.

 The work will be printed in Demy 8vo. and will contain about 400 pages. Price bound in cloth 6 Rupees.

THE EVANGELIST.

A Monthly Magazine, printed in English and Bengalee, in 16 octavo pages. Price 4 As. monthly.

THE sole object of this Magazine is the benefit of the Native Christians in Bengal. We hope therefore that Missionaries will aid us by their subscriptions and contributions, and supply us with such Essays, Sermons, Obituary Notices, and Religious and other Intelligence as may be considered generally beneficial; and that they will encourage the Native Members of their Churches to do the same.

Subscribers' names and all contributions will be thankfully received by MR. JOHN ROBINSON, at SERAMPORE.

THE NEW QUARTERLY SESSIONS.—The Hurkaru congratulated us last Wednesday on the fact that there was a public, at such places as Malda and Noacolly, in the outskirts of civilization, and that its voice was heard at Government House through its constituted organs. If our recollection be correct, it is not quite so new a thing as the Hurkaru supposes, that the public voice should be listened to at Government House; though it is altogether a new and unexpected event that this voice should enjoy more favour with the public authorities than with our contemporary, the champion of popular rights. It is not so astonishing to find Government on the side of the people, as to see the Hurkaru voting against them.

But to the point: There are seven Joint or subordinate Magistrates in the Lower Provinces, and all the prisoners committed by them are sent up to the chief station of the district to be tried by the Sessions Judge at his monthly jail delivery. It appears to have occurred to Government that this system of administering justice would admit of improvement; that instead of making the mountain go to Mahomed, it would be better to make Mahomed go to the mountain; and that instead of constraining six or seven hundred prosecutors and witnesses in each district to travel a distance of many miles to the station of the Judge, it would be more conducive to the ends of justice to direct the Judge to proceed to the station of the Joint Magistrate, and hold the Sessions there. A circular letter was therefore sent to the Commissioners, the Session Judges, and the Magistrates, requiring their sentiments on the proposed change. The Commissioners and the Magistrates, almost without exception, voted in favour of it. The Civil Judges objected to it.

The arguments against the alteration were, that the absence of the Sessions Judge, who is also the Civil Judge, from his own court, would impede the transaction of civil business over which he presides; that a quarterly sessions at the Joint Magistracies would subject prisoners to a more protracted confinement in jail before they were brought to trial, and that witnesses would be more likely to give correct evidence immediately after the crime was committed than after an interval of two or three months. The arguments in favour of the measure were, that the detection and punishment of crime would be more certain, if the Sessions were held on the spot, and prosecutors and witnesses were spared the inconvenience and expense of a journey to the station of the Judge, and the prospect of an indefinite detention there; and that great benefit would result from a periodical visit to the station of the Joint Magistracies by the chief authority in the district. We must confess that the arguments in favour of the plan appear to outweigh those which are advanced against it. By this new arrangement, the Civil Judge will be obliged, it is true, to abstract one month in the year from the time devoted to civil business; but the inconvenience which this occasions might be greatly mitigated by directing the Principal Sudder Ameen to conduct the current duties of his office. The hardship to prisoners when their confinement before trial is protracted, is a more serious consideration. This would doubtless be an evil—but it must not be forgotten that the present system is fraught with perhaps greater evils; and that if the proposed modification should serve in a great degree to remove them, the minor evil that it might entail would be no valid objection to its being adopted. No plan that can be devised either in this country or in England, will be free from objection; and we have therefore to choose that which will be productive of the least inconvenience;—and assuredly it is a smaller grievance that a prisoner against whom there is sufficient evidence of guilt to justify his commitment, should remain two or even three months in confinement before trial, than that twenty people should be obliged to march a distance of a hundred miles, at all seasons of the year, to prove him guilty.

The greatest obstacle in this country to the administration of justice is the entire absence of all co-operation on the part of the people. They will not assist in the detection or conviction of crime; and the best intentioned government cannot protect their persons or property in spite of themselves. To remove this indisposition and to secure their co-operation is therefore one of the first steps of improvement. It has been found by experience that this indisposition springs in a greater measure from the inconveniences to which our institutions subject them, when their aid is required for the prosecution of offenders. The object of the present arrangement is to remove this objection; and to lessen the evils of attendance on the criminal courts. When men are not required to travel to a great distance at all seasons of the year, amidst the scorching blasts of summer, and the drenching torrents of the rainy season, it is expected that they will be less disposed to conceal offences and to hush up enquiries, and that crime will enjoy less impunity. If such should be the result of the proposed measure of bringing justice to the door of the Joint Magistracies, the inconvenience to the rogues of a more prolonged confinement before trial,—and to civil suitors;—and even to the Civil and Session Judges, will be comparatively trifling. That is to say, the advantage to the public interests of the community will be greater than the disadvantages; and this will be a sufficient justification of the change. It is, we suppose, in this view of the case, that the proposed measure has been adopted, notwithstanding the reluctance of the Sudder Court and the Session Judges. The Executive Government has therefore the merit of good intentions, however in the judgment of the Hurkaru, it may lack that of wisdom. The benefits which in the opinion of those who are responsible for the administration of justice in these subordinate jurisdictions, will inevitably result from this change, was enough to warrant the experiment; and at present the arrangement is only experimental. At any rate, the assent of the Joint Magistrates has the credit of disinterestedness. They would scarcely invite their superiors to visit their secluded provinces unless a regard for the public advantage outweighed all considerations of private interest.

The Hurkaru is apprehensive lest the Sessions Judges should loiter on the road, to follow any game which may cross their path, and thus prolong the agony of civil suitors. Our contemporary's experience is evidently modern. He has yet to learn that since the days of Lord William Bentinck the indulgence in field sports on the part of civilians has become the exception, instead of the rule. We will not venture to deny that even under the present regime, notwithstanding that very ungentlemanly practice of requiring a return of every day's duty, some of the Civilians are fonder of pursuing jackals than criminals. We fear they do sometimes contrive to elude the vigilance of the Deputy Governor by reporting themselves as employed in miscellaneous duties, when out hunting and shooting; but their privileges are grievously curtailed, and the irrational animals in their district have more rest, and the rational beings who prey on their fellows, less. It is very possible that Government may require them to ride post, and their field sports will then be confined to the acquisition of a snipe or wild duck for dinner. Why should an editor, condemned to the exhausting drudgery of a daily paper, envy the overworked Civil and Session Judge so trifling a recreation?

THE UNION BANK.—At the Meeting of the Proprietors of the Union Bank which had been fixed for the 21st of February to receive the Report of the Committee appointed to investigate its transactions with the late firm of Gilmore and Co., the Report was presented, and produced a warm discussion. In the course of their investigations the Committee appear to have discovered that the interests of the Bank,—that is of the Share holders,—had not been duly attended to by the Directors; and that the loss of five lakhs of Rupees which the failure of that firm has entailed on the Bank, was to be attributed in some measure to their negligence. The Report had not been submitted to the Secretary, and it was resolved therefore to place it in his hands for any justificatory remarks which he might have it in his power to offer. The Committee at the same time demanded that the names, as well as Minutes, of the Directors, who were mixed up with this transaction, should be revealed to them. This gave rise to considerable altercation, and the revelation of the names of the Directors was stoutly resisted by Mr. Turton, and it was ultimately resolved that the minutes should be given up without the names. Under all the circumstances of the case, this resolution appears wise and prudent. Doubtless the members of the Committee were actuated by a virtuous indignation at the mismanagement of the Directors, which had entailed loss on the Institution, and depreciated the property of the Shareholders. Still, the demand for the names had something of a vindictive aspect; and the disclosure might have been more detrimental to the offenders, than beneficial to the general interests of the Bank. It would have been tantamount to a breach of that confidence under the protection of which the Directors venture to record their acquiescence or refusal of every request for accommodation. It is just possible, as the public suspects, that the interest of the proprietors may have been postponed to that of the mercantile body, from which the Directors are chosen; in other words, that in the disposal of the Bank Capital, the interest of those who wished to borrow was more considered than that of the individuals whose money was to be lent. Such imperfections belong to the Union Bank, in common with all Joint Stock Banks. Still the disclosure of the names to those who considered themselves bound by the obligations of duty to make an example of the delinquents, would have been found in the end mischievous, and men of honour and consideration might have appeared unwilling to accept seats in the Direction, and to put themselves in so invidious a position. The surrender of the minutes without the names will answer every public and avowable purpose, while the fearless scrutiny of the Committee will be found to have promoted the general welfare of the Bank by rendering such sacrifices of public to individual interests, more rare. At the same time, the leaders of the Bank must be aware from the very small majority with which they were able to resist the production of the names—21 to 10—that the public suspicion of mismanagement on the part of the Directors, is not to be despised.

After the Gilmore discussion had ceased, the question about the advances which the Bank had made on factories of various sorts and descriptions came upon the tapis, and was laid on the shelf. Mr. Longueville Clarke made apparently the longest speech on the occasion, and wisely observed, that however sound might be the reasons which had led the Directors, to this mode of employing the funds of the Bank, it was sufficient that the body of the Proprietors, of whom the Directors were only trustees, disapproved of this course, to induce them to alter it at the earliest practicable moment. We beg to second Mr. Clarke's representation. All the proprietors who have no interest in Indigo concerns, and who have no other object than to obtain a fair interest for their capital in boná fide banking transactions, are opposed to the course which the Bank has pursued in thus locking up its capital in indigo, sugar and other factories, and borrowing money at five per cent. to carry them on. The example of the old houses,—the five powers as they were called after Palmer's failure,—has not been lost on the public. 'Their decadence is traced in a great measure to their connection with such factories. They may not have fallen by the factories, but every one believes they did,' and wishes that his own money may not be placed in the same jeopardy. Some of the Bank Shareholders too, who are occasionally behind the scenes, are enabled to estimate the intrinsic value of such factories when it becomes necessary to sell them. They have heard that some of the factories set up by the houses that went into the Insolvent Court last year, cost some three or four lakhs of Rupees, and have since been sold for a tenth of the sum. They are anxious to rescue the Bank from such dangerous associations; and who will say that they are wrong?

Mr. Clarke described the process by which the Bank had been led into the factories. The capital was originally forty lakhs of Rupees. Some one proposed to set up a rival Bank, and the Directors, to keep down competition, doubled their capital, and eventually raised it to One million sterling. The Bank, we must remark, had also resolved, by a natural ambition, to keep shoulder to shoulder in the matter of dividends with the Bank of Bengal which is a chartered Bank, and has as large a capital in paper money,—which is supported by the credit of Government,—as it has in bullion. It therefore began to lend out the superfluous capital which had been created by the fear of this competition on high interest to "assist the productive resources" of the country; and it was thus led into these very dubious speculations, which it is much easier to enter into, than to escape from, unscathed. If the Bank had determined to recall all its capital thus embarked, at the end of the last indigo season, that capital would have been deteriorated one-fourth. It must go on with them, for bad as the connection is, the sudden withdrawal from it, would be worse. It would be idle to dictate to the Bank, the sum that shall be given for advances next year. If any factories that are dependent on the Bank, are not supplied with funds for 'going on,' they will stand still, and the value of them will fall almost to zero. The safety of the Bank consists in the firm determination of the Proprietors to withdraw from these agricultural speculations; and to watch with the most vigilant and even suspicious eye, the proceedings of the Directors in reference to them, and to make it the one object of attention to close them at the earliest practicable and safe moment. Then follow up Mr. Turton's sage advice, and if there is no mercantile employment for the redundancy of capital, give it back to the shareholders 'to make a kirk or a mill of it,' as they like.

ANSWER TO J. H. S. ON THE PUSEYITE ARTICLE.—We owe many apologies to our correspondent J. H. S. for having postponed the publication of his letter.

He asks whether the anti-Puseyite extracts which we have given in this journal, have not a tendency, under pretence of attacking Puseyism, to throw odium on the peculiarities of the Church of England. The use of the word pretence in this sentence may be understood as intended to charge us with unfair intentions. It may not have been so designed by our correspondent; but we cannot allow the expression to pass without assuring him that nothing could be farther from our view than the idea of inflicting any injury on the Church of England by the publication of these extracts. Our object was to point out, for the information of our readers, the progress which Puseyism is making towards Rome.

Our correspondent questions, whether there is a sentiment contained in the Circular to the Parishioners of Christ Church Hoxton, which ninety-nine out of a hundred Anglicans are not taught to believe from their cradle. The most prominent of these sentiments is the identity of baptism with regeneration. We are sorry to see such a statement avowed with such confidence by a member of the Church of England. There can scarcely be an error more fatal to the interests of morality and religion than this, that a man is placed in a state of grace and salvation by a ceremony performed on him in his unconscious infancy.—But we must not enter on a subject which would bring us within the circle of doctrinal controversy. That the liturgy of the Church of England, framed in the days of Elizabeth to unite all parties, gives some support to the doctrines which the Puseyites have adopted, and are pushing to the extreme is, we believe, denied by none. So effectually was that object answered, that out of 9400 beneficed clergymen, who had been staunch Catholics a year before, in the days of Queen Mary, less than two hundred found it impossible to reconcile the reformed ritual with their consciences, and resigned their benefices. But the Articles and Homilies were framed in order to give a Protestant interpretation to the Liturgy, and in this sense it has been used generally by the Clergy of the established Church.

Hence the Puseyites are found to loath the Homilies, and repudiate as far as possible, the Articles, while they cling with peculiar fondness to the Liturgy, and thereby explain in some measure the assertion made by Lord Chatham in the House of Lords that the Church of England had a Popish liturgy, and Calvinistic Articles. But we cannot bring ourselves to the conclusion of our correspondent that there exists but a solitary One Per Cent. among the Anglicans who do not believe that the baptism of an infant by a clergyman is the instrument of salvation. While we were writing this article we received a copy of the Rev. Mr. Yorke's letter to the Bishop of London, in which he goes over the six notions which are the mainsprings of the Puseyite movement in the Church. One of these is, that in Episcopalian baptism there is immediately and invariably an effected regeneration. On this subject this beneficed clergyman has the following very appósite remarks. We should be sorry to find that ninety-nine out of every hundred clergymen of the Church of England teach a different doctrine.

"The third notion is, that in Episcopalian baptism there is immediately and invariably an effected regeneration.

"If I may be allowed to say so, your Lordship's connecting regeneration with justification was correct. To be regenerated without being justified, or to be justified without being regenerated, would equally constitute a nullified blessing. Besides which, as in the rays of light all colours co-exist, so are the spiritual blessings which come from Christ essentially inseparable: indeed, all is ours, if Christ is ours. But bearing this in mind, can we in the face of God and man affirm, that every episcopally baptized child is both regenerated and justified? To affirm this, is to affirm what not only must be invisible to the world, but directly contrary to all that by its natural eyes and ears, or by its natural judgment and conscience, it can morally observe and comprehend. Are there not myriads of persons who, having been baptized, are still so far from being heavenly minded, that they are evidently mere formalists; nay, more, drunkards, thieves, courtesans, sceptics, Atheists, and scoffers? I have been assured, my Lord, that such papers as the Weekly Dispatch seized with immediate glee and triumph upon your Lordship's statement, as being one which the weakest observation might disprove.

"To remove the difficulty, it is indeed sometimes said, that the grace bestowed in baptism is often speedily withdrawn or lost. Unintelligible as this opinion is, and strange as is the view it gives of baptismal grace, it still may be the sincere opinion of those who now avow it. They may believe, as apparently an Oxford writer does, that all episcopally baptized infants are, when baptized, in a seraphic state; and that afterwards grace fails in the greater number, as life fails in spring-buds nipped by frost. The theory of a "seraphic state" does not indeed seem exactly to agree with the manifestations of feeling made by children at the font; but whether it does or not, we have to ask, was this theory of evanescent grace the theory of the reformers? Did they believe, that a child or a man could be regenerate and justified one moment, and be unregenerated and unjustified the next?"

It is not, we admit, a new thing to call Charles the First, a Martyr. The practice came in with the Restoration, and represented very correctly the feelings of the triumphant Cavaliers; but the party feelings in which the commemoration of his death originated, have gradually subsided; and the revival of them can serve no purpose but to rekindle the religious pride and animosity of that age. It is perfectly certain that the 30th. of January is marked in the Oxford Almanacs as the day of Charles King and Martyr. It is also equally as certain that Dr. Hook proclaimed in the Chapel Royal that the Church of England boasted the only Royal Martyr in the Calendar, as that this Royal Martyr, having received only Presbyterian baptism, his Christianity is more problematic than his Martyrdom; but the peculiar value which is now placed on the commemoration of Charles the First takes its rise from the present movement at Oxford, and unhappily indicates a disposition to revive the days of Laud and the High Commission Court.

Our Correspondent says, Puseyism is very unpopular in India. We fear he is mistaken. We hear of one clergyman on this Establishment after another, adopting these views. At Ceylon we are told that with one exception the Clergymen are universally imbued with the sentiments of the Oxford School; and the Journal des Villes et des Campagnes, published in Paris on the 26th October last, asserts on the authority of the Vicar Apostolic of Pondicherry, that one of the Ministers on the Madras establishment is a Puseyite "to the bottom of his soul." The whole passage is worth extracting.

"A Protestant minister of the Madras Presidency (he is of the Established Church), passed through Pondicherry last week on his way to Quilon and Trichinopoly. He came to see me. He brought a letter of introduction from M. Ch— Chief Secretary at Madras. This minister is a Puseyite to the bottom of his soul. He talks much of the necessity of re-uniting the Anglican Catholics, as he calls them, with the Roman Catholics, and says that it is not difficult to accomplish it; that it would be forming a false judgment of them to suppose that they have hostile feelings; that there is a fair progress towards reunion; that we ought to be charitable in all things, and especially in what belongs to religion; that some of the Anglicans have gone too far in saying that our Lord was not in the Eucharist...that he is there in a real presence, and not merely in a presence of faith, or symbolically, &c. This minister always wears his clerical dress (vestis talaris). He is never in ordinary clothes. He is unmarried."

Perhaps it is in reference to this Minister that the following passage speaks. It appears in the Record of the 19th December last.

"It appears, that one of these recreants from the orthodoxy of our Church, recently made a visit of complaisance to the Popish bishop at that Presidency arrayed in his surplice and cross; and soon afterwards attended the mass-house in his canonical attire, and, in this dress of a clergyman of the Church of England, partook of the elements pronounced to be transubstantiated. The bearing of this person in regard to doctrinal and ceremonial matters had, as we are informed, previously been so gross as to occasion great offence to his brethren in the ministry. This act, however, was so flagrant, that they united in making a formal complaint to the archdeacon and bishop. But the bishop would not interpose. He advised the withdrawal of the remonstrance. No ecclesiastical sentence whatever was passed on the culprit, but on the contrary, he was nominated, with the sanction of his diocesan, to a new station: we rather think Trichinopoly."

We will trespass on the reader's patience with only one more extract.

"During Lent, it is the custom for the best preachers at Rome to preach every day in the week, except Saturday. On one occasion, the last season of Lent, the Padre Grossie, who was remarkable for his eloquence, was preaching in the Jesuits' church. His sermon was on the advantages of the Roman Church, the danger of schism. After a passionate appeal to the Greeks, he, urging them without delay to enter into the sanctuary of the Papal Church, concluded with the following appeal to Puseyites:— "There is yet a class of persons, very numerous, who I would wish to address, although I fear that there may be none here; still, perchance, should there be any, to them I turn: O! Puseyites, what shall I say to you? You know that you are not Protestants, and we know you are not Catholics; you are much nearer to us than to them. Why will you not come over entirely to us? The mother Church has been long waiting with open arms to receive you, and the holy virgin with extended arms is ready to embrace you. Why do you longer waver in the declaration of your faith? Why do you not make the piccolo pass which separates you from us?"

THE SOMNATH GATES.—Lord Ellenborough continues to drag the Sacred Gates after him with all the fondness which we may suppose a Roman General to have felt for the spoils of a conquered country which were to grace his triumphal progress up the via sacra. They have formed the chief attraction of his Lordship's encampment in the eyes of the Hindoos, hundreds of whom have been seen daily to present their homage and their offerings to the veiled bylah in which they are mysteriously concealed. Our correspondents in the Camp assure us that the Governor General has bought golden opinions of the Hindoos for this act of devotion to Hindoo interests. But it is much to be questioned whether the value of such feelings is not overbalanced by the wound which is thereby inflicted on the feelings of the Mahomedans. The policy of any measure which should aggravate the animosity which exists between the two classes in this empire, is exceedingly doubtful. It has hitherto been the aim of all our rulers to hold the balance between these sects with as even and impartial a hand as possible, and we may yet have reason to regret the abandonment of this spirit of neutrality. It is impossible to foresee the consequences which may result from the humiliation thus inflicted on the most fanatic of our Indian subjects; and it is much to be feared that the next collision between the two sects, will be far more deadly than any previous conflict. If a single life is sacrificed in consequence of this idle procession of the rotten gates, it will be more than the gates themselves are worth.

The Hindoos have been taught by the very unusual respect paid to the gates by the ruler of British India to set a higher value on them; and they are become objects of worship almost to the same degree as if they contained the spirit of some Hindoo God. Is it befitting the majesty of Britain that its representative should carry in his train, with such unusual pomp, objects which attract the idolatrous veneration of the multitude? Is it befitting a Christian ruler, to bestow such a triumph on idolatry, and to give such an impulse to the superstitious feelings of its deluded votaries? It will not be forgotten with what extreme difficulty the public voice has succeeded in constraining the Government, both here and at home, to abide by its own professions made ten years since, to dissolve its connection with the superstitions of the Heathen, and to deprive them of that support which they derived from the alliance of the state. Where is the propriety of undoing the labor of ten years; and courting the favour of the Hindoos by fostering that superstition, which is the cause of their national degradation? Every feeling of devotion to our rule which we may thus secure; must be gained at the expense of our own Christian character, and of the best interests of the country. The sooner the curtain drops on this scene of political inconsistency and religious degradation, the better.

It is said that the Hindoo priests who yet live at Somnath, have refused to receive the gates. We hope the report is true. At any rate, it would be wise in Lord Ellenborough to believe it. He is now proceeding to Agra with the Gates, we hear, in his train. How easy would it be to drop them at Muttra, where they will be a real god-send to the priests. At Somnath no one will thank his Lordship for the gift, unless he should establish and pay a College of priests to preserve them. The minor Mahomedan Zemindar, in whose domains the temple stands, will probably pitch them into the sea on attaining his majority, and thus save himself a pilgrimage to Mecca. At Muttra, which is a very holy place, where Krishnu played with the milk-maids some thousand years ago, they will be most welcome. The priests will receive them with gratitude, and deliver them down as an heir loom to their successors. They will augment the sanctity of the place, and the profits of the priests. We will not deny that the accidental loss of them in the Jumna, would be more agreeable than their being placed at Muttra by Christian agency; but there is only a choice of evils, and it is better to leave them there, than to parade them through the country. The only objection to this course, as far as we can see, is the awkwardness which may attend the revoking an order which has once emanated from the Governor General. But Lord Ellenborough, in his celebrated Simlah proclamation, has taught the Natives of India that the British Government is not infallible. His Lordship has thus broken the ice, and may avail himself of the opening to escape from the dilemma in which the patronage of these gates has involved him. Or, his Lordship might issue another proclamation, stating that the brahmuns at Somnath, not having duly appreciated the value of the gates, were unworthy of being instrusted with them, and that they were therefore transferred to those who knew how to prize them.

THE AUTHORITY OF THE BIBLE SOCIETY.—We were anxious to testify our respect for our Correspondent, A Member of the Bible Society, and for the Institution he defends, by entering fully into the discussion to which he invites us: but we have found it impossible to command sufficient time. The subject is well worthy of mature consideration; and we shall not lose sight of it. As soon as we can find opportunity, we shall state fully our views respecting it. Yet it seems more fitting for the Bible Society itself, or at least some of its active members, as our present correspondent, to lay down the principles by which its proceedings in the matter of Translations ought and are to be guided. Nothing would afford us greater pleasure than to see truth and justice approximated by candid examination in this way: and our columns shall be freely opened to any communications for such an end, from our Correspondent, or from any of his fellow members of like temper.

In the mean time, we are justified, we imagine, in taking our Correspondent's letter as a confirmation of the statement, that the Calcutta Bible Society have resolved to refuse their assistance to any Oordoo translation of the New Testament, in which the name Jesus is not given in the spelling they have adopted. We had no reason to doubt the truth of the statement: but it is of such serious moment that its confirmation is important. We are therefore grateful to our correspondent for having afforded it.

THE CHANGES IN THE SAUGOR DISTRICT.—Seldom has there been so complete a bouleversement in our administration since we held the sceptre of India, as the last Gazette announces in reference to the Saugor and Nerbudda territories. The Governor General has changed the Head of the district and placed it under the direction of Major Sleeman. Considering the great talent of that officer, and his claims on the consideration, if not the gratitude, of Government, no man regrets this appointment. But all the covenanted servants have been swept away as unexpectedly and as cleanly as though the Government had passed into the hands of a new dynasty. The local battalion is also dissolved, and the constabulary force abolished. Major Sleeman is to have twelve Military Assistants under him, and two battalions of Military police are to be forthwith organized to consist of 2400 men, at an annual cost, independent of European officers, of more than two lakhs of Rupees. The battle of Plassey made a less violent and organic change in the system of Government than the Governor General has effected by one stroke of his pen.

The sudden and simultaneous removal of all the officers who have been employed in conducting the civil, criminal, and fiscal administration in this extensive province, is a very unusual proceeding, and unless it was imperatively required by their general unfitness for office, is calculated rather to retard than to promote the welfare of the people. It must tend to weaken the confidence of the public officers in the justice of Government and thus to destroy the spring of exertion. It is true, that the country has recently been in a disturbed state; but unless the discontent of the people can be traced distinctly to the oppression or even misconduct of the officers who have now been displaced, their removal will admit of little or no justification. Some of these officers are known to be eminently qualified for the duties of Government; and their administration has been beneficial to the country and acceptable to the people. This indiscriminate dismissal of every officer is ill calculated to increase the respect of the community for the measures of Government; it is more likely to impress them with an idea of the unstable and fugitive character of our institutions; and to make it more painfully visible that the British Government moves in a constant circle of change.

The sudden abstraction of men accustomed to the language and habits of the people, and acquainted with the laws which are administered, cannot but prove highly disadvantageous, and serve to unhinge the whole administration of justice in this province, and to create general confusion. The appointment of a number of raw hands, without local experience, whose only title to the management of civil business is derived from their gallantry in the field, is calculated to increase that confusion, and to disorganize the Government of the province. The new military Judges, Collectors and Magistrates can know little or nothing of the laws they are to administer, or of the duties they are to perform; and the people must pay the penalty of their ignorance. The organization of a military police for this province, to execute writs at the point of the bayonet, and to distrain property by Havildars and Jemadars instead of by Darogahs, may possibly be required by the disturbed state of the district; but in this case we cannot boast of peace in India, however we may pride ourselves on the pacification of Asia.

THE STUDIES OF FORT WILLIAM COLLEGE.—We publish a reply to the observations we offered on this subject last week by the "Public in the person of its humble representative, Oodaseen," and submit some brief remarks on his strictures.

He says that the Oordoo used in the Courts is in fact made up of Persian vocables with little more than a few verbs and particles of Hindoostanee. This is contrary to the positive orders of Government; which are, that the "Native ministerial officers do not merely substitute a Hindoostanee for a Persian verb at the end of the sentence, under the mistaken idea that such practice will be considered as fulfilling every object in view in making the change." The practice our correspondent alludes to is one, which requires to be corrected, and not perpetuated, and the study of Persian is likely to lead to its continuance; and is therefore open to objection. It is highly to be desired that efforts should be made to give a uniformity and a 'fixity' to the Oordoo official language, but this object is not likely to be attained by excluding it from the studies of the Civilian, who is required to use it in the administration of justice. The formation of a good model of Oordoo, which shall be universally adopted, will doubtless require more time than the improvement of Bengalee, but unless a commencement is made,—which does not appear as yet to have been the case—the object must continue to elude our grasp.

Oodaseen says, that the Persian and Hindee together go to form the Oordoo. We do not question the accuracy of the statement; but we demur to the conclusion, that it is therefore better for the student to devote the very limited time allowed him at College, to the acquisition of two languages which enter into the composition of a third, instead of at once applying to that third language. The Saxon, the Latin and the French 'go to form English,' yet who would venture to say that the shortest and most advisable course for a foreigner to pursue if he would acquire English, is to study the three languages which form its "constituent parts?"

As it regards Bengalee, it will be readily conceded, that the law terms are for the most part Persian, and must for the present be retained; but the student may acquire them in a month without distracting his attention with Persian Grammar and Syntax. The official Bengalee, has, as every body knows, a very barbarous mixture of Persian; but this was a natural consequence of the long use of that tongue in the Courts, and the predominance of Mahomedans among the officers. Persian is now excluded, and one of the natural consequences is that the Hindoos are gradually obtaining a firmer footing in the Courts; and in a few years both the Native Judges and Native ministerial officers will consist for the most part of Hindoos. They bring their own language with them; and in twenty years from this time nothing will remain of the old leaven, but a limited number of Persian legal terms, or such Persian words as have been entirely domesticated, and are understood by every peasant. Persian therefore is totally unnecessary for the transaction of business in Bengal. To keep it up merely that the Civilian may be enabled to speak with acceptance to the Mahomedan Amlas and the population of towns, would be to pursue an object not worth a fraction of the time and labour it must cost. It is far more important that he should speak with acceptance the language of the million, than the language of the few.

"What is the use of teaching Bengalee to a man who is to administer affairs for 20 or 30 years in the Agra Presidency?"—None whatever. If the service was divided according to the two official languages in use at this Presidency, and the Civilians were not allowed any interchange of offices, one language would suffice; but till this arrangement is made, a Civilian should qualify himself for both provinces; and as he cannot enter on the service without a knowledge of two languages, it is the dictate of reason and common sense that those two languages should not be, as at present, the Persian and the Hindee, which are not used in any Court throughout the Presidency; but the Oordoo and the Bengalee, which are the languages now in use in every tribunal.

When Oodaseen proceeds to affirm that Government "in selecting its system should make it clear that it is guided by the opinions of men who are qualified by their acquirements, by their practical acquaintance with the various bearings of the subject, and by the largeness and impartiality of their views, to form a sound judgment on this important subject; men not in any way likely to raise the cry of "Nothing like leather;" we naturally suppose that by the leather men, he refers to men like ourselves. Will he forgive the presumption of our conjecture that in alluding to men of acquirements, and practical acquaintance with the bearings of the subject, and largeness and impartiality of views, he had half an eye to individuals like himself? We have no hesitation however in ranging ourselves among those who think there is "nothing like leather;" nothing like making the Civilian learn the two languages in which he will be required to administer the laws; and we willingly relinquish to others the credit of those large views which would set him to learn two languages because they form the constituent parts of a third; and which would send him forth qualified to preside in all Courts—by a knowledge of two languages neither of which are used in any of them.

WEEKLY EPITOME OF NEWS.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 23.

— Mr. J. B. Elliott, one of the oldest and ablest members of the Civil Service, comes down to Calcutta immediately as one of the Judges of the Sudder Court. It is very gratifying to find that the natives have every confidence in his legal experience and independence, and consider that his appointment will raise the character of the Court in public estimation.

— Col. Mountain, of the Cameronians, who has rendered himself so conspicuous by his exertions in China, has been appointed Deputy Adjutant General of Queen's Troops at Madras.

— We are happy to state, that Khet Sing, the disinherited Raja of Churkaree, who has been soliciting for many years the restoration of his rights, whose cause has been espoused by the Court of Directors in vain, because of the passive resistance of the authorities in the North West, has been received with military honours by Lord Ellenborough, and invested with the Government of the Jütpore principality, rendered vacant by the rebellion and recusance of the late Chief. He is thus raised from the condition of a pensioner on 8000 Rupees, always irregularly paid, to the enjoyment of a revenue of three or four lakhs of Rupees a year.

— The London papers state, that Sir Henry Pottinger is likely to succeed the Marquis of Tweeddale at Madras. But this appointment depends on the contingency of Lord Ellenborough's recall, which will not happen, or his resignation, which is not very probable. The eclat of 'peace in Asia' may throw the Gates, the odious Gates, into the shade. Much will depend on the meeting and the temper of Parliament. We had generally understood that Sir Henry Pottinger was to be the military member of the Council of India, on Sir W. Casement's quitting it. Sir Charles Metcalfe is spoken of as the Governor of Madras; but the papers are about to marry him to a rich and titled Dowager. If this report be correct, Sir Charles may say, I have married a wife and cannot come.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 24.

— The young widow of the late chief of Gwalior, herself twelve years of age, has adopted a son of the age of nine, and the adoption has been sanctioned by the Governor General. All those fears which were expressed, lest Government should take advantage of the occasion to enlarge the British possessions, have thus vanished. And, for ought that at present appears, all those hopes which were entertained of an improvement in the administration of that state, and of the suppression of all "Tyranny, Oppression, Injustice, Murder, Suicide, Slavery, Female Immolation, and all other such crimes" have vanished also.

— Sir Hugh Gough, after having been 'fêted and lionized' in the City of Palaces, has proceeded to join his family at Bangalore. It is said he will return amongst us at the beginning of the next cold weather, when Sir Jasper Nicholls is expected to lay down the baton of office.

— A charge of very aggravated cruelty has just been brought to the Magistrate of the 24-Pergunnahs against a Mrs. Smith, one of the most material witnesses for the defence of James Kiernan, for wounding and maiming. It appears that she has been in the habit of cruelly castigating a female dependant, whom she called her slave. She kept the poor creature frequently chained by the neck, and got the word "liar," tattooed over the forehead. She has been sentenced to a fine of 200 Rupees and to six month's imprisonment. The punishment is scarcely equal to the crime.

— Lieut. Vincent Eyre, lately one of the prisoners in Affghanistan, is the first in the field with a Narrative of the events of that painfully interesting period which elapsed between the outbreak at Cabul, and the final annihilation of our troops on the 13th January. His work was published in London in the beginning of January and is spoken of by the papers which have been received by this Mail, in terms of great commendation.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 25.

— Dr. Corbyn's Journal of Medical and Physical Science has passed under the Editorial management of Dr. Eveleigh; and the first number of the New Series has just made its appearance.

— The first instalment of the regular mail came in yesterday, but without a single newspaper. The transit of the Express across the country from Bombay has been more rapid than on any former occasion. It left Bombay on the 14th and reached Calcutta early in the morning of the 22d.

— A correspondent of the Hurkaru states, that Akbar Khan has restored to Capt. Troup, the favourite Arab horse which was taken from him. Capt. Troup wrote to Akbar for it, and it is said to have been sent back to Hindoostan.

— The Hurkaru states, that letters have been received from Sir John McNeil, forwarding authentic information of the deaths of Col. Stoddart and Arthur Conolly at Bokhara. They were, it is said, publicly beheaded in the presence of a large multitude. Capt. Conolly was offered his life on condition of turning Moosulman, but indignantly rejected the offer.

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 27.

— The arrangements which the Governor General has made for the Government of the Saugor and Nerbudda Territories, are published in the last Calcutta Gazette. It is 'root and branch work.' All the European covenanted officers who had been employed in the administration, are swept out with one stroke of the besom. The Local Corps is disbanded; and the whole of the constabulary force dismissed. Major Sleeman is Proconsul with twelve Military Assistants, to be divided into three grades, and to receive respectively 800, 600 and 500 Rupees a month. The Major is at liberty to employ any of the 'old hands,' whom he approves of. The first specimen of the Military Police is exhibited in the plan. There are to be two battalions of Military constables to be officered like the Regiments of the Line, but with a larger proportion of Native, and a smaller proportion of European, officers. So unexpected and organic a change has never been made before in the administration of any province under British rule.

— Notwithstanding the kind assurance of the Committee appointed to investigate the claims of the Union Bank on the defunct firm of Gilmore and Co. that its losses would be five, and not fifty lakhs of Rupees, and that the only inconvenience would be a slight diminution of the Dividends, the Shares have continued to descend, and are now quoted at 1010 to 1040 per share of 1000 Rupees each.

— The Hindostan Steamer has made a most extraordinary run from Galle to Aden in nine days. She reached that Port on the 4th. She was likely to be detained three days coaling at Aden, where she will not enjoy the convenience of the Company's arrangements for the shipment of coal. If she reaches Suez in eight days, as the Bombay Times conjectures, she will have performed the voyage from the Sand Heads to Suez, exclusive of stoppages, within twenty-four days.

— Dost Mahomed has at length, it seems, left the Lahore Court for Cabul. He was much pressed to remain longer, but he replied, that his son Akbar was writing to press his return. He has been received and treated as a Prince. Seven Hundred Rupees a day have been allotted to him to the time of his quitting the Seikh territories. On his departure 10,000 Rs. in money and 30,000 Rupees worth of jewels were presented to him. This is politic. Shere Singh has nothing to fear, but from the Affghans, and the danger which now threatens him from them may be delayed and possibly averted if Dost Mahomed is enlisted on his side.

— The duties of Resumption Commissioner lately in the hands of Mr. Elliott, have been distributed among the Judges of the various districts included in his jurisdiction. The business of resumption draws evidently to a close.

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 28.

— The Natives who were cheated out of their Goldmohurs by the Native Officers at the Treasury, and whom Mr. Leith and Mr. Morton assisted in recovering the money from Government, have evinced their gratitude to those gentlemen by presenting them with a piece of plate, and a hundred goldmohurs. They owed much to their Counsel, and they have nobly acquitted themselves of their obligations. But where is the gratitude of Dyal Chand Byssack, the Deputy Treasurer, who committed the fraud? What is the extent of his gratitude to his Counsel, for securing his acquittal and preventing Government from coming down on him for the money which he fraudulently took in its name? Instead of presenting a rich candelabra and a portion of the purloined goldmohurs to his Counsel for their invaluable services, he went we understand, down to Kalee Ghat, and lavished his gratitude on that goddess, to whose influence he ascribed his escape.

— The Englishman announces some changes in consequence of Mr. Pattle's approaching departure from the country. Mr. Davidson returns to the Board of Revenue. Mr. Harvey becomes a Revenue Commissioner again, and Mr. W. Brackon is placed at the head of the Customs, the office he ought by right and reason to have had when it was last vacant.

— A vessel, with 400 Coolies on board, has, it seems, been stopped by the Emigration Agent. The Englishman is indignant at the detention; but generally speaking, it is pleasing to find that the Agent of the Colony exercises such vigilance. As to the case itself, we must have the particulars before we can join in running down Capt. Rogers.

— The Englishman states, that Mutty Lall Seal, the millionaire, who has risen within the recollection of the present generation from absolute poverty to great wealth, is about to found a College, for 500 Hindoo youth, and to place the Jesuits at the head of it.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 1.

— The India Steamer arrived at Madras on Thursday evening the 16th, having been about five days and a half from the Sand Heads. She took the ground on the Pulicat shore. Her cabins, with one exception, were all engaged.

— The last Delhi Gazette states, that the Affghans are threatening the valley of Shawl, which we transferred to the Rajah of Khelat. There is every probability that they will occupy it, for the Rajah can oppose no adequate force to them. But it is very unlikely that the British Government will interfere in the smallest degree to restore it to the principality of Khelat.

— The Bombay Times, in its last commercial notices, quotes an article from the Manchester Guardian, to the effect that Sir Robert Peel had determined to admit Brazilian, slave grown sugar at 30s. the hundred weight, and to reduce the duty on East India Sugar from 21s. to 16s.

— The Star states, that the detention of the Cooly ship mentioned in the Englishman of yesterday, arose from there being no ventilation between decks, the scuttles being all shut, and the officer, paying no attention to the request made to him that they might be opened.

— The Raja Kalee Kissen, has sent some of his translations to the King of Holland, as he seems to have done to all the Kings of the earth, except to the brother of the Sun and the Moon at Pekin. His Majesty has acknowledged the receipt of them; and the Minister of the Belgian Colonies (!) has embraced the occasion to assure Raja Kalee Kissen Bahadoor of his perfect esteem. A translation of the letter is given in the Star. It is very classical. It begins thus: "The King of Pas Bas or Lower Continents," &c. Is this the Raja's own translation?

— The Steamer Vixen, with the Secretary of Legation, Col. Malcolm, bearing the ratified treaty with China, left Bombay, on the 16th instant, and would probably reach Hong Kong about the first week of March. The Bombay Times censures the Secretary for playing the Bahadoor, in the desert, to the great annoyance of the unaccredited passengers.

— His Excellency Major General Sir William Nott made his grand entry into Lucknow on the 21st of February. The King and all his Court in their magnificent dress, went out to meet the Envoy. When the parties met, Sir William stepped into His Majesty's Howda, and after the usual embrace, the whole party returned to the Baradurree Palace, where a sumptuous breakfast was laid out. After justice had been done to the viands, the King and the Envoy proceeded to the other palace to witness Elephant fights.

GENERAL ORDERS BY THE RIGHT HONOURABLE THE GOVERNOR GENERAL, N. W. P.

JUDICIAL AND REVENUE DEPARTMENT.

Camp Delhi, the 18th February, 1843.

1. The Nerbudda Sebundy corps is dissolved from the 30th of April next.

2. Such tomans of the Nerbudda Sebundy corps, as are now employed on duties, connected with the Thuggee Department, will continue to be so employed under the Officers attached to that department.

3. Major Sleeman, Commissioner and Agent to the Governor General in the Saugor and Nerbudda territories, will bring to the notice of the Governor General, the cases of such men of the Nerbudda Sebundy corps, as have been distinguished by good conduct during long service, but have ceased to be efficient soldiers.

4. Major Sleeman will particularly specify such men as, although unfit for active service, may still be capable of performing stationary duties about a cutchery, or at a thannah, or in any other appointment under the Government.

5. Captain Ludlow is temporarily attached as a supernumorary to the Thuggee Department, for employment in the Saugor and Nerbudda territories.

6. Major Sleeman will form two battalions of Military Police for the Saugor and Nerbudda territories, and will draft into these battalions such men of the Nerbudda Sebundy corps, as may be thoroughly fit for active service, and of good character.

7. Captain Macadam, 33d regiment native infantry, and Lieutenant J. D. P. Fergusson, 36th regiment native infantry, will command the 1st and 2d battalions, respectively, and will draw for such command, 200 rupees a month, in addition to their consolidated allowances, as Deputy Commissioners of the 1st and 2d class.

8. The Military Police will perform all the duties heretofore performed by the Nerbudda Sebundy corps, and by the peons, chuprassies, burkundauzes and others, attached to the Revenue and Judicial department; and all existing establishments of those departments will be gradually discharged, as Major Sleeman may consider the battalion of Police sufficiently formed to be able to undertake their several duties.

9. Each battalion will consist of twelve companies or tomans, and each of them will consist of—

1 Tomandar, at 50 rs. per mensem.
1 Jemadar, „ 30 „ „
10 Havildars, „ 12 „ „
20 Naicks, .. „ 8 „ „
80 Sepoys, .. „ 5 „ „

Two of the tomans will be considered a depot toman, and will always remain at the head-quarters of the battalion.

10. Serjeant Major William Kelly, and Quarter Master Serjeant John Michael Bruen, of the Sappers and Miners, (late serving with Broadfoot's Sappers, in Affghanistan,) are appointed Adjutants of the 1st and 2d battalions of Police in the Saugor territory.

11. Adjutant William Kelly, and Adjutant J. M. Bruen, are promoted respectively, to the rank of Conductor and Sub Conductor of Ordnance, and will be borne as supernumeraries in the Ordinance department, while they serve with the Police battalions, without prejudice to any claims they may acquire to future advancement, and with the right to the pension attached to the rank, to which they are, or may be hereafter respectively promoted.

12. The Officer in command of the Sappers and Miners, will select from amongst the volunteers, who may offer themselves out of the native commissioned, non-commissioned officers and sepoys, who served in Broadfoot's Sappers and Miners,

2 Jemadars, for Tomandars,
2 Havildars, for Jemadars,
20 Sepoys for Naicks.

13. The Officers in command of the 3d regiment Bengal native infantry.

11th ditto ditto,
13th ditto ditto,
24th ditto ditto,
50th ditto ditto,
67th ditto ditto,
42d regiment Madras native infantry,
43d ditto ditto,

now serving in Bundelkund, or in the Saugor and Nerbudda territories, will select from amongst the volunteers, who may offer themselves from their respective regiments,

1 Jemadar, for Tomandar,
1 Havildar, for Jemadar,
10 Sepoys, for Naicks.

14. The Officers commanding the 40th regiment Bengal native infantry,

20th ditto Bombay ditto, will select in the same manner 5 Sepoys, for Naicks, from the detachments of their regiments now employed in the Bundelkund and Nerbudda territories, respectively.

15. The Officer commanding the Bhopaul contingent, will permit Lieut. Fergusson to select from among such volunteers as may offer themselves from that corps,

1 Jemadar, for Tomandar,
1 Havildar, for Jemadar,
10 Sepoys, for Naicks,

to serve in the 2d battalion of Police, to be commanded by that Officer.

16. The Officers commanding the

2d regiment native infantry,
16th ditto ditto,
42d ditto ditto,
35th ditto ditto,
33d ditto ditto,
regiment of Kelat-i-Ghilzie,

73d ditto ditto,

will, in like manner, select

1 Jemadar, for Tomandar,
1 Havildar, for Jemadar,
10 Sepoys, for Naicks.

17. The several native commissioned officers and sepoys, who may so take service in the Police battalions, will be borne on the roll of their respective corps, as supernumeraries, and will retain whatever claims to pension they would have had, had they remained with their present corps.

18. The commissioned and non-commissioned officers and sepoys, who may be transferred to the Police battalions from the regiments now in the camp at Delhi, will proceed to Saugor, under the command of Adjutants Kelly and Bruen.

19. His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief is requested to nominate a Serjeant Major and a Quarter Master Serjeant, to each battalion of Police.

20. The Police battalions will be armed with rifles, and the Military Board are directed to transmit to Allahabad the requisite number of arms of that description.

THE HINDOSTAN STEAMER.

We yesterday gave an extract of a Letter from a Passenger by the Hindostan, referring partially to her progress since she left Calcutta. We are now enabled to lay before our readers the following general result.

She left Calcutta at 10 A. M. on the 14th ultimo, but did not quit the floating-light until the 17th, at 1 P. M., owing, we believe, to delay in waiting for Passengers, and some over-carefulness in respect to water.

She arrived at Madras on the 20th, at 8-30 P. M. or in 3 days 7½ hours, averaging, supposing she went as the crow flies, a little more than 8 miles per hour. She remained at Madras 25 hours, leaving at 9 P. M., on the 21st, and she arrived at Galle at 1 P. M., on the 24th, or in 64 hours, averaging 8*k*. 1*f*. per hour.

She was detained two days at Galle, leaving it at 30 minutes past noon, on the 26th, and she arrived at Aden at 3 A. M. on the 4th instant, or in the short space of 8 days 14½ hours, averaging according to the distance or in a straight line a little more than 10*k*. 3*f*. per hour.

The following are her runs per log, from Galle to Aden:—

| From 30 minutes past | | Dist. | Average per K. hour |
|---|---|---|---|
| noon, 26th Jan. to noon | 27th... | 207 | 8...6½ |
| 27th „ to „ | 28th... | 227 | 9...3¾ |
| 28th „ to „ | 29th... | 225 | 9...3 |
| 29th „ to „ | 30th... | 244 | 10...1½ |
| 30th „ to „ | 31st... | 263 | 10...7⅞ |
| 31st „ to „ | 1st Feb. | 270 | 11...2 |
| 1st „ to „ | 2nd... | 265 | 11...0½ |
| 2nd „ to „ | 3rd... | 278 | 11...4⅔ |
| 3rd „ to 3 A. M. or 15 hours, | 4th | 170 | 11...2⅔ |

Total....2,140 miles.

She has steamed from the floating light to Aden, a distance of 3,394 miles in 340 hours, averaging throughout the whole distance nearly 9½ knots.

It will be seen, that the average increased greatly after leaving Galle—owing, we believe, to an improvement in the quality of the coal. When, therefore, the supply of the best English coal is received from the Company at home, which is daily expected, and she is supplied throughout therewith, the general average may be taken at very nearly 10*k*. 4*f*. per hour. This is great going; and would enable her to steam to Suez from the Sand Heads, barring stoppages, in 20 days. As it is, there is no doubt, that notwithstanding two days' stoppage at Galle, and the same at Aden, she will reach Suez in 26 days from the floating-light. The Cleopatra having on her late voyage from Suez to Bombay, been 23 days! Here then what is to prevent our mails, when they are turned into that route coming to Calcutta generally in 42 days? They now reach Suez from London in 16; and, we think, it will be found, that during next S. W. monsoon, or on her return from the next voyage, the Hindostan will reach Calcutta in 24 days, making 40 from London. When have we had even the express in that time? While the present Bombay Steamers run in competition with the Hindostan, we shall have her here some time before the express. If proper Steamers were put on that line, she would arrive generally with the express; or it may be a day later, but then she will bring all our mails.

Thus far we have got; we now want the line completed by the introduction of the remaining Steamers of the class of the Hindostan, in order that the mails may be conveyed by them.—Hurkaru.

MEDICAL DEPARTMENT, MADRAS.

The question which has been so long before the public of the appointment of a Superintending Surgeon consequent on the vacancy occasioned by the retirement of Mr. Superintending Surgeon Wylie, and which, general report said was to be conferred upon Mr. Surgeon Macdonnel to the prejudice of others his seniors, has been set at rest by the promotion of Mr. Surgeon Williams, as announced in the official of Friday evening.—Though the appointment has been conferred upon the individual who must be looked upon as legitimately entitled thereto, from his standing in the service, that something very different was intended and would have taken place but for the observations it gave birth to, hardly admits of a doubt;—we ourselves said very little on the subject, and we were prompted thereto by a conviction, that the Marquis would not commit so great an act of injustice to the service generally, and the individuals in particular who would have been immediately affected thereby, as such a proceeding as the one generally understood to have been contemplated involved: and particularly after his attention had been called to the subject: the delay, however, in filling up the appointment, we will not deny, did occasionally make us feel somewhat uncomfortable, which, the confidence with which certain individuals expressed themselves as to their opinion of the ultimate result, did not tend to remove or even diminish—all further speculation or doubt on the subject has at last however been set at rest, and in the way we had all along looked forward to, discouraging as appearances now and again have been, and confidence as some few have again and again expressed themselves on the subject.—We would not have those in authority to be disturbed by every varied opinion given utterance to by the press but we must be permitted to say, it would betray great want of good sense, judgment and description, for them, at all times, to disregard its admonitions and advice.—Madras Examiner, Feb. 13.

CHINA ASSOCIATION.

The following, extracted from a private letter, is the reply from the Foreign Office to the letter of East India and China Association, relative to the treaty with China. We invite the especial attention of our readers to this document, and shall probably offer some observations on the subject generally in our next. We think that certain passages of it seem to indicate an intention on the part of the British Government to take measures for the suppression of the Opium trade:—

Foreign Office, January 3, 1843.

To SIR GEORGE LARPENT, BT.

SIR,—I am directed by the Earl of Aberdeen to acknowledge the receipt of the letter which you addressed to his Lordship on the 31st December, on behalf of the Committee of the East India and China Association, requesting to be made acquainted with such provisions of the Treaty signed by Sir Henry Pottinger with the Chinese Plenipotentiaries on the 29th August, as may have reference to the regulation of the future commercial intercourse between this country and China. His Lordship directs me to state to you in reply, that although Her Majesty has been pleased to ratify the Treaty, signed by Sir Henry Pottinger, it would be inconsistent with the general practice officially to make known the contents of that Treaty, until Her Majesty's ratification shall have been exchanged against the ratification of the Emperor of China, as the Treaty cannot be considered to be formally concluded until that exchange has taken place.

Lord Aberdeen, however, regrets the less that he is precluded from giving you officially the information, that you request, as the accounts contained in the public prints of the late negociations in China are substantially correct, and his Lordship desires me to state to you that Her Majesty's Government trust that the stipulations of the Treaty and the arrangements which have yet to be made for giving full effect to it will place the intercourse between the two countries on a satisfactory footing. Her Majesty's Government will spare no exertion to protect and promote the legal trade of Her Majesty's subjects resorting to China; but Her Majesty's Government feel that the advantages which Her Majesty's subjects may derive from the trade with China must, after all, depend in a great measure, on the manner in which that trade shall be conducted by the parties who may engage in it. Her Majesty's Government would therefore call the attention of all such parties to the expediency of impressing upon those whom they may employ, that, at the commencement of the new era which is about to open to British trade in China, it is of the utmost importance that the feelings and prejudices of the Chinese authorities, and people should, as far as possible, be respected, and that every endeavour should be made to conciliate the good will of the inhabitants of the country, and to inspire them with a favourable opinion of the British character.

I am, Sir, your most obedient humble servant,

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.

BIBLE SOCIETY.

To the Editor of the Friend of India.

SIR,—In your remarks anent the resolution of the Committee of the Auxiliary Bible Society, regarding the spelling of the name of Jesus, putting aside the specific question discussed in the Committee's paper published by you, you object to the course pursued both by the Auxiliary and the Parent Society in similar cases. The principles advocated in the masterly paper put forth by the Auxiliary, you have not touched, and therefore it may be assumed you have no objections to the spelling proposed; but the general question, whether the Bible Society is bound to publish translations of the Scriptures of which they cannot approve is the one you have taken up. As this is a question of much importance, and as the members of the Bible Committee generally differ from you, I hope you will in fairness permit me to make a few remarks of the subject. A candid and honest discussion of the principles involved in the question would, I am persuaded, tend to remove much misunderstanding, and to disseminate more correct views regarding such matters. The articles and speeches which I have read condemnatory of the course which the Bible Society have conscientiously pursued in this matter, are much more distinguished for a display of party feeling than for a calm and dispassionate discussion of the principles involved in the question at issue; indeed I have not yet met with a single writer on the other side, who has attempted to grapple with the real difficulties of the question. The simple question divested of all the obscurities in which it has been too often involved, is, have not the Committee of the Bible Society a right to refuse to publish at the expense of the Society, any translation of the Scriptures, with which they are not satisfied.

The views which you and those who agree with you, advocate, seem to go the length of showing that the Committee of the Bible Society are bound to publish any or every version of the Scriptures offered them on the responsibility of the translator. If this position be correct in principle, it is both proper and expedient in practice.—Let us see then what it would involve, according to this view, the Society are bound to publish a Unitarian version, a Roman Catholic version, or an Arian version of the Scriptures. That is, they would be bound to publish versions of the word of God, which they believe to be subversive of religion, and opposed to truth. But I may be told that the principles you maintain do not imply so much, and that you would not go the length of sanctioning the publication of such versions of the Scriptures by the Bible Society. Be it so, where then is the line of distinction to be drawn, where is the boundary to be fixed between truth and error? And if this be fixed, and if the general principles upon which every version ought to be made (no easy matter by the way) be defined who are to determine whether any particular version be conformable to such principles? Who are the judges in this case? There are two parties concerned; the Committee and the translator. If the translator be the judge, of course he will judge favourably of his own version, whatever vagaries or errors it may contain, and the Bible Society would become the publishing "hacks" of the translators, and the medium through which the crudities, not to say positive errors, of all kinds of translators, are scattered abroad.

Could any number of pious and upright men ever be found to act on such a Committee? Would men of conscience thus consent not only to become the publishing "hacks," of every translator, but wilfully lend themselves to disseminate what they believed to be error? But it may be said, the Committee should not be required to publish positive error at the bidding of every translator. The question here recurs. Who are the judges in this matter. If the Society at whose expense and with whose sanction a translation of the Scriptures is published, may not through its officials, judge of the correctness of such translation, who may or who ought? As to how far a Committee ought to proceed in pronouncing upon the correctness of a translation, is a question of degrees, but even here the Committee are the only judges, (so long as they act in unison with the views of the Society which they represent,) as to what they consider erroneous or otherwise. If they are not the proper judges of even this subordinate question, I shall feel much obliged by your pointing out who are or who ought to be? It is true, that the Committee of the Bible Society, like all other bodies of men, are liable to error, but such liability assuredly does not take away their right of determining what they ought to sanction or not, with the funds and imprimatur of the Bible Society.

The Bible Society was formed for the purpose of disseminating the pure word of God in various languages; to carry on their operations it appoints a committee of its members, it is the duty of this committee to see that the funds are properly expended, i. e. in the dissemination of the pure word of God; who is to judge in this case if the parties who are appointed to this important office are not?

Whether a committee judges correctly in any specific given case, is a different question—it is one which ought to be discussed on its own independent merits. I have not touched on any specific case, because you seem to me to deny the right in general of the committee to judge in any case, and I have purposely avoided the questio vexata, regarding βαπτιζω, because although you have the rare merit of being collected and cool on most subjects, you seem very apt to get into hot water by the least approach to this. In conclusion, let me propose for your consideration the following case: "A translator presents a version of the Scriptures to the Committee of the Bible Society has that Committee a right to examine into the faithfulness of such a version and into its conformity with the principles of the Society? If such right be confined within certain limits, what are those limits and who are to fix them? The translator or the Society is represented by the Committee? An honest and candid discussion of this subject will, I am persuaded, be acceptable to many of your readers, and I shall be happy to see some light thrown upon it by those who like yourself seem to deny the right of the Bible Committee to determine what versions they ought or ought not to patronise.

A MEMBER OF THE BIBLE SOCIETY.

COLLEGE STUDIES.

To the Editor of the Friend of India.

SIR,—The proposal you bring forward in your paper of the 23d February, for adopting the Oordoo and Bengalee Dialects as the two languages in which students of the College of Fort William shall be required to qualify themselves, to the exclusion of Persian and Hindee, has much shew of reason, in as much as the two languages you advocate are undoubtedly spoken by large masses of our subjects. But I think the public has not (whatever the Government may have) sufficient information before them to enable them to form a safe judgment on this question. Supposing then that our Rulers are no better informed than ourselves, (a very reasonable supposition and universally adopted now-a-days—especially by the newspapers,) I would suggest to them to consider and be fully informed on the following points, before important changes are attempted.

1st. The Oordoo language admits of many varieties. That of Muttra no doubt differs much from that of Agra—both differ from that of Goruckpore. Again, that which is used in the Courts is full of the "exploded Persian," in fact is almost made up of vocables of this language, with little more than a few Verbs and Particles of Hindoostanee. It is also unintelligible to the very great majority of Hindoos who live beyond five miles from cities and large stations.

2nd. The Official Bengalee language also is (as may be ascertained by looking at any Magistrate or Collector's Ishtihar in the Government Gazette) composed in the proportion of about four-fifths of Persian Vocables.

3rd. The Persian, as appears from what I have stated above, enters considerably into the formation of common Oordoo and Official Bengalee; and almost entirely constitutes the Official Oordoo.

4th. The Hindee is spoken and written (in the Nagree character) almost exclusively by all Hindoos and many Mahomedans, who live at any distance from cities and large stations—it, in fact, and not the Hindoostanee or Oordoo, is the great popular dialect of the mass of our subjects in Upper Hindoostan.

If the above four suggestions have any good foundation, then it becomes pretty evident, that the languages to be desired in a Civilian required for employment in the Upper Provinces are decidedly Persian and Hindee—inasmuch as the latter is the language of the greatest number and the most interesting (and interested) portion of the population—the former is extremely useful and almost indispensible for official purposes—and both together go to form the Oordoo, the varieties of the dialects of which will offer no difficulty to one acquainted with its constituent parts.

And again, for a Civilian in Bengal, the Persian and Bengalee seem the most desirable. About the latter there can of course be no dispute, the latter, in spite of all the "explosion" appears to hold its ground in practice (and very naturally) in all official matters, and it is desirable for qualifying the Civilian to speak with acceptance to the Mahomedan Omlah and population of towns, and for enabling him to avoid those ludicrous errors which are constantly committed by mere Bengalee scholars.

Your Oordoo-Bengalee Scheme has certainly the merit of simplicity, and would no doubt be very acceptable to the Teachers and Examiners of the College of Fort William, as well as to the Students, as students—but I hope I may venture, without being charged with bigotry, to doubt its efficiency in turning out Civilians well qualified as to languages. It might answer well enough for Bengal, but for the Upper Provinces it appears decidedly objectionable. What is the use of teaching Bengalee to a man who is to administer affairs for 20 or 30 years in the Agra Presidency? It may be answered in order to qualify him also for employment in Bengal, should Government require his services there. But this surely is a very laborious and clumsy way of answering the purpose. As to the neglect of the study of Bengalee in College, Government undoubtedly have the power of rectifying that without burthening more than half the service with useless studies and depriving them at the same time of such knowledge as is really useful. However, whichever system is the best, one thing is evident, that Government ought to make it clear, that in selecting they are guided by the opinions of men who are qualified, by their acquirements, by their practical acquaintance with the various bearings of the subject, and by the largeness and impartiality of their views, to form a sound judgment on this important subject. Men not in any way likely to raise the cry of "Nothing like Leather."

The public has yet no grounds for knowing, through the medium of its oracle the Newspaper press, that their rulers have taken these preliminary steps, therefore said Public bites the Thumbnail of reflexion with the Teeth of dubitation in the person of its humble representative.

PUSEYISM.

To the Editor of the Friend of India.

SIR,—Don't you think that the Anti-Puseyite extracts which you give in your paper of yesterday's date have a great tendency, under pretence of attacking Puseyism, which is very unpopular in India, though it may not be the worst religion in the world for all that, to throw odium on the peculiarities of the Church of England. I question if there is a sentiment in the circular to the Parishioners of Christ Church Hoxon (headed Puseyite activity) that ninety-nine out of an hundred Anglicans are not taught from their cradle to believe—and with respect to the extract headed a "Puseyite Church is it a new thing to call Charles the First a martyr? I for one was always taken to Church on the 30th January, and it was the only Saint's day on which I was—which day you will always find marked in the Oxford Almanacs, as Charles King and Martyr. It is some years now since Dr. Hook proclaimed in the Chapel Royal that the Church of England boasted the only Royal Martyr in the Calendar. I should be sorry to think that Vandyke's famous picture of him, which I fancy was the original of most that exist—(you will correct me if I am wrong) did not exist till after the Restoration or we should undervalue one of the finest scenes in Woodstock. Is "I. H. C." an error of the illiterate writer, who so freely criticizes divines and scholars, or of the Compositors? I am aware of the difference between extracts and leading articles, but as, you have an high character as the only unbigoted Religious Journal in India, and are much esteemed and respected, you should be careful to what effusions from other pens you give your sanction.

I give my own, though you will probably consider them very Papistical initials.

PORT PHILLIP.

To the Editor of the Friend of India.

SIR,—Being desirous of attracting a greater share of attention to the Colony of Port Phillip, which I have lately visited, I propose giving you a sketch of the place, with liberty to insert it in your paper if you think fit to do so.

The climate of Port Phillip is very changeable; the warm weather commences in the middle of October, and last till the middle of March; hot winds from the North occasionally blow for two, three or even four days together in November, December and January, but they are routed in the afternoon by squalls from the South, which, in a few minutes, bring down the thermometer sometimes as much as 30 degrees. These sudden and great changes would seem to be adverse to health, especially in cases in which preservation of an equal temperature of the skin is important; nevertheless the people are healthy and no ill effects appear to result from the sudden transition from heat to cold. October is warm, so are February and March, but the atmosphere in these months is cooled by frequent showers which render the weather agreeable. In the remaining months a great deal of rain falls and the weather is most delightful. Greater travellers than I am have told me that in no part of the world have they derived so much pleasure from the atmosphere as they have from the pure and exhilarating air of Australia. There are several frosty nights in the year and not above three or four in which blankets are superfluous. Persons in Port Phillip who have been in America, state the climate of the former to be far superior to that of the United States or Canada. The heat of its summer though longer, is not worse than that of New York and in Australia there is no real winter. On the whole, though Port Phillip is not the Paradise which the Emigration Agents describe it to be, still, taking the climate from the 1st of January to the 31st of December, I do not suppose that it is excelled by that of any country in the world.

For agriculture Port Phillip is unquestionably the best part of Australia; there is some land of the best and most fertile description; there is a fair proportion of useful land, and none which is absolutely worthless. The Western Port District (see the map) is generally bad and swampy from Wilson's promontory to Melbourne. The land around Melbourne and extending to Geelong on the East is generally of second quality; it is an indurated clay formation of considerable thickness reposing on lime-stone. This is elevated into ranges at Geelong where there is good land extending at intervals to Portland Bay. Behind Cape Northumberland near Portland Bay there are thousands of acres of land of the finest quality fit for the plough. The newly discovered country, Gipp's Land, is highly spoken of and has the advantage of being well watered. Moreover a harbour, "Port Albert," has been found in it which is available for coasting vessels. Generally speaking the Port Phillip District is badly watered, and much fine land is at present useless on this account. The beautiful lime-stone downs, between Geelong and the Heads, at the entrance of the Port Phillip Bay, are at present unoccupied from want of water; as the Population increases and labour becomes cheaper wells and tanks will be made to supply this necessary of life. The minimum Government price of land not within five miles of certain localities is 1£ per acre.

As a grazing country the district of Port Phillip is perhaps unequalled—Horses, cattle and sheep thrive there wonderfully—The horses fed on grass do work which no grass-fed horse in England could do—The sheep and oxen are beautifully fat and it is acknowledged, that better grass-fed meat is killed in Melbourne, than is to be seen, grass-fed, in London.

Agriculture is advancing rapidly in Port Phillip. Wheat, oats, barley and tobacco are cultivated with success. Hops are now being tried. The fly which infects the Hop vines in England, and is often so destructive as to aid powerfully in rendering Hops an article of much speculation there, is unknown in Port Phillip, and there is every prospect of this valuable plant being successfully cultivated. There is also probability of wine becoming an article of export. Six vine dressers from the Dijon country (Cote D'Or) arrived at Melbourne a few months ago. They have rented 600 acres of land in the Barabool Hills, near Geelong and are sanguine of success. If they succeed they are to be followed by a large party of their friends from Switzerland.

The export of wool from Port Phillip in 1841 amounted to 1,578,351lbs. and salt beef is beginning to be exported. Some prepared by the newly established Melbourne Salting Company was tried in the vessel in which I returned to India, after we had crossed the line, and it was considered by the Captain and all the passengers as fresher and finer, far superior to the very good Irish and Dantzic beef which we had on board.

Two miles inland, North of the Port of Port Phillip, which is available for Merchant vessels, but has not sufficient depth of water for an 80 gun Ship, stands the Town of Melbourne to which cargo is conveyed by Lighters up the Yarra Yarra River. Melbourne is now a large place, and considering that in 1836, it was a Gum tree forest, without a human being except a few naked savages, it is a truly wonderful place, but from its not being so great an outlet for produce, I do not think that it will ever rival Sydney. It has two Steam Mills—and Steam boats daily—several Churches, and all the appearance of a growing Town. The houses are generally small, some are built of wood, which must be expected in a new place where labour has been very high, but there are many fine houses and some few as good as in any Provincial Town in England. It stands on 300 acres as laid off by Government, and with its suburbs has a population of not less than 8000 and perhaps as many as 10,000 persons. The Town is disagreeable and generally either dusty or muddy—without sewers and drains and the streets are full of holes. It is also unhealthy and will I suppose be so until properly drained, being very crowded from the quantity of land put into the market by the Government, being very small. The Minimum Government price of land in the Township of Melbourne has been raised to 300£ per half acre. The allotments are of ½ an acre each and the land sales take place at long intervals determined by the Government. First rate business situations have been resold at enormous prices, and the price of the very few now unbuilt on may be quoted at 20£ per foot of frontage—with a depth of 80 or 100 feet. These same allotments were bought in 1837 at from 50 to 100£ per half acre. No available mineral wealth has been as yet discovered.

There is a splendid coal mine at Cape Liptrap about 18 miles East of Cape Woolamai (the Eastern Entrance of Western Port) but it is at present useless, as there is no anchorage and no ship would dare to be embayed off so dangerous a coast, with a constant succession of gales from the South and West, and drawing coals 18 miles for embarkation at Western Port at the present price of fuel would not pay.

Australia with a population of not more than 150,000 Europeans, convict and free, was some years ago violently excited by the high price of wool, by the large sums sent by the Australasian and Union Banks and private individuals, and by the demand for stock in Southern Australia which purchased largely with good English money; stock rose to exorbitant prices and an insane spirit of speculation which saw only progressive prosperity and apprehended no fall in the price of wool and no diminution of the influx of capital took possession of the people. Port Philip was seen to be a fine country and it sprung up like a mushroom. Settlers—many of them men of wealth did not hesitate to extend the accumulated savings of years in the purchase of land, which has as yet yielded them no commensurate return. Sheep and cattle owners borrowed, anticipating the sale of their wool and stock at the high prices then prevailing, to join in this fatal system of speculation. The price of wool and therefore of sheep and consquently that of cattle fell, and the engagements contracted by numbers could not be fulfilled. The sheep and cattle-holder indebted largely to the merchant for stores and advances on wool could not pay his creditor, who in his turn could not meet the demands on him and both became involved in difficulties, which overtrading to a great extent had, I may observe, much aggravated. The Banks which had discounted as freely as they could safely do, and indeed with a freeness injurious to the real capitalist entering the market, as the quantity of paper discounted raised every thing to a fictitious value, of course required greater security as accommodation bills multiplied and risk increased—this at last could not be found —bankruptcies ensued. Stock and lands were thrown into the market beyond any demand for them. Prices fell to the augmentation of previous difficulties, further bankruptcies followed and the present state of depression under which New South Wales is labouring, is the grievous consequence of the mania.

But the true value of the Colony of Port Phillip is not to be judged of from its present difficulties. Its resources are only now beginning to be developed. It has a climate in which Europeans can live with comfort and in which they multiply extraordinarily. It has thousands of acres of fine land unsold in situations available for cultivation. It has soils which in other parts of the world of very similar climate produce excellent wines. It has a million of sheep—many horses and cattle, and can support many more in a state of nature—a scattered population of 25,000 persons cannot perform miracles, but it has worked wonders—even present difficulties will subserve to future advancement, attracting capital with emigrants from other shores, and Port Phillip will, I think, become the chief of the Australian Colonies. The Geelong and Portland Bay Districts, especially, will soon be thickly peopled along the coast, and perhaps become the cheapest country in the world —with no taxes—sugar, from Manilla and India —tea from China—meat at 2½ per lb. and fruit and vegetables in great abundance.

H. STAINFORTH,

RELIGIOUS.

PUSEYITE MONASTERY.—The Oxford Chronicle publishes a circular, "addressed, in a printed form, to those members of the clerical body throughout England who are supposed to be favourable to the profligate and treacherous attempt to 'unprotestantize' the Establishment," and headed "Revival of Monastic and Conventional Institutions on a plan adapted to the Exigencies of the Reformed Catholic Church in England." The objects of such an institution the circular pronounces to be—

"1. To widen and deepen the legitimate influence of the Church; 2. To promote and conduct Christian education upon Church principles; 3. To afford a retreat for the contemplative, the bereaved, the destitute, and the straitened; 4. To cherish a spirit of devotion, charity, humility, and obedience; 5. To give better opportunities of acquiring self-knowledge, and exercising penitence; 6. To promote simplicity and godly sincerity in the intercourse of life; 7. To revive plainness and self denial in diet, dress, furniture, personal attendance, &c.; 8. To form habits of retirement, silence, and recollection."

The means—

"1. A system by which the superabundance of the wealthy may be made available to supply the wants of the poorer members; 2. Daily public devotion, and frequent communion, agreeably to the orders of the Church; 3. Strict observance of the festivals, fasts, &c. prescribed by the Book of Common Prayer; 4. A rule for dress, diet, furniture, recreations, &c.; 5. Appointed times for silence and subjects for meditation; 6. Corporal works of mercy; 7. Exercises of penitence and obedience; 8. Bodily and mental labour, particularly in educating the young, composing works to meet the necessities of the Church, working for the poor, and assisting in the various duties of the Establishment."

There should be "no vows, but a solemn declaration and engagement of obedience to the superior, and of compliance with the rules of the institution during residence." The Oxford Chronicle says that the plan is already in operation at Littlemore, three miles from Oxford; Mr. Newman being the founder and president.—London Mail.

MR. MACKINNON'S HEALTH OF TOWNS BILL is exciting a greater degree of interest amongst the Dissenting bodies generally than any measure that has been proposed for a long time. They do well to bestir themselves, for it is the most insidious movement on the part of the clergy that has been made for a long time. Although his name is attached to it, it is whispered that Mr. Mackinnon is not so much the framer of the proposed Bill as the Bishop of London. Under pretence of improving the health of the public, provision is made for securing to the clergymen of every parish, on every interment which may take place, such amount of fees as the Bishop of the diocese shall fix, and this whether or no he perform the funeral service. He may decline the duty, but he is still to secure the fee. In the Hackney Church-rate case, the scale which rules that parish was produced in evidence, and in giving judgment on the case, Dr. Lushington referred to the above clause in the following terms:—"Why, that is palpably illegal from the beginning to the end!" This opinion of the Judge of their own Court should teach the clergy and Mr. Mackinnon to use a moderate degree of prudence in urging their pretensions.—Morning Advertiser.

CHINA.—Resolutions of the Directors of the London Missionary Society, adopted 8th Dec. 1842.—I. That, with feelings of ardent thankfulness to the God of all grace, the Directors of the London Missionary Society review the measures commenced by their honoured fathers, nearly forty years since, and prosecuted with undeviating constancy by their successors in office, for the introduction of the blessings of Christianity into the empire of China;—with recollections of hallowed pleasure they record the names and labours of Drs. Morrison and Milne, and their faithful coadjutors, who, amidst gigantic difficulties and discouragements, persevered to the end of their course in their work of faith and labour of love for the salvation of China;—with devout satisfaction, they contemplate the accomplishment of that mighty enterprise, devised and principally accomplished by the disinterested and indefatigable Morrison—the translation of the Holy Scriptures into the language of the many millions of that idolatrous empire;—nor can they fail justly to appreciate that invaluable production of his persevering literary toil, the Chinese Dictionary, by which the future acquisition of that difficult language has been so greatly facilitated; and, finally, with peculiar pleasure, the Directors reflect, that, in the later years of the Society's operations, (guided and stimulated by the example of their predecessors,) the gratifying duty has been assigned to themselves of sending forth a goodly band of faithful Missionaries, who, by laborious and persevering application, are now qualified to make known to the Chinese, in their own tongue, the wonderful works of God.

II. That, reviewing these protracted preparatory labours, sustained by humble hope and persevering prayer, the Directors cannot but invite the church of Christ throughout the world, and the friends of the London Missionary Society in particular, to unite in grateful adoration to the God of Missions for the termination of war with China, and for the greatly enlarged facilities secured by the Treaty of Peace, for the introduction of the multiplied advantages and spiritual blessings of Christianity into vast and populous regions, sealed for past ages against the servants of the only true God, and for the bright prospects presented to our confidence, of the ultimate conversion of China to the faith of Christ.

III. That, impelled by a sense of the additional obligations thus imposed by the providence of God, the Directors solemnly pledge themselves to employ all practicable means for increasing the strength and efficiency of their Chinese Missions, and for adding to the number of the labourers already in the field; fully assured that such enlarged efforts will be sanctioned by the unanimous concurrence of the Society's friends, and generously sustained by their zeal, liberality, and prayers.

In accordance with the sentiments thus deliberately expressed, the Directors have already adopted measures for the removal of the Anglo-Chinese College from Malacca, (distant about fifteen hundred miles from China) to the Island of Hong Kong. To that station the printing presses and various Missionary apparatus will also be transferred; while a part of our Missionary brethren will be located on the island, and the remainder will proceed to such of the Chinese cities, opened for commerce by the treaty of peace, as may appear most eligible.

The Directors, however, are not only anxious that the brethren already in the field should be employed with the greatest measure of efficiency, but, deeply sensible of the inadequacy of their present resources to meet the opening prospects, they have determined to adopt the best measures for sending forth, during the ensuing two years, ten or twelve additional Missionaries for China, with a view of entering upon stations which the present limited number must leave unsupplied.

In adopting these practical measures, which still fall far short of the urgency of the occasion, the Directors cast themselves with confidence on the generous support of the Society's faithful friends. The expenditure of the Institution has for several years exceeded its receipts, and the outlay required in strengthening and extending the Chinese Missions will involve a very considerable increase. Yet the Directors cannot apprehend from their constituents the charge of imprudence of presumption, although they may somewhat transgress the precise rules of arithmetical calculation; on the contrary, had they remained inactive, or had they done less for an object of such magnitude, they would have dreaded the charge of coldness and apathy at a moment when ardour and exertion were loudly demanded.

A Special Subscription, to meet the enlarged and unavoidable expenditure contemplated, has already been commenced, to which the Directors most earnestly invite the liberal contributions of their friends: they intend to adopt forthwith the best means for presenting the claims of China to the Christian public in the metropolis and throughout the country; and humbly trusting in Him whose glorious kingdom they are anxious to extend, they anticipate the support of His willing people, and the sanction of His Holy Spirit.

Signed on behalf of the Directors,

ARTHUR TIDMAN, }

BIOGRAPHICAL NOTICE OF GESENIUS.—We have already announced the decease of this great scholar, who, for the last thirty years, has enjoyed an unrivalled reputation as the facile princeps of Hebrew philologists. The following brief notice of his writings will probably be acceptable to many of our readers: we translate it from the Semeur.

The celebrated Hebraist, Gesenius, Professor of Theology at Halle, has just died at the age of fifty-six. It is to this learned man, pre-eminently, that the study of Hebrew owes the new start which it has taken in Germany during the last thirty years. He is the Author of a great grammatical work on the Hebrew language, of a history of the Hebrew language and writings, of a Dictionary, originally published in two volumes, and since abridged by himself, in which form it has reached a fourth edition, and, finally, of a small elementary Grammar, which appeared in 1813, and of which the thirteenth edition has seen the light in the course of the present year. This is the Grammar which, in Germany, is generally used in the upper classes of the gymnasia. To replace his first Dictionary in two volumes, Gesenius had commenced, in 1829, the publication of a Thesaurus Linguæ Hebraicæ in quarto. The first part of the third and last volume of this great work appeared a few months ago. Gesenius is also the Author of a Commentary on Isaiah, in three volumes 8vo. in which he warmly disputes the authenticity of several portions of the book contained in the Bible under the name of that Prophet, and especially all the second part from chapter xl. Latterly, he had brought under a learned investigation the Samaritan Pentateuch; and his last studies were employed upon the monuments of the Phenician language.

As a Hebraist, Gesenius had for a long time enjoyed an almost exclusive authority; but, for the last ten years, a new grammatical system, that of Ewald, has come into rivalry with his, and disputed with him the pre-eminence. Hitherto, however, this competition has been confined to the sphere of erudition and the higher class of teaching: in that of elementary study, the simplicity of method and clearness of exposition which distinguish Gesenius, have maintained him in the first rank.

As a theologian, Gesenius belonged to the Rationalist school, of which he was one of the principal representatives. The attacks, not simply bold in spirit, but of an unworthy character as to the form, which, in his lectures, he was accustomed to make upon certain narratives of the Old Testament, drew down upon him, in 1828, some severe censures in the Berlin Evangelical Gazette. Since the appearance of those articles, which were directed at once against him and his colleague Wegscheider, and which raised in Germany a warm discussion of the right of Rationalism to occupy the chairs of the Divinity Professorships, Gesenius became more reserved. Although, at Halle, the influence of Rationalism has almost entirely ceased, Gesenius continued to draw round his chair numerous students, while Wegscheider, formerly quite as well attended, has now no more than some fifteen pupils. Gesenius was still lecturing in the month of July last. About the same time, he had the pleasure of welcoming his friend De Wette, and of affording him the occasion of making a noble declaration in favour of historical Christianity. He was not destined to see the recommencement of the course.—Ibid.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The sale of the metal of the great equatorial instrument, made for the Kensington Observatory by Messrs. Troughton and Simms, took place on the 21st, at Sir J. South's, the astronomer, at Camden-hill, Kensington. It was divided into fragments, and originally cost 800l. The amount realised did not transpire.

A quantity of bones of the bear, hyena, hippopotamus, rhinoceros, ox-deer, and elephant, have been discovered in a quarry on Durdham Down, Bristol; and the peculiarity of the circumstance is, that they were found in a fissure only, which, as far as can be ascertained, extends a very considerable depth lower than the workmen have yet gone. This is not the case in other places, where the bones are all found in caverns, which would appear in some measure to refute the theory of certain philosophers, viz. that these caverns were the resort of the hyena or tiger, where they dragged in and devoured their prey, and afterwards died in the same cave.

Professor Geyer, who was charged with the examination of the papers contained in the mysterious cases deposited at the University of Upsal by King Gustavus, has made his report of their contents. The chief papers are—1. The memoirs of Gustavus, written by himself, and commenced in 1765, when he was only 19 years of age. They contain important observations on the revolution of 1772, and on the two preceding reigns. 2. The history of the house of Vasa, which, says Professor Geyer, displays distinguished talent. 3. The plan of the form of government of 1772, and a plan for the regulation of the Diet of 1778.

The building of national schools for the education of the children of the poor in the principles of the established church, appears of late to proceed as rapidly as the building of new churches. There are several national schools in the course of erection in Bethnal-green parish; and a very large building for the education of 500 children is now in course of erection immediately behind the new church in Arbour-square, Stepney.

The Bishop of Winchester lately interdicted the performance of a concert for a charitable purpose in St. Saviour's Church, Southwark, on the ground that no such performance should take place in a sacred edifice. He wrote, however, to the superintending committee at St. Saviour's, to ascertain what they calculated as the amount likely to be realised by the intended performance of sacred music, and on receiving their reply that they expected between 150l. and 200l. he immediately transmitted a cheque on his bankers for the larger sum, stating that he would not allow the cause of charity to suffer by his conscientious scruples.—The Metropolitan Anti-Corn-law Association have resolved to adopt in the Metropolis the plan employed by the League in other places for the collection of the new 50,000l. fund.—There is a grand "split" already in the National Complete Suffrage Conference, which is tumbling to pieces at the outset of its career.—At the late meeting at Birmingham, the Chartists waged successful battle with Mr. Sturge for the possession of his conference. No sooner was it opened, than they came forward as the obstructors of scrutiny into "controverted elections," some of their votes being threatened with extinction. Next, although the Bill prepared by Mr. Sturge's council and the Charter were admitted to be the same in essential points, a very warm debate arose on the question whether the Charter or the Bill should be considered: the Sturgites could not swallow, any more than the Chartists could concede, the name of the Charter! After fierce war on these trivialities, the Chartists carried their point; they turned the Complete Suffrage Conference into a Chartist Convention; Mr. Sturge and his party took flight, and the two bodies deliberated separately. Almost as it in mockery, the Conference proceeded to consider their Bill and the Charter; and the Chartists discussed the propriety of substituting the very preamble of the Bill which they had refused to consider, for the preamble of their own Charter!

The Morning Chronicle contains a statement for which it vouches, and to which Lieutenant W. H. Webb, of the Wilberforce, appends these words—"I hereby certify, as far as my knowledge extends, that the above statement is correct," contradicting the rumours of gross misconduct among the persons left in charge of the Niger Model-farm. We have room only for extracts of the more material passages—

"The whole country around the model-farm, which, from its mountainous character, affords greater security to the persecuted fugitive, is filled with exiles, principally Bassa and Kakunda people, who hailed the establishment of the White man in their neighbourhood with delight: not without reason, indeed, for they not only received abundant employment at the farm, but were protected by its very vicinity from their ruthless assailants; and, for the first time in several years, were permitted to cultivate their little plantations in peace.

"A distinct denial is moreover given to the charge of making slaves of the natives, or driving them with the whip. Some men who were guilty of theft were certainly punished by their own headman, at the request of Mr. Carr, whilst he remained on the farm; and others were subsequently chastised by the hands of their own people for some clear and flagrant offence; but there was decidedly nothing like slave-driving. The labourers invariably received their wages themselves; and their chiefs only got occasional presents for special services, or to secure their good-will.

"The conduct of the people left at the farm appears, indeed, throughout their sojourn there, to have been praiseworthy in all points relating to the slave-trade; but they were in other respects guilty of several improprieties.

"As regards the condition of the farm itself, it appears that a quantity of land was cleared for cultivation, especially of cotton, for which the soil was well adapted. The crop was left on the ground at their departure in good condition; and a neighbouring chieftain had instructions to save it, with an understanding that it was to be made a present to himself. No scarcity of native labour was experienced, at the rate of 50 or 100 cowries a day (about 3d.; and their whole demeanour is characterised as most peaceable and friendly.

"The health of the people at the settlement was good; nor do the leaders appear to have entertained any serious apprehensions for their safety if left behind.

"It was Lieutenant Webb's full intention to have left the volunteers (more than half the original number of labourers) at the farm, under the care of Acting Assistant-Surgeon Hensman, who had generously offered to accompany the Wilberforce from Fernando Po; but some sickness having appeared in that vessel, this gentleman could not well be spared, and the consequent arrangements were given up."

Among a variety of rare and valuable manuscripts in the Museum of the Hon. East India Company is one well worthy notice, as it denotes the promptitude and spirit with which Oliver Cromwell, during the Protectorate, attended to the commercial interests of the nation. The following is a correct and faithful copy of an original petition now in the above Museum, presented by the East India Company to the Protector, on the 6th of November, 1657:—"To His Highness Oliver, Lord Protector of England, Ireland, Scotland, &c. The humble petition of merchants trading into East India showeth,—That, whereas, by the blessing of God, we do expect divers ships from India next summer, who, rounding from several remote parts, do usually touch at St. Helena island for refreshments and to meet company homeward bound; and having notice out of Biskay that the Spaniards do intend to send some men of warre to interrupt our East India trade; your petitioners do hereby pray, that your Highnesse and Council would be pleased to order some good ship and ffrigott to sail thither, and to stay until the last of May, to get all the ships into one ffleete, and convey them home. All which would be for the honour and benefit of the nation, and a great security and encouragement to merchants trading to India." To the above petition are affixed 23 signatures. On the face of this petition, on the very same day, is inscribed, in the Protector's own hand writing, the following recommendation and approval:—"Oliver P.—We do recommend the answeringe of this petition to the Commissioners of our Admiraltye, desiring them to do herein what they may for the encouragement of the East India Trade. Given at Whitehall this 6th of November, 1657."

The Glasgow East India Association have transmitted a memorial to the Lords of her Majesty's Treasury, praying for a material reduction in the duty on tea, and the establishment of fair reciprocity with China. They say that the direct trade of this country to China has seldom exceeded 1,200,000l. per annum, and the annual trade from China has seldom exceeded 4,000,000l. both sums exclusive of what passes through the medium of America and Australia: the difference between the two being made good chiefly by the opium and cotton exported from British India, the former to the annual value of 3,000,000l., and the latter upwards of 1,000,000l., whilst the balance of trade against China has been paid in bullion. The supply of opium and cotton is not likely to be materially reduced. The silk of China is constantly losing ground in competition with that of Italy. The miscellaneous articles admitted of little increase; and Tea, the great staple of China, is already imported to as great an extent as the consumption, limited by high price, will allow. Great Britain, therefore, already exports about as much to China direct, and from India, as she receives, or can at present receive, of the produce of the latter. The memorialists accordingly show to the First Lord of the Treasury that there is no room for an additional export trade to any considerable extent with China, because although there be an immense territory and population in that country, yet they have not produce to give which we can at present take in return, as it is clearly proved by the large quantity of bullion required from China to adjust the balance of trade. The duty charged on tea by our tariff is equal to 200 per cent. on the shipping cost, viz. 2s. 1d. per lb. on an article which, at an average, costs 1s. on board; and whilst a tariff is negotiating in China for the admission of our products, it is but reasonable to expect that the Chinese will keep in view the monstrous duty charged in England on their staple. The duty so charged falls chiefly on the poor, who are the largest consumers; and it falls the more heavily, that they consume the low-priced teas. The memorialists accordingly conclude that the present high duty restricts the consumption materially, and, by limiting imports, limits also the exports. The intercourse with China, having heretofore been confined to one port, the intercourse could not be so extended as to increase the quantity of tea taken in return, so much as might enable her Majesty's Government to reduce the duty and yet maintain the revenue; but the previous hindrances being removed, and we having now access to the port nearest the principal place of growth, the time is come when such a reduction is imperiously called for. The memorialists further say that a reduction of duty on black teas, by one half, would not only facilitate the formation of a fair tariff with China, and increase the amount of our exports, but would greatly add to the comfort, especially of the poorer classes of British subjects, would not (at least it would only partially, and for a time) injure the revenue, and would, moreover, materially increase the consumption of sugar, another article of vast importance to the Exchequer.

Sir R. Peel has confided the execution of the statues which Parliament voted last session to the memory of the three modern heroes, to three sculptors from the capitals of the three kingdoms. Mr. Mc Dowall, A. R. A., of Margaret-street, Cavendish-square, has been selected by him to model that of Lord Exmouth; Mr. Steele, of Edinburgh, that of Lord De Saumarez; and at a recent meeting of the Royal Dublin Society, Lord De Grey announced, that on his recommendation the monument to Sir Sydney Smith had been confided to Mr. Kirk, of that city. Sir Robert Peel has announced his desire to discontinue the old practice of giving a monopoly of all these great orders to artists of great name, and to make the patronage of this kind at the disposal of Government available for bringing forward men whose fame has not yet risen to a point commensurate with their genius.

At a late meeting of the Statistical Society, an interesting paper was read by Mr. Porter, relative to the recent census of the inhabitants of Great Britain, from which it appeared that the proportion of persons living with reference to their various ages in 1841, very considerably exceeded those of the year 1821. The number of persons living under 15 years of age was now much smaller as compared with those above that age, as far as 50; but the fluctuations of human life were less, and its duration on the increase. The productive portion of the population was also greatly on the increase, as compared with the less profitable part of the community. During the last 40 years from 1801, the number of the population had increased from 8,000,000 to 15,000,000, being an increase of 2 per cent. over the census of 1801. Should the population go on increasing at its present ratio, it was calculated that the population of Great Britain, in 1921, would be upwards of 53,000,000, or 20,000,000 beyond the present population of France. The paper concluded with some curious statistical comparisons between the population of the United States and that of Great Britain, from which it appeared that the mortality amongst the slaves and the coloured population was far greater than it was amongst the whites.—London Mail.

Matrimonial Statistics.—The following statistics of the age of the 121,525 women married in Paris in the course of the last 18 years is given by one of the journals as having been verified by the registrars of the Etat Civil. Between 12 and 15 years old there were 811; at 16 years, 1,920; at 17 years, 3,959; at 18 years, 5,816; at 19 years, 6,957; at 20 years, 7,610; at 21 years, 8,047; at 22 or 23, between 7,000 and 8,000; at 24 or 25, upwards of 6,000l.; but at 26, 27, and 28, they scarcely exceed 5,000. The decreasing progression goes on, so that up to 31 years there were only 3,651; thence to 41 years, 1793; at 42 years, 1,015; at 48 years, 580; at 56 years, 236; at 60 years, 126; and during the 18 years there were 578 marriages of women aged 61 years and upwards. Another account shows, that out of 1,000,000 married in Paris, 521,653, being more than one-half, were married before the commencement of their 26th year.—Galignani's Messenger.

Increasing Poverty and Poor-rates.—We last week stated that the amount of relief to the poor administered at the Leeds workhouse in the months of September and October of the three years 1840, 1841, and 1842, showed an alarming increase. The amounts were as follow:—In September and October of 1840, 2,608l.; in September and October of 1841, 2,994l.; in September and October of 1842, 3,659l. It follows, as a necessary consequence, that the poor's-rate must augment; and this very week the overseers have laid a half-yearly rate of two shillings in the pound, whereas there has not for many years been a rate exceeding one shilling and fourpence. The increase is fifty per cent. upon the former rates. At no time have the inhabitants been less able to bear an increase of the rates than at present; but it is absolutely necessary, and must be borne by all who can bear it.—Leeds Mercury.

THE TIMES TESTIMONIAL.—A meeting of the Committee appointed by the public meeting to arrange the Times Testimonial was held on Monday, to receive the report of the Auditors of the accounts. Lord Mayor Pirie took the chair. Mr. H. Hughes, as honorary secretary, reported, that, since the last meeting of the Committee, contributions to the amount of 36*l.* 10s. had been received, including 10 guineas from the Chamber of Commerce of St. John's, Newfoundland, 5*l.* from Mr. William Cotton, Governor of the Bank of England, and seven sums of two guineas, and six sums of one guinea each; making the total amount subscribed 2,702*l.* 6s., every shilling of which had been received. He laid before the meeting the following summary of the subscriptions:—

| Number. | | Amount. | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| 1 | Sir John Pirie, Lord Mayor (Chairman and Treasurer) | £10 | 10 | 0 |
| 38 | Public companies, ... .. | 330 | 5 | 0 |
| 64 | Magistrates, &c. of the City of London, ... ... ... | 194 | 6 | 0 |
| 59 | London Bankers, and Joint-stock Banks, ... ... ... | 518 | 9 | 0 |
| 129 | London merchants, manufacturers, traders, &c. ... ... | 790 | 1 | 0 |
| 116 | Country bankers, merchants, public companies, &c. ... | 429 | 10 | 0 |
| 21 | Foreign bankers, merchants, public companies, &c. ... | 127 | 7 | 0 |
| 128 | Individuals and anonymous, | 301 | 13 | 0 |
| 555 | | £2,702 | 6 | 0 |

The subscriptions from "foreign merchants, bankers, public companies, &c." were from Alexandria, Antwerp, Cadiz, Calcutta, Cologne, Dantzic, Florence, Geneva, Hamburg, La Guayra (in South America), Macao, Malta, Messina, Naples, Newfoundland, Ostend, Paris, Venice, Vevay, and Wisbaden. And Mr. Hughes knew for a certainty that they would have been much more considerable and numerous, but for the very great losses (in many cases ruinous) sustained by firms all over the Continent of Europe through the very conspiracy afterwards brought to light and exposed by the Times. The sum of 2,000*l.* had been devoted to establishing two scholarships at Oxford and Cambridge in connexion with Christ's Hospital and the City of London School. A tablet is to be set up in the New Royal Exchange, and another in the Times office. The report was affirmed, and thanks were passed to the several honorary officers of the Committee. —Pat.

THE WILL CASE AT CHELTENHAM.—The Cheltenham Magistrates, resumed, on Friday, the hearing of the charge preferred by Mr. Augustus Newton, barrister, son-in-law of the late Admiral Sir R. Ricketts, against Lady Ricketts, Mr. Stratford, a solicitor, Mr. Wright, a surgeon, and Messrs. Backman and Cousins, clerks to Mr. Stratford, of conspiring to forge the signature of Sir R. Ricketts to a document purporting to be his last will and testament, with intent to defraud the prosecutor and his wife Letitia Frances, daughter of the deceased, of the share of the deceased's estate, amounting to 60,000*l.*, to which they would have been entitled, had he died intestate, on the 18th August last. The question was, whether the Admiral did or did not cut off his daughter with a shilling, leaving his property to others; and a good deal of evidence was adduced, to show, that, in his latter days, he was imbecile in body and mind. On the other hand, it came out that he and Lady Ricketts were so displeased with the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Newton, that a servant "never saw him so much distressed." On Wednesday, the Magistrates abruptly dismissed the case.—Ibid.

THE JEWS.—The Senate of Hamburg have it in contemplation at one of the earliest meetings of the citizens, to propose a law to empower Jews to acquire freehold property in every part of the dominions of the city.—Ibid.

SALVAGE OF LE TELEMAQUE.—Accounts from Quillebœuf, of the 8th instant, mention that at noon on that day the hull of the Télémaque had been raised to the surface of the water, and that Mr. Taylor, the engineer, who so ably superintended the operation, had sent into town for the implements necessary to take the vessel asunder. The naval Commissioner of Honfleur proceeded, on that day, to Quillebœuf, to preside at the extraction of the property which may be on board, one-fifth of which is to be paid into the reserve fund of the Invalides of the Navy.—Times.

SURVEY OF THE ORKNEYS.—The Mastiff surveying vessel has been for some time employed in taking a survey of the Orkneys. The survey of the main land, and all the isles to the south of it, is already completed; and the vessel left Kirkwall, last week for the purpose of proceeding with that of the north islands. Two or three seasons will be required yet, before the survey will be finished.—Caledonian Mercury.

SARDINIA AND CORSICA.—The Gazette des Tribunaux quotes a letter from Sartene, Corsica, dated the 26th ult., stating that the Sardinian Government having resolved on vigorously enforcing the treaty for the reciprocal extradition of criminal offenders, concluded some years ago with France, upwards of 350 Corsican runaways had fled from the Sardinian dominions, and returned to their native country. The Gazette des Tribunaux then proceeds to show the effect of that invasion, and of the relentlessness with which the wretched men are hunted down by the Gendarmerie. In one case two bandits, father and son, were killed by the Gendarmes sent in pursuit of them; in another, an individual brigand. The details are revolting.—Pat.

GOVERNMENT NOTIFICATIONS.

Political Department, Camp Delhi, the 11th Feb. 1843.

The Governor General having received from the Resident at Gwalior, intelligence of the demise, on the 7th instant, of His Highness Junkojee Rao Scindiah, has been pleased to direct, that minute guns, to the number of 27, corresponding with the age of the deceased, be fired in honour of his memory, at the principal Military stations in Bengal and the North Western Provinces.

Lieutenant H. H. Duncan, Executive Engineer of the Neemuch Division, to officiate as Executive Engineer of the 1st or Dum-Dum Division.

Camp Delhi, 13th February, 1843.

The Right Honourable the Governor General is pleased to appoint Captain J. W. Robertson, of Engineers, to be Executive Engineer of the Delhi Division of Public Works. This Appointment to have effect from the 1st proximo.

The Governor General taking into consideration the inconvenience to which all officers at the new stations of Subathoo, Kussowlie, Umballa, Kotra and Nuraingpore, will be exposed through the necessity of providing themselves with residences, and deeming it to be a matter of much public concernment, that officers, and especially the younger officers, should not be placed under circumstances which may compel them to contract debts at an exorbitant interest, is pleased to make the following provisions:—

1. All officers desirous of borrowing money for the purpose of building residences for themselves at a new station, will, on application through the Executive Engineer, receive advances, not exceeding three years' tentage of their respective ranks, repayable with interest at five per cent. in three years, by the stoppage of their tentage, or of such portion thereof as may be sufficient to repay the loan with such interest.

2. In the event of the decease of any such officer, or of his being removed from the station before the whole sum borrowed by him shall have been so repaid, the remainder of the debt due by him shall be cancelled, and the residence built by him shall become the property of the Government, subject nevertheless, to the condition, that in the event of the decease of any such officer, his executors, or administrators, within three months after his decease, may, if they shall think fit, desire that the residence shall be put up to sale, and if the sum realized at such sale, shall be larger than the debt remaining due, the balance shall be paid to the estate of the officer deceased; but such residence shall not, without special authority, be sold at any such sale for any sum less than the amount of the remaining debt, which shall be specified in the advertisement of the sale.

3. A similar power of desiring a sale of the residence shall belong to an officer removed from a station before the payment of the whole debt incurred by him; but such desire must be expressed by such officer within one week after the receipt of the order for his removal, and the sale shall take place on conditions similar to those above annexed, to the sale of a residence at the desire of the executors of an officer deceased.

4. In all cases, the Executive Engineer shall examine the accounts of the sums expended in building, which shall be furnished, on honour, by the officer borrowing, and shall certify what sums have been bona fide so expended, and no larger sum shall be advanced to any officer on loan than the Executive Engineer shall so certify to have been expended.

5. The Executive Engineer will, in all cases, in which his other duties may not interfere, afford his aid to the officer building a residence with money so advanced, for the purpose of preventing overcharge, and ensuring good workmanship.

6. Where officers may have already borrowed money on their own private account, for the purpose of enabling them to build at the new stations, sums will still be advanced to them, on application through the Executive Engineer, for the purpose of paying off such loans and continuing the works commenced, subject to the same regulations as above expressed, for the examination of the accounts, and for the giving of a certificate by the Executive Engineer, that the whole sum borrowed has been duly applied to the sole purpose of building at the new station.

The necessary arrangements for issuing and recovering the advances herein authorised, will be made in the Financial Department.

By order of the Right Honourable the Governor General of India,

J. STUART, Lt. Col.,

8th Highlanders.—Lieut. McAndrew, to Ferozepore, for 3 months, from the 23d December 1842.

By Order of His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief,
H. G. SMITH, Major General,
Adjutant General H. M. Forces in India.

Head Quarters, Camp Ferozepore, 4th Jan., 1843.

His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief is pleased to make the following appointments :

Brevet Major J. B. Backhouse to the command of the supplementary troop of horse Artillery, vacant by the nomination of Captain Anderson, in General Orders by the Governor General, of the 23d ultimo, to be Agent for gunpowder at Ishapore.

Sirmoor Local Battalion.—Lieut. and Adjutant W. B. Lumley to be 2d in command, vice Fisher appointed commandant.

Lieut. Charles Reid, of the 10th Regiment of Native Infantry, to be Adjutant, vice Lumley.

Surgeon J. Forsyth is posted to the 5th Regt. of Light Cavalry, but directed to continue in charge of the 1st Light Cavalry, until further orders.

Assistant Surgeon H. Bedborough, at present attached to the 1st European Light Infantry, is directed to join and do duty with Her Majesty's 16th Lancers.

His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief is pleased to appoint the following Assistant Surgeons to the Medical charge of the corps expressed opposite their respective names :

Assistant Surgeon E. Campbell, 2d Regiment, grenadiers.

Assistant Surgeon T. Thomson, M. D. detachment 27th Regt. N. I.

Assistant Surgeon R. H. L. Bird, 16th Regiment, grenadiers.

Assistant Surgeon C. A. Elderton, Kelat-i Ghilzie Regiment.

The undermentioned officers have leave of absence ;

Artillery Regiment.—Brevet Capt. (Major) G. H. Macgregor, C. B., from 4th Jan., to 4th July, to visit the Presidency, preparatory to applying for furlough to Europe, on private affairs.

11th Regiment Light Cavalry.—Brevet Major J. Fraser, C. B. Honorary A. D. C. to the Right Honourable the Governor General, from 5th January to 5th April, to proceed towards Bombay, on Medical Certificate, in anticipation of the leave to Europe, for which he has made application, being granted. This cancels the remaining portion of the leave granted to him in G. O. of the 20th ultimo.

By Order of His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief,
J. R. LUMLEY, Major General,
Adjutant General of the Army.

Head Quarters, Camp Ferozepore, 5th Jan. 1843.

The following orders are confirmed :

The Garrison Orders issued on the 24th and 25th of April last by Major General W. Nott, commanding at Candahar, the former directing Assistant Surgeon W. J. Loch, of the 43d, to afford Medical aid to the 42d Regiment of Native Infantry, and to the staff of the Garrison, during the absence of Assistant Surgeon J. H. Serrell ; and the latter directing the same officer to afford Medical aid to the sick of the Bengal and Bombay detachments of European Artillery, during the absence of Assistant Surgeon Gerrard.

The Regimental order issued on the 7th of September last, by Lieutenant-Colonel A. F. Richmond, appointing Lieutenant T. H. Shum to act as Adjutant to the left wing of the 33d Native Infantry, during its absence from the Head Quarters of the Regt.

The Ferozepore Station Order of the 23d ultimo, directing Assistant Surgeon J. Macrae, M. D. to do duty with the 55th Regt. of N. I.

The Regimental Order of the 28th ultimo, by Captain G. Burney appointing Lieutenant J. Waterfield to act as Adjutant to the 38th Light Infantry, vice Lieutenant and Brevet Captain A. C. Dewar transferred to the 37th Native Infantry.

The Bareilly Station Order of the 23d ultimo appointing Capt. H. N. Pepper to the charge of the 4th Company 7th Battalion of Artillery.

Captain C. McF. Collins, of the invalid establishment, is with the sanction of Government, permitted to reside at Mussoorie and draw his pay and allowances from the Meerut pay office.

The undermentioned officers have leave of absence :

Artillery Regiment.—Major T. Lumsden, C. B. from 1st January, to 4th November to remain at Futtehgurh, and to visit Simlah, on Medical Certificate. This cancels the leave granted in Government General Orders of the 7th of October last.

26th Regiment Light Infantry.—Major George Huish, from 5th January, to 5th April, to proceed towards Bombay, in anticipation of the furlough for which he has applied being granted.

42d Regiment Light Infantry.—Lieutenant Interpreter and Quarter Master J. S. Knox, from 25th December to 25th April 1843, to proceed towards Bombay, in anticipation of the sanction of Government.

With reference to General Orders by the Right Honourable the Governor General, dated the 16th June last, incorporating a portion of the troops of the late Shah Shoojah with the Bengal Native army, and in furtherance of instructions subsequently communicated, the following measures are ordered to be adopted for disposing of the men of Broadfoot's corps of sappers :

All tools, stores, spare arms, and ammunition, will be lodged in the Ferozepore Magazine.

All establishments not required for the two Companies to be added to the Bengal sappers, are to be immediately discharged, and the pay of all establishments retained is to be reduced, from the 1st instant, to the scale of the above corps.

The details intended to form the two supplementary Companies of sappers and miners will march to Delhi, under the command of Major G. Broadfoot, where they will be made over to Captain B. Y. Reilly, their accounts of pay and clothing having been previously adjusted.

The Goorkahs entertained for Broadfoot's sappers, as well as those belonging to the late 4th Regiment of Shah Shoojah's force, who have since joined the former corps, are to be left at Ferozepore, under the charge of Captain T. P. Walsh and Lieutenant J. C. Haughton, late Adjutant of the latter Regiment, with a view to the accounts of the men being settled.

The Deputy Pay-master with Major General G. Pollock's force will disburse to Major Broadfoot, on his duplicate receipt, the sum of Company's Rupees thirty-five thousand, seven hundred and sixty-one, on account of the pay and allowances, donation batta, and arrears, due to the sappers, to be hereafter adjusted.

A return showing the details proceeding to join the sappers and miners at Delhi, and of the Goorkahs remaining under the charge of Captain Walsh, is to be immediately prepared, and transmitted to the Adjutant General of the army.

Head Quarters, Camp Ferozepore, 6th Jan. 1843.

All the purposes for which the army of reserve was assembled having been accomplished, the Right Honourable the Governor General has been pleased to direct, that the troops composing it, and the forces under the command of Major Generals G. Pollock, C. B. and W. Nott, may be ordered to proceed to the destinations which have been assigned to them.

All staff appointments created for the army of reserve, or for service with the forces commanded by the before named General officers, (the two Deputy Pay-masters and the officer who had charge of Major General Nott's Treasure chest excepted) are to cease, from the 10th instant, and the officers holding them will return to their ordinary duties.

Officers who were withdrawn from staff situations for Regimental duty with the above forces and with the reserve, are permitted to return to their appointments, provided they may not be required to give evidence before any of the Courts now sitting or about to be assembled.

The General Court Martial, of which Major General J. McCaskill, K. H. is President, will reassemble at Head Quarters, at 12 o'clock, (noon) to-morrow for the trial of Private Murphy, of Her Majesty's 13th Light Infantry and all such prisoners as may be duly brought before it:

Lieutenant R. D. Kay, Deputy Judge Advocate General, will conduct the proceedings.

At a General Court Martial held in Camp Ferozepore on the 30th day of Dec. 1842, Capt. Andrew Fisher, of the 35th Native Light Infantry Regiment, was arraigned on the following charge:—

Charge.—" For highly unbecoming conduct, in the following instances:

" 1st Instance. In having appeared in a disgraceful state of intoxication, on the public road, between seven and nine o'clock, on the morning of the 24th October 1842, through which he became subjected to the necessity of being conveyed home to his tent in a dooly.

" 2d Instance. In having, through intoxication, rendered himself incapable of performing the duty of superintending officer of a Native Regimental Court Martial, at Jellalabad, in the forenoon of the same day, for which duty he had been duly warned.

" 3d Instance. In having on the same day, when the said Court Martial had assembled, after he had been relieved from the duty of Superintending Officer, made his appearance in Court, under excitement from intoxication interrupted the proceedings, so as to render an adjournment necessary; and made use of insubordinate language with reference to the officer commanding the 35th Native Light Infantry Regiment."

Finding.—" The Court, having maturely weighed and considered the evidence in support of the charges against the prisoner Captain Andrew Fisher, of the 35th Native Light Infantry Regiment, his defence, and the evidence adduced in support of it, is of opinion, that he is,

" On the 1st instance of the charge, not guilty,

" On the 2d instance of the charge, not guilty.

" On the 3d instance of the charge, guilty, with exception of the words " from intoxication," of which they do acquit him.

Sentence.—" The Court sentence the prisoner Captain Andrew Fisher of the 35th Native Light Infantry Regiment, to be suspended from rank, pay and allowances, for a period of three (3) months."

Confirmed,

(Signed) J. NICOLLS, General, and Commander-in-Chief.

5th January, 1843.

Head Quarters, Camp Ferozepore, 7th Jan. 1843.

1. His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief directs that when Regiments are ordered to proceed, by water, to the upper provinces, Pay-masters would so arrange their drafts upon the Collectors as to prevent the necessity of paying in specie, to Captains of troops and companies, more than one month's pay for their men.

The Major of Brigade at Fort William will observe the same rule, with all detachments proceeding, by water, to the upper provinces, in making advances to officers commanding them.

Commanding officers of Regiments, and detachments, are held responsible that no more public money remains in possession than is absolutely necessary, as His Excellency can only recommend to the favourable consideration of Government such claims for losses, as are founded upon the strict obedience of this order.

2. A General Committee of subscribers to the Military widow's fund, will assemble at 11 o'clock, on Monday morning the 9th instant, at the mess tent of H. M's. 3d Buffs, to take into consideration the case of Mrs. Taylor, widow of Major Taylor, H. M's. 13th Light Infantry.

President—Major Clunie, Her Majesty's 3d buffs.

Members—2 Captains, Her Majesty's 3d buffs: 1 Captain, Her Majesty's 9th Regiment: 1 Captain, Her Majesty's 31st Regt.

The commanding officers of Her Majesty's 3d, 9th and 31st Regiments, are requested to forward the names of the Captains required for this duty, to Major Clunie, the President of the Committee.

Lieutenant Wood, Adjutant Her Majesty's 13th Light Infantry, will submit the application, and give such information to the Committee as the rules of the fund require.

3. The following orders are confirmed:

By Major General Walker, commanding the Meerut Division, dated the 23d ultimo, appointing Capt. Bulkeley, 31st Foot, to the command of the depot of that Regiment: and directing Assistant Surgeon Gahan, 9th Foot, to receive Medical charge of the depots at Meerut from Assistant Surgeon Wells, and, Assistant Surgeon Jenkins, 31st Foot, to do duty with the same.

By Lieutenant Knowles, commanding a detachment of the 3d Light Dragoons, dated the 19th ultimo, appointing corporal Lenon to act as Sergeant.

4. Leave of absence is granted—

3d Foot.—Captain McKie, for 2 months from the 25th instant.

Captain Rouse, from the 9th instant, to the 31st March next.

Lieut. Browne, from the 10th instant, to the 15th March next.

13th Light Infantry.—Capt. King, from the 20th instant to the 1st March; Lieut. the Honourable E. I. W. Forester, for one month, to remain at Ferozepore.

84th Foot.—Ensign Horan, for 4 months from the 29th ultimo to enable him to join his Regiment.

By Order of His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief,

H. G. SMITH, Major General,
Adjutant General H. M. Forces in India.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

MR. PARKE PITTAR

HAVING arranged the formation of an Agency, the particular object of which will be the transaction of affairs, connected with this country and Europe, begs to offer his services to the community of India, in any way they can be rendered available.

A peculiar and important feature in the Agency now established, will consist in the annual return of Mr. P. Pittar to India. Taking advantage of the Peninsular and Oriental Company's Steam Vessels, he purposes re-visiting Calcutta about the latter end of every October, and returning to Europe about the middle of the following February, thus affording to persons entrusting the management of their affairs to his care, the opportunity of a personal conference and explanation of their views and intentions,—an advantage in the transaction of affairs of a complicated, or family nature, the greatness of which need not be commented upon.

A long residence in India, combined with an intimate knowledge of almost every description of manufactured article, and its various manufacturers, rendering him peculiarly fitted for the office of Agent to persons procuring their supplies or other articles, such as Table Equipages, Philosophical and Optical Instruments, Books, Maps, Sporting Apparatus, Musical Instruments, Military Equipments, Wines, &c. &c. direct from Europe, he offers them his services with every confidence that his selections will give the most perfect satisfaction, whether as regarding quality, cheapness, or adaptation to the climate; but in the execution of these commissions, a previous remittance for their full amount, or reference for payment, will invariably be required.

Every article purchased through this Agency will be most minutely examined previous to its being packed and the same care under every circumstance, taken, as if persons were themselves individually present and superintending. Packages of a large size will, as usual, be shipped by fast-vessels to their destined port; but those of smaller dimensions, will, (unless otherwise instructed,) be sent through the Peninsular and Oriental Company's Office, Overland: thus enabling persons in most instances to receive their orders fully executed within four months from the date of the transmission of their instructions.

In transactions of a private and confidential nature a fair remuneration, according to circumstances, will be expected; in those of the ordinary nature of Agency Business, the Commission will be regulated by the customary rates; and for the selection, purchase and shipment of goods, a Commission of 5 per cent. on the gross amount will be charged.

Letters to the address of Mr. Parke Pittar, European and Oriental Agency Office, London, will meet with the most prompt attention.

PROSPECTUS.

IT is proposed to publish, by subscription, a work, in Eight Books, blank verse, to be entitled PARADISE, OR THE INVISIBLE WORLD.

BY W. ROBINSON, Baptist Missionary.

The Work treats on the state of disembodied souls, both that of the saved, and that of the lost; but chiefly on the state of happy souls.

It is a commonly received opinion among Protestants, that disembodied souls go at once to Heaven or Hell; but this opinion appears to some, and to the author among others, to be unsupported by Scripture. The doctrine taught in Scripture seems to be that of an intermediate state; not a purgatory, nor a state of probation; but a state of rest and happiness for the righteous, and of misery for the wicked; while Heaven and Hell seem reserved till after the resurrection and the judgment. The righteous, it is believed, will not enter Heaven till they all enter it together at the invitation: "Come ye blessed of my Father," &c. nor the wicked enter Hell, till they all enter it together, when the Great Judge shall say: "Depart ye cursed into everlasting fire," &c.

The arguments in favour of an intermediate state, and replies to the objections usually brought against that state are limited to the Second Book; so that those, who differ in opinion from the author, may, it is believed, read the other parts of the work without finding any thing materially different from their own views of the state of departed souls.

The author is quite ready to acknowledge, that the doctrine of an intermediate state is a non-essential; and he has treated it as such; but as truth is preferable to error, even in non-essentials, he has thought the subject of sufficient importance to be laid before his fellow-Christians for their consideration; and he hopes, that his manner of handling it will not inflict the least wound on the feelings of those, who differ from him.

The advocacy of this doctrine was but a part, and that not even the main part of the object, which the author proposed to himself; his chief object was that of calling the attention of his fellow-christians to the great concerns of another world, and thus promoting their spirituality of mind; and he ventures to hope, and his hope is corroborated by the testimony of a few plain christians, that have seen the whole manuscript or parts of it, that the serious reader will not peruse the work without some spiritual advantage.

 The work will be printed in Demy 8vo. and will contain about 400 pages. Price bound in cloth 6 Rupees.

Persons desirous of subscribing to the work are requested to send their names and address to the Rev. J. THOMAS, Baptist Mission Press, or to the Serampore Press, or to Mr. JOHN ROBINSON, at Serampore.

ABOLITION OF THE LOTTERIES.—We are happy to learn that the Government of Bengal has at length resolved to abolish the state Lotteries. The question was placed by previous discussions in such a position that the final discontinuance of the Lottery could not be effected without positive instructions from the home authorities. But the Government of Bengal has had sufficient evidence of the pernicious effects of the public lotteries, by the encouragement they gave to a spirit of gambling in the community, and to the formation of idle and dissipated habits, to feel justified in at once suspending them, pending a reference to the Court of Directors. Unless therefore the Court should send out peremptory orders to revive them, the last lottery will be emphatically the last, and society will be delivered altogether from this pest. This resolution possesses the greater merit in as much as it has been adopted at a time when the lotteries, under the able management of Capt. Hyde, had become unusually profitable. The sacrifice of revenue which the Government has makes to the public interests of the community, does not fall short of a lakh of Rupees a year. In common with every well-wisher of the country we rejoice at the manly determination which has been adopted; but we are also not without our own particular source of gratification. We had occasion lately to observe that the local authorities had generally taken the lead in those measures which have conferred great benefits on the country; and that to the authorities in England had been left the agreeable duty of giving them the stamp of their authority. The present movement affords another corroboration of this fact.

We cannot for a moment suppose, that when the Lotteries have been once suspended, the Court of Directors will dream of restoring them to life and activity. They will, we are confident, need no stimulus from her Majesty's Ministers on such an occasion. If any such stimulus is required, a Cabinet, of which the Earl of Ripon,—who abolished the lotteries in England—is a member, will not hesitate to apply it. But we do the Court great injustice by indulging even the remotest suspicion that they will fail to support Mr. Bird in this salutary measure. We look however for more than a cold assent to the abolition in Leadenhall Street. We trust the Court will send out positive instructions to prevent by a legislative enactment, the projection of private lotteries. Unless prohibited by law, the spirit of gambling will find vent in the establishment of private lotteries. At the time when state lotteries were abolished by Act of Parliament, a statute had been in force for more than a hundred years which declared all lotteries public nuisances, and imposed a penalty of 500*l.* on every proprietor of a private lottery and 20*l.* on each adventurer. When therefore Parliament refused to pass the usual annual Act for the state lotteries, they ceased at once throughout England. We require the same protection for the interests of morality in this country which existed in England, and we trust that the present measure will be consummated by an Act, declaring all lotteries public nuisances and imposing a penalty on the projectors.

THE NEW LAW RESPECTING THE SITTINGS OF THE SUDDER COURT.—The Hurkaru gave us rather a long article in his issue of the 25th of last month in condemnation of the law which has just been enacted regarding the sittings of the Judges in the Sudder Court. He introduces his article by a remark, that two Acts involving great changes in the practice of the Sudder Court have been passed in one day, which is "an evidence of that love of novelty which Lord Auckland characterized as a radical vice in Indian legislation." It is somewhat singular that one of these Acts was prepared under His Lordship's own eye,—with the view doubtless of affording an illustration of that vice in his own career of legislation. The Hurkaru then takes a discursive view of the changes which have been made in the fiscal arrangements of Government, and in the department of Criminal justice, but we have failed to discover any possible connection between these changes and the Act under discussion. He then proceeds to affirm that "every meddling official, who is above doing his own work, aims to distinguish himself by proposing some alteration in the existing system." Not knowing which of the functionaries of Government this compliment is intended to fit, we are unable to appreciate its accuracy. The article proceeds to assert that "drafts of Acts are seen in every issue of the Calcutta Gazette, and though many of them get addled from want of the genial warmth of authority, not a few are duly hatched to the great delight of the chuckling parents." We have had the curiosity to examine the pages of the Calcutta Gazette, and find that the number of Acts proposed during the last year in reference to this Presidency amount only to 23 of which not a fourth remain as yet under consideration. We find moreover that all the Acts passed by the Legislative Council during the last ten years for eighty millions of people, fall far short of the statutes of a single Session of the Imperial Parliament.

Our contemporary having told us that the new Act involved great changes, proceeds to exemplify the assertion by stating that the only change effected by the new Act is to bring back the practice of the Court to the rule which was established in 1810, and which was laid aside four years after, and has been resumed after the lapse of thirty years; and that the difference between the old and the new practice is simply that a case must be heard by three judges sitting together, instead of being sent from judge to judge in quest of a majority. This is plain fact; only we find it somewhat difficult to discover wherein the greatness of this small change lies. When our contemporary goes on to affirm that "the object of these several mutations has ever and solely been economy," he speaks somewhat enigmatically. It is very possible that he may be referring to economy of time, and indeed this interpretation is supported by the next sentence in which he says, "we remark a desire to prevent a waste of the time of any single judge." And if our contemporary had looked a little more closely into the matter, perhaps he would also have found reason to commend the arrangement for the saving it effects of the time of the suitor, as well as of the judge. It must be self-evident that a suitor who has his cause finally decided before three judges sitting together, will be a gainer in point of time over the suitor who has the same cause to plead at three distinct periods before three several judges.

Our contemporary further observes, that "it might be supposed that the new Act provided for a medium between the merely economical, and the public satisfaction system," but the remarks on this subject which stretch through two paragraphs do not appear even in his own opinion to be altogether germane to the matter in hand, for we find him informing his readers after having got through three fourths of the article, that he had now come to "that feature of the new law which is peculiar to it." We need not therefore stop to examine how far the Act provides this "medium between the merely economical and the public satisfaction system;" but will pass at once to "the peculiar feature" of the new Act. On this ground however we have little to add to the remarks we offered in June last, when the draft of the Act was originally published.

It is a rule in the Sudder Adawlut, the Court of final appeal at this Presidency, that no decision of an inferior Court can be reversed except by the concurrence of two Judges. It has been the practice of the Court therefore, whenever a single Judge hearing an appeal saw reason to upset a decree of a lower tribunal, for him to hear the case and record his opinion, and then to make it over for a re-hearing to a second Judge. If he failed to agree in every particular with the decision of the first Judge, it was referred to a third. It frequently happened that the third Judge differed from the other two, and it then went before a fourth. The Hurkaru states, that a suit has thus been actually heard in succession before seven Judges,—to which we may add, and without any satisfactory result; in as much as all the seven differed in some one point from each other, and the cause, after having made the circuit of the bench in Calcutta, was sent up to the bench at Allahabad.

The absurdity of this course of procedure is so very manifest, as to make any attempt to expose it almost redundant. Still we may [illegible] among the most prominent disadvantages it entails, that it subjects the suitor to the needless expense and vexation of repeated hearings of the same matter, while it gives him no satisfactory decision as the result of such an outlay of money, patience and time. It is also in most cases a needless waste of the time of the Court. If the Judges had originally consulted together on the subject, there is every reason to believe that the discrepancies of opinion which rendered these repeated references necessary, would have been at once removed. It is no small objection to the old system that it deprived the Judges of the benefit of that mutual consultation, by which the ends of justice are most speedily and effectually promoted. It is a still greater objection that it stripped the decree itself of that weight of authority which a decision delivered by a full bench must necessarily possess. Without intending the slightest disrespect to the Judges who preside in the Sudder, we are still bound to say that its decrees do not enjoy the confidence of the community to the extent they formerly did. This calamity we attribute in a great measure to the vicious practice which has grown up of late years, and which it is the object of the present enactment to correct.

That enactment provides that whenever a single Judge finds himself disposed to reverse or alter the judgment of the Court below, he shall call in two other Judges, and that the case shall be heard by the three sitting together, and be decided by them without any additional voices. The inconveniences which grow out of the present practice will be in a great measure cured by this law. The time, money and patience of suitors will be saved; the time of the Judges will be economized; the Judges will enjoy the benefit of mutual advice; their decisions will carry weight with the law-loving public; and the general character of the Court will be raised in public estimation.

Our contemporary states, that the impression which the sittings of three Judges will create on the minds of the public, will not be favourable—that the change is a most useless one;—and that, considered in another point of view, it may prove no better than a solemn farce. With all reasonable deference for his opinion, we venture not only to differ from him, but to affirm that if he will sit in consultation with us on the subject in the same manner as the Judges of the Sudder Court are required to do by the new law, we are confident he will come over to our opinion within an hour; and instead of thinking that the "single merit of this law is that it does not introduce a worse practice than what has hitherto obtained," he will pronounce that its singular merit is that it introduces a better practice than has hitherto been in vogue.

SEAL'S COLLEGE.—The past week has been rendered memorable by two very unusual events: the purchase of the Theatre,* and the establishment of a College in Calcutta by a wealthy Native, Baboo Mootee Lall Seal. The College is placed under the superintendence of the Jesuits. The number of pupils is to be limited for the present to Five Hundred. The sudden appearance of an Institution of such magnitude takes the mind so completely by surprise, that we scarcely know how to allude to it in language which shall not be mistaken for indifference to Native improvement. We rejoice to find that a Native who has risen from absolute poverty to the possession of great wealth, within the memory of the present generation, has chalked out for himself a new path to distinction, in which personal glory and public advantage are so happily blended. Mootee Baboo, the Rothschild of Calcutta, had previously earned the gratitude of society by devoting 25,000 Rupees to the support of decayed families in Calcutta, and by offering 10,000 Rs. as a prize to the first Hindoo who should marry a widow. These acts of munificence prove that while the Baboo has been accumulating a fortune by his association with Europeans, he has not failed to imbibe some portion of their utilitarian spirit, and has gone far ahead of his countrymen in the wise distribution of his wealth. But the adoption of so ambitious a project as that of founding a College appeared to require some stronger motive than even the national love of fame; and we were at a loss to account for this new direction of the Baboo's exertions till we opened the Native papers of the week. We there discovered that a son of Mootee Lall, who attends the Hindoo College, had been put in the corner for idleness or disobedience, and that this punishment so deeply affected the father, that he resolved to have a College of his own, which should eclipse the other, and in which his son should not be exposed to such ignominious treatment. The establishment of this new College affords another exemplification of the common remark, that many of the most signal benefits enjoyed by the family of man, have sprung from the most trivial and apparently inadequate causes. Who could have ventured to predict, when he saw the young Seal standing in the corner, that this circumstance would lead to the establishment of a new College, where five hundred youths would be rescued from ignorance and vice, and brought within the circle of European instruction?

But we will not quarrel with the motives which induced the Baboo to organize this new Institution. We will rejoice in the fact that the Natives of the country are beginning to turn their money into a more useful channel than that of idle marriage and funeral feasts, and extravagant poojahs. The College now established will do good, as long as it exists. It will impart instruction to those who lack it, and diminish the strength of superstition. The Bhaskur, the Editor of which conducts his journal with undiminished vigor, though caged in the big jail, expresses a doubt as to the continuance of the Institution. "It is matter of doubt, says he, whether the College will last. This however is a future consideration. The work the Baboo undertook through competition, he has accomplished. What need is there to anticipate what may hereafter happen?" Looking to the motives which led to its establishment, we may be permitted, without any breach of charity, to reason against its stability. If the founder had devoted a large sum of money to this object, and invested it in the public funds in the hands of trustees for the perpetual endowment of such an establishment, there might have been some reasonable hope of its continuance, not only during his life, but after his wealth has descended to his sons. But a momentary impulse of vexation is scarcely a sufficient foundation for a permanent institution. We fear he is likely to cool upon the project, and gradually relax in his zeal till the College sinks into oblivion. We shall be rejoiced to hear that these fears have been removed, and that he has adopted those measures which alone can give the Seal's College a place among the permanent institutions of the Metropolis.

* We perceive that some of our contemporaries deny that the Theatre has been purchased by the Seal Baboo. We give what we have heard is the most authentic version of the case.

JESSORE GRIEVANCES.—A letter, which will be found among our Correspondence, informs us that a meeting has just been held in Jessore, with the view of furnishing Mr. George Thompson with accurate information of the state of the district, and a catalogue of the grievances under which it is labouring. It originated with Baboo Kasheshur Mitter, the Moonsiff of Sulkeah, who is represented as having delivered a long speech in which he extolled the "philanthropy, benevolence and love" of Mr. Thompson, and described the oppressions to which the people were subject. Two hundred natives were present; and some bonâ fide ryots exposed to the meeting a number of grievances, which it was resolved to embody in a memorial, and communicate to Mr. Thompson. A Committee of fifteen was appointed to draw it up.

The grievances of this district, as far as we can judge from the general view of them furnished by our correspondent, are of a very miscellaneous character. The ryots indeed appear to suffer from every class of men, who possess the power of injuring them. Government oppresses them with its Doorm Canoon, which means the Canon of Resumptions. The Zemindar crushes them with the Huftum Canoon, which gives him the power of distraint when the ryot refuses to pay his rent; which is sometimes the case. The Indigo planters, with their various detachments of club men, destroy the peace of the ryots; and the Darogas or Police officers subject them to the most grievous oppression. It is somewhat singular that this list of grievances should not include those which the Natives are said to suffer from the venality and extortion of the Native officers of the Civil Courts. This may be only an omission on the part of our correspondent; or the meeting may have felt disinclined to touch upon this particular evil, out of delicacy to the Convener, who is himself one of the Judicial officers of Government.

We shall be most happy to see this memorial of Jessore grievances. We trust the Committee appointed to draw it up will not confine themselves to unmeaning generalities, which make us none the wiser, for we already know that "all power is every where, and at all times, abused," and that India is certainly no exception to the general rule. The Zemindar sells up a tenant who will not pay his rent and gives his land to another; the Duke of Newcastle ousts a tenant who will not vote for his candidate; and the Leicestershire gentry, as we learn by the last mail, are ejecting every tenant who goes to the Meeting-house. We want a specification of tangible, remediable grievances; and we hope the Committee will not disappoint us. Our correspondent tells us that this meeting for the exposition of grievances is a bold one; a fact we are not much disposed to question. We hope the members will take the still bolder step of pointing to those specific instances of oppression which shall enable the public and the Government at once to verify their assertions. One very fruitful cause of public misery in India, is the want of moral courage in the lower classes; and this is quite as injurious as the want of moral principle in the upper classes. The reform must begin from below. As soon as the oppressed can summon courage to avail themselves of the means of relief which have been provided by the existing laws, those means and contrivances of Justice will be improved. As soon as they repudiate the universal maxim that "he who would live in the water must not quarrel with the alligator," and boldly resist oppression, they will find the face of things immediately change for the better. That our legal institutions require great, very great amendments, we are the last to question; but the most perfect institutions must fail to impart curity to those who have not the courage to avail themselves of them.

In reference to this district, the memorial of grievances will possess a particular interest from the fact, that while the natives are complaining of the grievous oppression of the Indigo planters, it is only a fortnight since we were informed, that the Superintendent of Police, having proceeded in person to examine its condition, reported that none of the evils under which the people suffered, were to be traced to the Planters. Either the Superintendent must have been grossly misled in his enquiries, or the grievances from this source must be more imaginary than real. The memorial will lead to discussion, and discussion to the discovery of truth.

THE CHRISTIAN INTELLIGENCER.—We are sorry to have to come a second time under the censure of the Calcutta Christian Intelligencer; but we are satisfied that a short explanation will set us right with the Editor. In an article published two or three weeks since headed 'Scheme for uprooting the Presbyterian Establishment,' we gave extracts from late English papers, which disclosed a design on the part of a certain portion of the Episcopalian body, usually known as the High Church party, to root out the Presbyterian form of Church polity in Scotland, and substitute in its stead the Episcopal ritual. Of course, when we alluded to this design of the Episcopalian body, we referred only to that specific section which was pointed out in the quotations, as having entertained it. Had we supposed that our language could have been misconstrued to signify that the whole body of the Church of England, lay and clerical, evangelical and puseyite, had combined to bring about this change, we should have been more particular in our expressions. We beg in the most distinct and unequivocal manner to assure the Editor of the Intelligencer that nothing could be further from our intention than to insinuate that either he, or the division of the Church to which he is attached, ever indulged in any such aspirations. It is not to be supposed that they have ever cherished any design hostile to the good men in the Kirk of Scotland, or that the evangelical bond which unites them to their Christian brethren of other sects is not stronger than the episcopal bond which unites them with the Tractarians. We are fully aware that those who would root out the Presbyterian establishment in Scotland, would not spare the low Church party in England if they ever acquire sufficient strength to render their own views predominant in the Establishment. Whenever the Tractarians shall have succeeded in re-establishing the Convocation, and obtaining that power in the Church and State, which appears to be their particular aim, the first blow will doubtless fall on the Evangelical party, who glory in the Reformation. To have supposed therefore that this party should have been so unwise as to assist in strengthening the hands and furthering the designs of their uncompromising opponents, would have been to betray a want of common sense of which we are almost ashamed to have been thought capable.

The following is the article in the Intelligencer.

"An article on the Scottish Church question which appeared in a recent number of the Friend of India not a little surprised us. The said article is headed "Scheme for uprooting the Presbyterian Establishment," and this scheme is said to have been projected by Episcopalians. The Editor goes on to observe: "it would appear that it has long been the hope, and is at present the aim of the Episcopalians to root up John Knox's Establishment and transfer all Church property in Scotland to their own body." Now this, to say the least of it, is unfair and illiberal. Episcopalians as a body have had nothing to do with the question: even the Government did not interfere with it till appealed to by the contending parties. What some Churchmen may have done as individuals we know not: neither is it at all relevant to the question. But supposing some of them to have done as the Friend says, the whole body of Episcopalians are not chargeable on that account. What would the Friend of India say, were we to assert that, because some Dissenters have manifested violent opposition to the Church, a fact too notorious to be disputed, the whole body are actuated by a desire to uproot the Establishment and obtain its temporalities? Would he not flatly deny the assertion and maintain that their dissent arose from principle and because they could not conscientiously conform? Why then does he not mete to others that which he takes himself? Besides, how often have we observed the Friend of India reminding his contemporaries that motives are not within their province and that they have no right to judge those of their opponents? And yet when it suits the Friend he can impugn the motives of a whole community and prefer a charge against them which, for anything he has shewn to the contrary, is totally unfounded. This we repeat is unfair, and it is unchristian. Henceforth his contemporaries may reply "Physician heal thyself."

THE COOLY SHIP.—The Framjee Cowasjee, which is now dropping down the river with a large cargo of coolies for the Mauritius, was officially visited by the Assistant Emigration Agent, on the 23d of February, who found the scuttles down, and the heat between decks intolerable. Neither cooking places nor privies had been provided for the emigrants, who were grumbling at not having their food. He immediately reported the circumstance to Captain Rogers, the Emigration Agent, adding that he had requested the Chief Mate to have the scuttles opened, but that his request was not complied with, though he remained on board for half an hour. The Agent immediately addressed the owners, Messrs. Rustumjee Cowasjee and Co. on the subject, stating that the vessel could not be allowed to proceed on her voyage until this want of attention to the comfort of the Emigrants was explained.

The next day Captain Rogers received a reply from the firm, in which they enclosed certificates from the Chief Mate, denying the statement of the Assistant Agent, and two declarations from the Pilot and the Preventive Officer. At the same time they informed the Agent that unless the ship was allowed to proceed immediately on her voyage, they should hold the Government responsible for all pecuniary loss arising from its detention. The explanation of the Chief Mate, Mr. Miller, who is the offending party, is of no value, except as far as it is supported by the evidence of the Pilot and the Preventive Officer, neither of whose statements invalidates the assertions of the Assistant Agent. The Pilot states, that the vessel had been forced by the wind into a position, which required the services of all the officers and crew to clear her. The Preventive Officer states, that the Chief Mate ordered the Fourth officer to open the scuttles, but he does not tell us whether this was done or not. He corroborates the statement that there were no cabooses on the 23d, by saying that they were finished on the 24th.

On the same day, the 25th, Captain Rogers sent a reply to Messrs. Rustumjee Cowasjee and Co. stating that the case should be submitted to Government, and that he did not feel at liberty to permit the vessel to proceed to sea with Mr. John Miller as Chief Officer, on whose character for kindness or consideration, so much of the comfort and convenience of the emigrants depended. The case was therefore handed up to the Deputy Governor. The same day Messrs. Rustumjee and Co. replied to the Emigration Agent to say that they would not discharge the Chief Officer, but considered it a protection due to him to continue him in the ship. They also repeated the threat of the previous day, stating that the sum for which they should hold Government responsible for the detention of the vessel, was 300 Rupees a day.

This was on Saturday. On Monday the 27th, the owners of the vessel again addressed Capt. Rogers, informing him that they intended immediately to engage a Steamer, and to make Government pay for the demurrage both of the steamer and the vessel. At the same time they put themselves in communication with the local Government—but in a style so very different from that which they had adopted towards Capt. Rogers that it is difficult to suppose the letter to have come from the same parties, and to relate to the same transaction. In that letter there is not a whisper of making Government pay demurrage for the vessel, and still less for the steamer, and the owners express their willingness even to withdraw their protection from Mr. Miller if Government wishes it. The Deputy Governor on their assurance regarding the character of Mr. Miller, the Chief mate, agreed to allow the vessel to depart with him on board, and took off the embargo, directing a letter to be sent to the Protector of Coolies at the Mauritius, to request him to examine and report the state of the emigrants on the arrival of the vessel.

We have been thus particular in recapitulating the circumstances of this case, because of its bearing upon the question of emigration. This is the first instance in which an attempt has been made to compel the Emigration Agent to adopt the Ship owner's opinion instead of his own, on the propriety of allowing a vessel freighted with emigrants, to proceed to sea. It is the first instance in which an attempt has been made, we might almost say, to bully the responsible Agent of Government, and to deter him from the performance of his duty by threatening him with a prosecution for damages. It is important to record its complete failure. It is very gratifying to notice the vigilance and firmness which has been displayed by the Emigration Agent on whom rests the responsibility of checking those abuses to which this system of emigration is so liable. His conduct on the present occasion entitles him to the confidence and applause of the community; and while he continues in office, we have every reason to believe that the exportation of coolies will not degenerate into a slave trade.

REGISTRATION.—We have received a letter signed Register, from Furreedpore, from some individual who tells us that he has some experience in registering deeds. We would willingly publish the letter, though it is not over courteous, but for the wanton and offensive expression in which the writer indulges towards Mr. George Thompson. We have invariably adopted the rule of not allowing any correspondent to apply any epithet to a brother editor or any other individual, through the medium of our columns, which we would not venture to use on our own editorial responsibility, and we are not disposed to depart from it now. Neither do we see the justice of our correspondent's attack on Mr. Thompson, in reply to an article with which that gentleman had nothing to do, and which had nothing to do with him. We therefore withhold the letter, and offer a very brief reply to the writer.

He asks, where we have learnt that by the Scottish law, the validity of a deed dates from its registration and not its execution. We give him the quotation.

"No purchase of an estate is secure until the seisine (that is the instrument certifying that actual delivery has been given) is put on record, nor is any mortgage effectual until the deed is in like manner recorded. These records are accessible at all times to all persons."

He seems to object to our proposal that Registration be made compulsory. We certainly did not intend by the use of this word to suggest that every man should be sent to jail or sentenced to work on the roads who neglected to register his deeds. We meant to inflict no other penalty for neglect than that the deed itself should be deemed incomplete or invalid until it had been registered. He says we have little idea how difficult it is to keep the Natives from driving a Hackery and pair through the most stringent enactment of Government. We see little difficulty however in blocking up the path even of a coach and four by making it as necessary to the validity of a deed that it should be registered, as that it should be signed by the parties. Register says, that it is not necessary for a native in this country having a deed to register to take the trouble of going an hour's journey from his village. If he means that the man may send an agent to do the work for him, our argument for an improvement of the system so as to give greater facilities for registration than now exist, remains untouched. Registry offices are at present established only at Civil stations, and as every village is not a Civil station, either the man who executes the deed or his substitute must travel till he reaches one. Our correspondent doubts the correctness of our statement that the native is often obliged to dance a long attendance on a venal Native officer, and at length to give him some speed money to obtain the registration of his deeds. Far be it from us to affirm that such is the case at Furreedpore; though not for the reason assigned by Register, namely, that if it did occur, he must soon be made acquainted with it. There are more wicked things done in his Cutchery than he has ever dreamt of. We give him full credit for believing in the purity of his officers, and the regularity of his office, and we are happy to hear of such bright exceptions. Still we will venture to affirm that in too many instances the Native who wants his deeds registered speedily must be generous, and that nothing expedites registration so effectually as a little greasing of the Amlah's palm. The duty of Registration has never yet been placed in that position in our institutions, which its importance as the means of giving security to property, and of curtailing litigation, demands. The office is too often bestowed as an agreeable addition to allowances that are not large. The task of supervision is too often performed with laxity; the power of the office devolves on the Amlah, and the Amlah turns that power into money, as his ancestors have done since the golden age.—But when we have a little leisure from pressing engagements, we will take up the subject more fully.

TWENTY-FOURTH REPORT OF THE BENGAL AUXILIARY MISSIONARY SOCIETY.—We have recently been favoured with a copy of this Report of the operations of the London Missionary Society under the Bengal Presidency. The number of Missionary stations occupied by its Missionaries, exclusive of Calcutta and its suburbs, is four; two in Bengal, Chinsurah and Berhampore; and two in the Western Provinces, Benares and Mirzapore. In the circle around Calcutta the number of missionaries is six, one of whom, the Rev. Mr. Lacroix is absent in Europe. The Rev. Mr. Boaz has continued his labors at Union Chapel, and writes as follows: "The Church has been much as in former years—the congregation somewhat improved. Some interesting conversions have, through the blessing of Christ, been effected, but it does not become me to mention them in detail; the day of the revelation of all things will shew of what manner they are." It is highly gratifying to find that the entire expense of Union Chapel, including the Minister's salary, is defrayed by local subscription, and does not constitute any demand on the funds of the Parent Society.—The churches to the south of Calcutta, which are under the superintendence of the Rev. Mr. DeRodt, have suffered greatly from the calamities of the season, and the ravages of cholera during the past year. This fatal malady has carried off not fewer than one in fifteen. Fifteen members have been added to the Church, and twelve more are expected to join it before the end of the year, but, adds Mr. DeRodt, "though the belief in the truth of Christ is universal in these parts, not one heathen has come forward during the year as a candidate for baptism."—The station at Kishnapore is said not to be "in such a religious condition as could be desired." This has been owing to fluctuations in its superintendence, which have now ceased by the appointment of Mr. Paterson to the pastoral charge of it.—At the station of Bhuwanecpore, Mr. Campbell has continued his useful and indefatigable labors in the Christian Institution, assisted in particular departments by some of his brethren. This Seminary is designed for the instruction of Heathen youth upon Christian principles, and follows in a great measure the plan pursued at the General Assembly's Institution. The number of pupils is about three hundred. The nature of their pursuits may be judged of from the syllabus of studies given in the Report, and which for the first Class comprise the Scriptures, the Evidences of Christianity, Church and General History, Natural Philosophy, Astronomy, Plane Geometry, Algebra, Poetry and Composition. The success which has attended this and other attempts to combine a knowledge of Christian truth with general instruction, shews that the Natives are by no means adverse to the study of Divine Revelation, when offered to them through private and unofficial channels. Such seminaries will be found of the highest service to the good cause; for though the immediate results may not be great, they are silently and steadily undermining the fabric of Hindoo superstition, and preparing the country for a more general reception of Christianity.—In the Female Department of the Institution Mrs. Campbell has under instruction twenty-two girls, of whom five are orphans, and seventeen the children of Native Christians. "The great object in view," says the Report, "is moral and religious instruction, and the inculcation of such principles as will qualify the girls to become intelligent and respectable wives and mothers, and suited to the circumstances in which they are placed."

The station of Chinsurah has been deprived during the past year by death of the invaluable services of Mrs. Mundy, who was indeed and in truth 'a mother in Israel.' All that has been recorded in commendation of her humble, patient, and persevering efforts, falls far short of the truth. Her loss has been deeply felt; and we fear it will be long before another individual is found qualified by that rare combination of benevolence and energy which she exhibited, to fill the void which her removal has created.

At Berhampore, the duties of the station have been conducted during Mr. Hill's absence by Mr. Paterson and Mr. Lessel; their efforts have not been without success. Eight adults with their families were publicly baptized in the Mission Chapel on the 16th of June last. The Native Church now numbers seventeen, a small number, however, when considered as the result of more than seventeen years' labour; but encouraging when viewed as the first fruits of a more abundant harvest.

The report from Benares is not encouraging. There are three missionaries, and three catechists at the station. The whole number of Native communicants does not exceed eleven, the fruit of more than eleven years' labour. The Missionaries say, "Fifteen months of our short Missionary career have passed over us and not one convert from among the heathen." In these disheartening circumstances it requires the strongest Christian faith, and the firmest confidence in the promises of Scripture to prevent the mind from sinking into a state of hopeless despondency. Would not the Missionaries in this city, the head quarters of Hindoo superstition, act wisely in transferring their ministrations, for a season at least, to the country, and fixing the seat of their labors at some distance from a city so wholly given to idolatry. The experience of the Missionaries in Bengal shews that the mind of the simple villager is more open to the truths of the Gospel, than that of the proud and licentious inhabitant of the town; and certainly if there be one place in India, more than another which may be characterized as stony ground, it must be the city of Benares.

The subscriptions raised in the country in connection with the Mission at its different stations, amount to about 30,000 Rupees, leaving on the Society in London no other charge than the salaries of the Missionaries, which we may assume at 45,000 Rupees. Two-fifths of the entire expenditure of the Mission appear thus to have been furnished in India.

The number of Missionaries from Europe employed in the various departments of labour, is fourteen; the number of native preachers engaged in the work, does not exceed thirteen. This is altogether disproportionate. It is here that the arrangements of the Society appear to be essentially defective. The increase of European Missionaries is barred by the pecuniary circumstances of the Parent Society; but those who are already in the field might be rendered doubly useful, if they were adequately supplied with native assistants. Every European Missionary ought, at the very least, to have four Native teachers employed under his superintendence in the circle which he occupies. Their business should be to visit in rotation every village within their reach, once in the year, and oftener if possible, and to sow in them the immortal seed of the word. His duty should consist in superintending and encouraging their labours, and following up their exertions as opportunity offered, and in imparting instruction to those who might be drawn through their labours to examine the truths of the Gospel. To the creation of an indigenous ministry, the most earnest attention of this Missionary body ought to be given, in order that the costly agency of European labourers may be rendered more decidedly efficient. Mr. Campbell's institution at Bhowaneepore is intended, in part, thus to supply a succession of Native preachers; and it is pleasing to find that the Rev. Mr. Morton is engaged in directing the studies of the young catechists whom it is training up, "in a regular course of Bengalee reading intended, while they acquaint themselves thoroughly with the grammar and genius of the language, to lead them to a knowledge of the doctrines of the Hindoo School and system generally, and to furnish them with the arguments by which they may be successfully overturned." Mr. Boaz and Mr. DeRodt have also assisted Mr. Campbell in this paramount duty of training up Native ministers; but alas! the whole number of students, upon whom four Missionaries are thus bestowing their labours, does not appear to exceed four; whereas they ought to be forty. It is as clear as a mathematical axiom that fourteen Missionaries from Europe, each working with four Native catechists under his direction, will produce a far more powerful impression on the country, than forty European Missionaries, working with only a solitary Native assistant a piece.

THE COMET.—On Monday evening, when the sun had sufficiently retired to leave the other tenants of the skies liberty to shew themselves, we were surprised by the most magnificent sight we have ever had the fortune to witness. We think our remembrance of the great Comet of 1811 is distinct enough to admit of our saying, that its splendour was not to be compared with that of our present visitor. To such a length was its light drawn out on Monday evening, that it seemed impossible to believe it was a Comet. It appeared more like a long streak of singularly luminous cloud—or a ray of the Aurora Borealis, somehow wandering from its proper region. A Comet however it was; and we had the good fortune to catch its nucleus in the telescope. On Tuesday evening, the nucleus was discernible by the naked eye; although both the proximity of the sun, and the growing light of the moon were great hindrances to our observations, and their effect was aggravated by the clouds. At present we can only call attention to the subject—although one might suppose that unnecessary. The time for seeing the comet will, we imagine, be very short, at least in the evening: and the sight of it will be something to be remembered.

WEEKLY EPITOME OF NEWS.

THURSDAY, MARCH 2.

— The Theatre was knocked down, it is said, to Mr. Morrell, who originally assisted in raising it, for 40,000 Rs. The Star says, it was rumoured that the Missionaries had got as much as 45,000 Rs. for it. We doubt not such a rumour was spread to enhance its value at the auction sale. We have heard that it has been purchased in fact by Baboo Mootee Lall Seal, who intends to make it over to the new College or School he has established. Its vicinity to St. Xavier's College, of which this Seminary is to be a kind of branch, is said to have decided his mind on the subject.

— The new arrangements in the Supreme Court, consequent on the death of Mr. Vaughan, will effect a saving to Government of 9000 Rs. a year. Mr. E. B. Ryan is to be the Taxing Officer and Chief Clerk of the Insolvent Court, and Mr. R. O'Dowda, the Receiver.

Mr. Ballin, of the Theatre, has just been carried off in a very few hours by Cholera. It was only a day or two ago that he was walking on the Strand at Serampore apparently in perfect health. The next notice we have of him announces his death.

— The Second Sessions of the Supreme Court was opened yesterday by an address from Sir Lawrence Peel. The Calendar is light. It contains not more than fourteen or fifteen cases. Though the multiplication of the Sessions will make a more frequent demand on the time of the Jurors, they will be engaged at the Court for a shorter period on each occasion. The question is as long as it is broad, as it regards their convenience; but the benefit to the accused of a shorter confinement is most decided.

FRIDAY, MARCH 3.

— The capital prize of 100,000 in the last Calcutta lottery has been won by a Banian residing at Bombay. Considering how the current of prizes in these lotteries has latterly set in towards the sister Presidency, we are almost afraid that in commending the abolition of lotteries, which has just been effected, we may be suspected of envy.

— The coronation of the new Sovereign of Gwalior has been postponed by the advice of the Astrologers and Pundits to Wednesday the 22d. The Chiefs have been directed to assemble at the Palace on the night of the 21st, to witness the rites and ceremonies on the occasion. The lad will be proclaimed and placed on the guddee exactly at 33 minutes past 2, which is the auspicious moment, when the "heavenly intelligences" are most propitious. The presents made by the British representative on this occasion, it is said, will exceed three lakhs of Rupees.

— The local Government has called on the Magistrates to furnish a report on the operation of Act 21 of 1840, accompanied by any suggestions relative to the improvement of Municipal management. A large number of European and Native householders attended the last meeting of the Magistrates. They had been specially invited that they might have an opportunity of expressing their sentiments on the working of the Act. The Chief Magistrate put the following suggestions for their consideration seriatim:—

1st.—What had they—the Ratepayers, &c. effected in furtherance of that object? 2ndly. Had they any proposition to suggest to Government as suggestive of improvement to the present order of things? 3rdly. As the Town was divided into several municipal divisions whether they had any objection to undertake the Assessment, Collection, &c. or in other words, the entire management of the Rates of their respective divisions, and lastly, if willing, what terms would they propose in assuming the Trust, or to adopt the precise terms of the Act, viz. "provided that all such majority of Ratepayers, shall present a scheme, which shall obtain his (the Governor of Fort Williams) full approbation for the safe, and efficient execution of the Trusts, the transfer of which from the present authorities is sought for."—Baboo Bishoonath Mootee Lall, after a short consultation with the gentlemen present, asked for farther time to consider the subject, which was granted.

SATURDAY, MARCH 4.

— We have omitted to mention that Government has recently established a Mail Carriage, which affords suitable accommodation for two passengers with light baggage between Calcutta and Burdwan. The charge is the same as that for travelling by dawk, or eight annas a mile; but the rate of speed is more than double. The dawk seldom attains four miles an hour; the Mail coach moves at the rate of eight miles. We have not as yet seen any remarks by any individual who has availed himself of this mode of conveyance.

— The Star of this morning has an allusion to the present pressure on the money market—which means a difficulty in obtaining money by those who need it—and also an article on the subject, which we would transfer to our columns had we room. The Bengal Bank has been so besieged for loans, as to be obliged to raise the rate of interest to Seven per cent.

— The Bombay Times of the 22d instant, gives news from Scinde to the 5th February. Major Outram was at Hydrabad, endeavouring to persuade the Ameers to comply with the Governor General's demand. They will on no account consent to surrender the strip of ground along the banks of the Indus, which we demand of them. It would interfere with their hunting grounds. Without it, the navigation of the Indus cannot be considered as either open or safe.

MONDAY, MARCH 6.

— The Tenasserim steamer left Calcutta with a full complement of passengers. The Hon. Mr. Prinsep, Member of Council, embarked on her, and we have been informed that he left Calcutta under the usual salute. If so, this is the second instance in which salutes have recently been fired on a Sunday. On the occasion of Sir Hugh Gough's visit to Barrackpore, a salute was fired on Sunday evening, and long after sunset. We have always understood it to be the rule, that no salutes were to be fired except on 'lawful' days, and between sunrise and sunset.—Previous to Mr. Prinsep's departure, he received addresses from the Natives in English, Sanscrit and Persian. His reply, like every thing else which proceeds from his pen, is characterized by strong good sense, and clothed in chaste and appropriate language.

— We learn from the Star, that the Normandy Horses which were recently imported from France,—the first experiment of the kind—sold on an average of 803 Rs. each. Twenty-seven were brought to the hammer, and realized 21,680 Rupees.

— The anniversary meeting of the Mechanics' Institute is to be held to-morrow evening at the Town Hall, when Mr. George Thompson is expected to address the meeting. He will doubtless attract a very large audience. The attendance at the lectures delivered at this Institution has lately been very disheartening; scarcely fifty could be collected to listen to them.

— A Report of the Meeting of the Trustees of Fergusson, Brothers and Co. is given in this morning's Star. About twenty-nine lakhs of Rupees have been collected and appropriated to the redemption of pledged property. Only four concerns have been disposed of, but they have realized 25,000 Rs. more than the sums at which they were borne on the books. The out-turn of the Indigo concerns has been less than was anticipated. Mr. Jenkins, formerly one of the partners of the House, addressed the meeting and stated, that the representation made at the August meeting respecting the claims of Briggs, Thurburn and Co. on the house was incorrect. It was not confined, as had been asserted, to 55,000*l*; but amounted to no less a sum than 230,000*l*. He expressed his satisfaction at the mode which had been adopted to wind up the concern, and stated that a dividend of from four to five annas in the Rupee would eventually be forthcoming to the common creditor.

— The circumstances connected with the detention of the French Corvette, which had been chartered to convey coolies to the Mauritius, are given in the Englishman of this morning. For the particulars we refer the reader to an editorial article.

TUESDAY, MARCH 7.

— The intelligence from Scinde contained in the Bombay Times received this morning, is any thing but pacific. Letters had been received from Kerachee of the 10th February. H. M. 41st which had arrived at that station the previous day, had been detained by orders from Major Outram, till orders could be received from Sir C. Napier, or till amicable relations had been re-established. H. M. Ship Clio was to be despatched to Kerachee forthwith, and two steamers were to proceed thither without delay with from 800 to 900 recruits. It appears not only that the Ameers of Scinde have been playing a double game to gain time, but that the wild chiefs of Belochistan are any thing but friendly to the establishment of our influence in their vicinity. Meanwhile the hot weather has set in, and will be followed by the rains, and the rise of the Indus, and the country will become a swamp; and military operations will be attended with difficulty and danger.

— The Dost had not left Lahore on the 15th of February. A great deal of negotiation has been going on between him and the Seikhs, who stand in no little dread of the course which the Affghans may be induced to pursue, when again united under his vigorous rule. He has enlisted a large body of troops of all tribes, and is said to expect much opposition in the Khyber.

— The installation of the young Rajah at Gwalior, and of Mama Saib as his Prime Minister, has been accomplished without any disturbance, and apparently to the satisfaction of the people. The British Resident was present and presented His Highness with a splendid Khelat on the part of the Governor General. All idea of any interference on our part, either in the internal management of the country, or with the view of obtaining a slice of its territory, has died away.

— At the last half yearly meeting of the Agra Bank, the Report of the Directors of this very prosperous institution was read. The Capital of the has Bank been increased to 40 lakhs of Rupees; but the insolvency of Messrs. Briggs, Thurburn and Co. has involved the Bank in the first serious loss it has ever sustained, and 33,357 Rs. have been appropriated to meet the loss. Still it has been enabled to declare a dividend at the rate of Twelve per cent. per annum. The Branch Bank established at Madras, gives employment to Eight lakhs of Rupees worth of Capital.

— Three soldiers of H. M. 10th were tried on Friday last at the Sessions for highway robbery on the plain lying between the Fort and the City. One was acquitted; two were found guilty and sentenced to one year's imprisonment with hard labor. One of them, Baldwin, very impudently told the Judge he would rather have been subjected to seven years transportation. He and his fellow culprit behaved in the most outrageous manner on their being removed to the Jail.

—The Hurkaru states, that an audacious theft was committed in the Supreme Court yesterday. During a trial for burglary, one of the jurymen's umbrella was burglariously taken away.

— From the same journal we gather the amount of Import and Export Tounge in 1842. To elucidate it we add the tonnage of previous years.

| | Import Tonnage. | | Export Tonnage. | |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| | Ships. | Tonnage. | Ships. | Tonnage. |

| 1842 | 643 | 264,019 | 654 | 267,537 |

This last item includes the twelve months of the entire year. The preceding entries refer to the commercial year.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 8.

— The Delhi Gazette informs us that Dost Mahomed had taken his departure from Lahore by the 7th of February with all the members of his family. It appears that Capt. Nicholson still accompanies him. Ram Singh Bhya, we are informed was directed to go to Dost Mahomed's encampment, and enquire whether any letter had been received from Mahomed Akbar Khan. He returned, saying that none had been received.

— The statement given by us in a previous column, relative to the purchase of the Theatre by Baboo Mottee Lall Seal, appears to be incorrect. The Englishman of this morning states, that Mr. Morrell has resold it for Sixty Thousand Rupees to Capt. Baxter, whose wife was well known to the Calcutta public as Madame deLigny.

— The Chamber of Commerce, at the meeting held yesterday, took into consideration the lien which Indigo planters have upon the crop for which they have made advances. A Committee was appointed to draft a law to be submitted to Government upon this subject. The same subject, it is said, is under the consideration of the Union Bank.

CONTEMPORARY SELECTIONS.

GENERAL ORDERS BY THE HONOURABLE THE PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL OF INDIA IN COUNCIL.

Fort William, 28th February, 1843.

No. 49 of 1843.—Her Majesty's 26th and 49th Regiments being about to return to England, the President of the Council of India in Council cannot permit them to leave the shores of India without some public acknowledgement of their gallant services.

Both these Corps had served many years in India, and were remarkable for exemplary conduct before their embarkation for China. During the protracted struggle in a country new to Europeans, where the Troops were alternately exposed to great temptation and to harrassing privations, these Corps maintained their high character in all situations from Canton to Nanking, in quarters and in the field, and they have now returned triumphant, having won the warm approval of His Excellency Sir Hugh Gough, Bart. and G. C. B., by whom they were commanded.

The President of the Council of India in Council deeply sympathised in the sufferings and losses of these Corps from the effect of sickness arising from exposure and vicissitude of climate upon the distant service on which they were employed, and now that on their triumphant return to Bengal they are recalled to the United Kingdom, He begs thus publicly to assure the Officers, Non-Commissioned Officers and Soldiers of both these distinguished Regiments, that they carry with them the marked approbation of the Supreme Government.

The President of the Council of India in Council would neglect a gratifying duty if he omitted to notice the report of the General in Command upon the conduct of the Officers of the General Staff of the Army in China.

To the heads of Departments struck off by General Orders of the 13th instant, Lieutenant Colonel Mountain, C. B., Deputy Adjutant General, Lieutenant Colonel Hawkins, C. B., Deputy Commissary General, and Lieutenant Colonel Gough, C. B., Deputy Quarter Master General, The President of the Council of India in Council considers it due publicly to acknowledge their valuable and unremitting exertions.

In thus taking leave of a body of Men, who, in conjunction with the rest of the Forces serving in China, have rendered such signal services to their country, The President of the Council of India in Council has the satisfaction of assuring them, that those services have been most highly appreciated not only by the Government of India, but by their Sovereign, who has been pleased to direct, that Medals be granted to the Officers and Men of Her Majesty's and the East India Company's Naval and Military Forces without distinction, who took part in the more prominent events of the War, in commemoration of the success of Her Majesty's Arms in China, and in token of Her Majesty's high approbation.

PRESENTATION OF THE ADDRESS TO THE HON. H. T. PRINSEP, ESQ.

A deputation of Native Gentlemen waited on the Honourable Mr. Prinsep on Friday, when the following Address in English was read by Baboo Dwarkanauth Tagore.

To the Honourable Henry Thoby Prinsep, Esq.

SIR,—On the occasion of your departure from this land, which has been the scene of your protracted public labours, for that which is the land of your birth, and we trust will prove a place of long and honourable repose, we the undersigned, some of whom have enjoyed your friendship from the commencement of your useful career in this country, and all of whom have marked with satisfaction your public conduct, desire to convey to you some expression of our feelings of personal regard and public gratitude.

Those among us who have been on terms of private intimacy with you, have admired the kindness of your disposition, the amenity of your manners, and the steadiness of your attachments. The recollection of these features in your character, will increase the regret we shall experience, when we are deprived of your society.—Your loss to us, however, will be your restoration to the friends, who wait you in the land of your earliest and strongest affections.

But we address you, not merely as a friend whose private and personal virtues we admire, but, as a public functionary, retiring from a service, in which you have been called to fill various situations of great responsibility, extensive power, and high distinction. We believe that in all these situations, you have been guided by a love of justice, and a desire to advance, equally, the honour of the British name, and the happiness of the people of India. Without referring to the share, which form a knowledge of your character, we may well suppose you to have had, in the framing of many wise and salutary enactments, during the period of your connection with the Supreme Government, we recognize in you the framer of a Regulation, (Regulation VIII. of 1819,) which secured the most valuable benefits, both to the Zemindar and the Leaseholders of these provinces. You have also on various occasions manifested your desire, to maintain inviolate, the just rights of the landed Proprietary, and the sacred enjoyment of their religious privileges of all classes of the Native Community.

Yourself possessed of rare talents, and distinguished by high attainments in the Literature of India, you have been the fosterer and promoter of Oriental Learning, and the warm defender of that learning, when attempts have been made, either to supplant or to retard it. When you shall be no longer among us, we shall retain the evidences, in the works which you have published, of your ability to elucidate some of the most interesting portions of our National history.

We have thus endeavoured to enumerate a few of the special claims which you have upon our gratitude and esteem.

In parting with you, we venture to hope that while we shall follow you to your own country, with our best wishes for your personal and domestic happiness you will not, when far away forget those whom you leave behind, nor cease to feel a lively and generous interest in our future welfare. Your comprehensive knowledge, your ripe experience, and your eminent talents for public business, peculiarly fit you to take a leading part in those grave deliberations which affect the destinies of this great empire, and we therefore trust, that we shall yet derive benefit from the counsel you are qualified to give, and the co-operation you may be able to afford, in those great measures which concern the future Government of India.

To the expression of our sincere desire for your own safe arrival in England, we would unite an expression of a wish equally fervent, that with your estimable lady and your youthful family may also participate the same good fortune, and that you may together long live, to enjoy in abundance the richest blessings that can crown a life devoted to the public service.

In conclusion permit us to request that on reaching England, you will do us the favour of sitting for your Bust, to be hereafter preserved as a memorial of your residence among us.

We have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your most obedient Servants.

(Here follow a number of Signatures by Hindoos, Mahomedans and Parsees.)

In presenting the Address, the Baboo very feelingly expressed the regret that was felt by himself and his countrymen in parting with one whom they had known for so many years—one who had filled the offices under Government, that he had held, with so much credit to himself and satisfaction to those under him. He had been desired by his friends to request that Mr. Prinsep would kindly favour them by sitting for a Bust, when he arrived in England, as they most anxiously wished to have some lasting memorial of one with whom they parted with heart-felt regret.

An Address in Sanscrit, composed by Kamla Kanth, Pundit of the Sanscrit College, was read by a young Native.

Moulavi Hafez Ahmed Kabeer, of the Madrissa read an Address in Persian.

To all of which Mr. Prinsep made the following reply in a most eloquent and feeling manner.

GENTLEMEN,—It is indeed with great satisfaction and pride, that I receive from you this unequivocal testimony of the approbation and esteem of the Community you so worthily represent. The varied phrase and languages in which your sentiments have been conveyed, gives them in my eyes additional value, for I see all united in the same feeling towards myself, all yielding to the same pure and honest desire to bear testimony to conduct and qualities you approve. To that pure feeling, do I ascribe the honours you have paid me: for as I have not been a large dispenser of patronage, nor have filled situations which gave the power of placing many persons under obligation, the most sceptical might seek in vain for any source from which they could have flowed, that is not as honourable to those who have joined in them as flattering and exalting to me the unworthy object of your praise.

Gentlemen, I accept the assurances of your esteem and personal regard as an evidence that my feeling towards yourselves has been appreciated, and has met the return of good will, it has been my unvarying aim to merit and secure. Believe me the day of my final departure from these shores will not be to me a day of joy. It is now upwards of a third of a century, since I first set foot on this land, and there have been rivetted in this long period many links of affection that it will cost me a bitter pang to rend asunder. True! I have friends and dear relations to welcome me to the land of birth, relations that I confess a longing desire to see again; still the scenes and persons I leave behind are so associated with every thought and action of the best period of my existence, that this country must ever have a strong hold on my affection, and must occupy the larger part by far of my recollections.

Gentlemen, you have touched upon my public conduct, and with every right to do so, for I am known to you as the projector or adviser of many measures of great public concern to you, and for opinions offered with various fate on most of the questions of policy and internal administration, that have been agitated during the period of my residence among you. It cannot but be highly gratifying to me to learn that so far as the part I have taken in such affairs is known to you, it has met with your approbation: for although all constitutional responsibility in this country lies in the gradations of authority, so that the concern of individual servants of the state in public measures can be accurately known for censure or for praise to their official superiors only, enough always transpires to enable the public to disseminate the characters of men in high station, and to discover those of them whose views and opinions command their sympathy. If in advising for the public good, it has been my happy lot to fall in with your notions of what was wise and right, I rejoice at the circumstance, for the confirmation it affords to the accuracy of my own conclusions; and when I reflect hereafter on the course of my public life in India, the assurance that I have had your concurrence will be to me a source of perpetual consolation and comfort. Gentlemen, this testimony of your approbation is the more prized by me, that I am not conscious in the measures I have advised or advocated of having ever striven for popularity, or unduly studied to conciliate and seek favor with any classes of the population. The general good has been my exclusive aim, and in pursuing it I have frequently been exhibited to you as the strenuous supporter of the rights of Government, as seeking to consolidate and improve its resources: your intelligence, Gentlemen, has been proof against the delusion of regarding as the test of good-will towards the people an indifference to those rights and resources, and in the approbation you have bestowed on my career, you evince that liberal spirit, which recognises in the zealous discharge of public duty, accompanied by an earnest desire to perform that duty with strict justice and with kind consideration towards all, the soundest claim to popular estimation and public favor. Your assurances lead me to believe that I have established such a claim, and if when I quit these shores, I leave behind me the reputation of having always counselled what I thought just and right unbiassed by fear or favor, unawed by the frowns of power, unseduced by views of personal interest and ambition, I ask for no more, but shall retire with the consciousness of having done my duty, and with the conviction that I have not been misconceived by those to whom my life's best services have been devoted.

Gentlemen, I leave you before the full allotted term of those services is completed, without the plea of a broken constitution to justify my premature retirement: I offer you no excuse for this. You have kindly expressed the hope that I may find the opportunity, as you know that I must feel the desire, to exercise a beneficial influence upon questions which affect the destinies of this great empire, when such questions are under consideration with those who rule these destinies elsewhere. I hail the expression of this hope, as an earnest that in your hearts you acquit me of indifference to your interests in thus resolving upon early departure, and I feel assured by it, that I shall not suffer in your esteem for changing while still in the vigor of life and health, and with what faculties I possess still unimpaired, the arena upon which to exert myself in your behalf. Yes, gentlemen I promise you the continuance of my best efforts and services wheresoever I may be, and you have the observation of my life passed amongst you, and your own judgement upon my conduct during that life for security, that your interests in my hands will not be betrayed or trifled with.

Permit me now to take my leave of you. I see many here, with whom I have lived on terms of intimacy and personal friendship; some few who have known me since the day when I first set foot on this land, but many more who have grown to manhood since my career in India commenced, and several over whose course of education I have officially presided and to whose intellectual enlightenment, I trust, I may have somewhat contributed. If I could believe, that amongst all these there are any, who through their favorable estimation of me have been impressed with sentiments, a shade more favourable towards the system and form of Government under which we have all lived, I should indeed depart happy and contented. It is my earnest prayer that you may always find in the highest stations, men, who have the same regard and fellow-feeling towards you that I have, who take the same interest in the literature and institutions you prize, and have the same tender consideration for all that you reverence, that you have witnessed and applauded in me, and that you may entertain for, their talents, their principles, their characters, and their opinions, the same respect and esteem that you have so lavishly declared towards me.

I am more gratified than I can express by the flattering request with which you have concluded. I thank you cordially for the kind wishes you have expressed for my prosperous voyage, and still more so for uniting my family in that wish, and I trust there are many here, who will live to see some member of that family following in his father's steps, seeking honor from you by the same means, and reaping in the end the same rich harvest of applause and commendation from this enlightened community.

I now bid you a last farewell. May your recollection of me never be less favorable then that you now express.—Cal. Star.

ASIATIC SOCIETY'S MEETING.

The usual Monthly Meeting of the Asiatic Society was held at the Society's rooms on Friday evening.

Sir J. P. Grant, presided.

Sir H. Seton, Major Forbes, Mr. Heatley, Dr. Huffnagle, Mr. Masters, Mr. Blythe and several other members were present.

Professor Mohl of Paris, was elected an Honorary Member.

Mr. Piddington read the Minutes of the last Monthly Meeting, at which a letter from the Hon'ble H. T. Prinsep, Esq., had been read, stating that in consequence of his being about to leave India, he begged to resign the Office of President.

It was resolved on the recommendation of the Committee of Papers, that a letter be addressed to the Hon'ble H. T. Prinsep, expressing the deep regret of its members for the loss of his invaluable aid, and their hope that he would continue to forward the interests of the Society in Europe.

Sir J. P. Grant was quite sure that he need not revert to the great loss the Society would sustain by Mr. Prinsep's leaving them, nor the deep sense of obligation they were under to one who had done more for Oriental Literature, and conferred more benefits on the Institution, than any other Member that had been connected with it—he could not do justice to the feelings of the meeting nor express sufficiently his own regret at the loss they were about to sustain.

An Address was then read by Mr. Piddington and agreed to. At the suggestion of Sir J. P. Grant it was agreed that the Secretary be empowered to sign the Address on behalf of the Society, and that a deputation consisting of Sir John Peter Grant, Sir Henry Seton, Major Forbes, and such other members as chose, wait upon and present the Address to Mr. Prinsep. It was recommended and agreed that the Society request that its late President do oblige it by sitting for his portrait, and that a subscription be opened to defray the expence.

It was further recommended and agreed to the Society to request that the Right Hon'ble W. W. Bird, will be pleased to accept of the President's Chair, and that the deputation do also wait upon him with the request of the Society.

The Secretary read the list of books received, and a letter from Dr. Hutchinson accompanying a Chinese cross-bow, quiver and Tartar helmet.

The Curator's Report of February was read, in which they acknowledged the receipt of a fragment of the celebrated Porcelain Tower at Pekin from Captain Hall of the Steamer Nemesis.

Sir Lawrence Peel and Sir W. Seton were then proposed as Members of the Society, and will be balloted for at the next meeting.

The meeting was adjourned to the first Friday in next month.—Calcutta Star, March 6.

OPENING OF SEAL'S COLLEGE.

Yesterday morning a very numerous and highly respectable gathering of European and Native gentlemen, (we also noticed several ladies.) took place at the house of Baboo Muttylall Seal, for the purpose of formally opening the College, which the worthy Baboo in his munificence has founded for the education of Hindoo youth; the number receiving education at one time, to be limited to five hundred. Among the party assembled, were the Chief Justice, Sir J. P. Grant, the Advocate-General, the principal members of the Calcutta Bar, Baboo Dwarkanauth Tagore, Captain Birch, Rev. K. M. Bannerjee, George Thompson, Esq., the Right Reverend Dr. Carew, (the Roman Catholic Vicar Apostolic,) the Professors of St. Xavier's College &c. &c. &c. A little after ten o'clock, the proceedings were commenced by Mr. JOHNSON, of St. Xavier's College, who rose and said, that as the future Superintendent of the Institution, it devolved upon him to state the object and plans of the proposed college. This he did in a feeling and eloquent speech, which was warmly responded to. He bore testimony to the noble generosity, and equal liberality of mind, which had been displayed by the founder. In all the interviews they had had with the worthy Baboo, they had discovered no narrowness of views, no desire to cramp the future operations of the college; but on the contrary, a largeness of conception, and a munificence of disposition, which reflected upon him the highest credit. While the founder, on his part, would do all that his means enabled him to do, the teachers on their part, would freely devote their time and energies to the work of instruction. The members of the order to which he belonged, had long earnestly desired to find an opening for being useful to the people of India. He and others who had come from Europe, bringing with them the learning and the science of the most enlightened regions of the globe, were eager to give the benefits of their acquirements to the native of India. (Applause.) With food and raiment they were content. Their only ambition was to be of service to their fellow creatures. Mr. Johnson then described the arrangements which had been made at St. Xavier's College for affording the pupils in Seal's College the benefit of the instructions of their various Professors, and concluded his excellent address, by pronouncing an eloquent and just eulogium upon the FOUNDER of SEAL'S COLLEGE.

A good deal of merriment was occasioned during the delivery of Mr. Johnson's address by the following incident. In the middle of one of the learned gentleman's most effective passages, the words "hush," "hush," were uttered by several persons near the entrance to the hall, accompanied by cries of "make way," "make way for the Deputy Governor." One gentleman addressed the speaker and said "Pray, Sir, be good enough to pause for a moment, as the Deputy Governor has just arrived." Every eye was directed to the entrance. The distant auditors rose and stretched their necks to be witnesses of the respect paid to the esteemed Deputy. The Bishop moved his chair to give room. Baboo Muttyloll Seal advanced to receive his distinguished guest at the foot of the steps. The native gentlemen who crowded the passage leading to the street, fell back against the wall and formed an avenue. A gilded chair with a crimson silk cushion stood vacant to receive the President of the Council. The orator suspended his oration, and fixed his gaze upon the entrance. At length was seen approaching a number of native gentlemen, as an escort of honour, through whose white turbans might be now espied an occasional glimpse of the silvery locks of the expected Patron. "It will be very nice," whispered a lady, to have Mr. Bird among us to-day, wont it? How very kind of him to come, is it not? "Hush, here he is." The heralds descended the steps and filed off, when lo! there stood revealed to view, not the Honourable W. W. Bird, Esq., First Member of Council and Deputy Governor of Bengal, but the portly figure and smiling face of—Mr. Patrick!!! who seemed not a little astonished, if we may judge from the very extraordinary dilation of his organs of sight, at the aspect of the assembly, and the sudden greatness thrust upon him. The Judges of the Supreme Court covered their faces, and—laughed. The Vicar Apostolic looked—blank. The Baboo—confounded. The chair stood—empty. Mr. Patrick stood—still. The orator picked up the thread of his discourse and—went on. There were some who were uncharitable enough to hint a suspicion, that our worthy friend Mr. G. had an intention of playing off a hoax. We don't believe it. Mr. P. is too modest, and though we dare say he would have no objection to be a Deputy Governor, (and make a very good one too,) we don't think he wishes to be mistaken for one—while he is not.

SIR LAWRENCE PEEL rose and said, that though broken in health and depressed in spirit, he could not absent himself from the meeting. He then delivered a very admirable address in favor of the object, and sat down amidst much applause.

A PROFESSOR of St. Xavier's College next addressed the meeting on the advantages of a scientific education, and described the course he intended to pursue.

MR. GEORGE THOMPSON bore testimony to the zeal of the order to which the Professors belonged, in the cause of education. He pointed to their self-denying and successful labours in different parts of the world, and could not doubt that in a College, composed of men so skilful in the art of teaching, and youths so apt to learn as the Hindoos, there would be witnessed some of the noblest results.

Several speeches in Bengalee were delivered by native gentlemen. All present seemed much delighted with the meeting. We most cordially wish success to the new Hindoo College, and hope it will run our honourable race with its competitors.—Hurk.

SEAL'S COLLEGE.—Founded in the year 1843.

The object of this foundation is to provide for the education of Hindoos, so as to fit them to occupy posts of trust and emolument in their own country.

The course of education will comprise English Literature in all its branches, History, Geography, Elocution, Writing, Arithmetic, Algebra, Geometry, and the higher Mathematics, the Philosophical Sciences, and the practical application of Mathematics.

The College will be open free of all charge to such Hindoos only as the founder shall think proper to admit. However, one rupee per month will be demanded to cover the expenses of Books, Stationery, &c. The surplus, if any, will be expended in furnishing the College with Mathematical Instruments, &c.

The College will be entirely under the management of the Directors of the Parent College of St. F. Xavier, Chowringhee, who undertake to furnish Professors according to the increasing demand of the establishment.

The number of the scholars will be limited to 500.

The hours of attendance will be from 10½ in the morning, to 4½ in the afternoon. On all Sundays and on some few holidays, the Professors will be unable to attend.

Until a suitable building can be provided, the schools will be held in the house of Baboo Mutty Loll Seal, the Founder, to whom application for admittance is to be made.

The schools will be open on Wednesday, March the 1st.—Calcutta Star, March 2.

DOST MAHOMED.

"We understand that Dost Mahomed was at Lahore so late as the 15th of February, busily employed in raising men for an onward move towards Cabool. He expects stout opposition in his progress through the Khybur, and is determined to make a dash for it, and thus return with eclat to his former Capital. He took in his train a large number of men from Loodianah, and does not seem to be particular as to the men he entertains, his object being apparently numbers, rather than quality. Among his followers are to be seen Hindoostanees, Punjabees, Cashmeerees, and Affghans, forming altogether a motley group.

We learn that a great deal of negociation has been on the tapis between the Ex-ruler of Cabool since his arrival at Lahore and the Seikh Authorities, and that his success will mainly depend upon his playing a deep and judicious game while in the Punjaub, and that the slightest waywardness on his part to the Seikh demands or wishes while in their power, may be fatal to his views.

It is said that Rajah Dhian Sing came expressly to Lahore to have an interview with the Dost, and that several followed it.

The Dost is well versed in Affghan duplicity and chicanery, and must be well aware that he must stretch both to the utmost to get clean and safe through the Punjaub and into his own country, surrounded as he is by dangers of no ordinary character, arising from the Seikh dread of his name and designs on Peshawur, as well as from the able and subtile character of the Seikh minister, who will be happy to have in his power the conqueror of Hurree Sing.

His friends wish him every success, but forbode ill to his undertaking.

Lieut. Nicholson in charge of the Dost, is not to accompany him beyond Lahore, which the latter was to leave on the 18th instant for Peshawur.

It is understood that the general feeling of the Seikhs is alarm at his return to Cabool, and the chances are that he will never see Peshawur."—Agra Ukhbar.

SCINDE.

"Letters of the 16th have been received, by boat, from Kurrachee, bringing news of a warlike and very important character indeed. H. M's 41st had arrived the day preceding; but simultaneously with their arrival, a letter from Major Outram had been received, ordering their detention till further orders from General Sir C. Napier, or until they were made aware that amicable relations had been re-established. Besides this we have no particulars, and are left in a great measure to speculate for ourselves. Orders have, we are given to understand, been issued for the immediate despatch of H. M's Sloop Clio to Kurrachee: two steamers are about to be sent off to the same quarter without delay, with from 800 to 900 recruits. Indeed, at the Presidency there are at present no men to spare; and Poonah must be drawn upon if more soldiers should be required. Letters have, we learn, been received from Pahlunpore, intimating, that additional men may be required in that quarter, as hostile manifestation begin to exhibit themselves to the westward. For the accuracy of the Kurrachee portion of this information alone, we pledge ourselves. It has for some time been rumoured, that whatever we might do with the Ameers themselves, the Beloochistan Chiefs would by no means permit the arrangements we have for some time had in contemplation, to take effect in peace. These fierce and undisciplined marauders hold very lightly the authority of their nominal superiors, when this tends to the introduction of foreign powers amongst them or to the curtailment of their own wild and savage independence. Even were the Ameers to subscribe our treaties,—which, hitherto, they have steadily resisted,—their people would by no means hold themselves bound, in consequence of the submission of their superiors, to yield obedience to our pleasure.—*Bomb. ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.

TO MAJOR GENL. SIR ROBERT H. SALE, G. C. B.

SIR,—We are deputed by our body, the Bengal Civil Service, to acquaint you that they are desirous of presenting you with a sword as a Testimonial of the high admiration with which they have been impressed by your memorable defence of Jellalabad, and we shall esteem it an honour if you will permit us to have the gratification of communicating to our Fellow Servants that you have been pleased to accept this token of their estimate of your claims to the public gratitude.

We have, &c.

Calcutta, 28*th January*, 1843.

To H. MOORE, J. H. D'OYLY, and G. H. BUSHBY, ESQUIRES.

GENTLEMEN,—I need not say how gratified I felt on the reception of your letter of the 28th ultimo. It is at all times pleasing to receive praise, but when this proceeds from so distinguished a body as the Bengal Civil Service, it is highly to be appreciated. I have therefore to beg you will convey to the Bengal Civil Service my acceptance of the sword they propose honouring me with, and to return them my warmest thanks for the flattering notice they have taken of my endeavours to perform my duty as a soldier.

I remain, Gentlemen,
Your much obliged servant,
(Signed) ROBERT SALE,
Major Genl.

Kurnaul, 18*th Feb.* 1843.

To the Editor of the Friend of India.

SIR,—I have the highest pleasure to inform you and the public, that this day at the hour of 3 P. M. a general Meeting was held at Salkhia for the purpose of considering the public grievances of this district, and presided by Baboo Kistakoomar Buksy Brahman. Baboo Kashishur Mittre, who was the originator of the Meeting, delivered a long speech on the object in view, the philanthropy, benevolence and love of Geo. Thomson, Esq. towards our country, and the grievances undergone by the ryots by the operations of Dowla[illegible], i. e. Resumption Regulation, and Huftum [illegible] i. e. Reg. VII. of 1799, and by the oppressions of Indigo planters, European Putnee Talookdars, Darogas, &c. &c. Upwards of 200 people were present, and a number of public grievances were exposed to the Meeting by the several bonâ fide suffering ryots, and it has been resolved that they be communicated to Mr. Thomson, engrossed in a Durkast. A Committee of 15 men has been formed for the purpose of preparing the Durkast; and Baboo Kashishur Mittre has been appointed Secretary to it. The Meeting separated at ½ past 7 P. M.

It is gratifying to observe that the people of Jessore have taken such a bold step for the exposition of their grievances; and it is highly desirable that the example be followed up by the people of other Zillahs, and thus Mr. G. Thomson be furnished with all the necessary and accurate information which he is delegated to collect, from the very mouths of the poor ryots; otherwise any information of the interior supplied at the metropolis is as good as that at London.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
ONE OF THE MEETING.

Jessore, the 26*th Feb.* 1843.

To the Editor of the Friend of India.

SIR,—I feel much honoured and gratified by the notice you have been pleased to take of my letter of the 10th ult. and had I supposed you would have shewn it so much attention I would have given it another tone than that of bravado in which it was written, and which furnishes a full excuse for the slight sharpness with which you have tinctured your answer.

That the Church of England retained too much that was Romish has ever since the reformation been a favourite battle ground of her Sectarian Opponents, and I think we may deduce both from argument and experience that the errors of Puseyism will ere long be attributed to this defect in the Church itself. The impression left on my mind, after reading the Circular to the Parishioners of Hoxton was, that there had been an intention to brand a Clergyman with Puseyism for endeavouring to discharge conscientiously his professional duties. At the time the Registration Act was passed, much apprehension was entertained that it would lead to frequent omissions of Baptism, which (without going into a doctrinal controversy) is, I think considered by the Church of England a rite of the first importance.

It is now some time since I was in England, and possibly the old High Church or selfstyled Orthodox Party among whom I was educated, may be synonimous with the set of Religionists now called Puseyites whom the Press and Pulpit of India, at least those of Serampore and the Calcutta Cathedral have concurred in condemning. If so, the expression left is accounted for. I intend this entirely as a letter of explanation, and do not wish to give you any trouble in noticing it.

Your obedient servant,
J. H. S.

Calcutta, 6th March, 1843.

I think the word "pretend," signifies to aim, without reference to the merits or demerits of the means or intentions, though frequently restricted to the latter.

To the Editor of the Friend of India.

SIR,—I am no advocate for entering into discussions on business matters until called upon to do so by my official superiors, but as I happen to know a little about the subject I am not willing the Editor of the Bengal Hurkaru should carry the weight his insinuations in his Editorials would fain obtain.

With regard to one in the Hurkaru of the 22nd instant, I can assure you a special Sessions and Jail delivery was held at Malda during November, 18[illegible] and another in the month of September, 1842, and that both were held at the suggestion of the Sessions Judge of that Joint Magistracy, who came dak both times, being only a few hours in transit and returned in the same way after conducting his business. I can also inform you that the Sessions Judge of Malda supported the opinion of the then Officiating Joint Magistrate, in advocating Periodical Sessions at that station, and

I therefore leave the Editor of the Hurkaru to account to his subscribers and his conscience (if he possesses one) for his correct and well advised article under comment.

Yours faithfully,
W. B.

THE CHURCH OF SCOTLAND.—The late "Convocation" or Non-intrusion Minsters have forwarded a memorial for the consideration of Sir Robert Peel and the other members of the Government. The document is of considerable length, but the following is the most important portion of it :—

"The memorialists desire again to express their anxiety that their present appeal, and the measures they have felt themselves obliged to adopt, may not be misunderstood. The deliberate conviction to which they have come—that, if they cannot have liberty to maintain and act upon the principles which they have avowed, in the position of a church established by the state, they must relinquish that position, is not the result of disappointment or irritation, or any want of a due regard to the important benefits which the present establishment of the church confers upon the people of Scotland. On the contrary, such is their sense of the value of that establishment, such their apprehensions of the many evils likely to result from its disruption or overthrow, and such, also, their anxiety to remain in the discharge of their spiritual duties, in the preaching of the Gospel, and the oversight of their parishes, under the shade of that national protection and favour, which was the happy fruit of the prayers, the labours, and the sufferings of their fathers, that they have been willing to make the utmost possible concessions with a view to the restoration of harmony, and, were not the principles at issue vital and fundamental, there is no compromise to which they would not consent, no sacrifice of feeling or even of consistency to which they would not submit, if by any means they might avert a calamity, the very idea of which they have all along been most reluctant to entertain.

"But they feel that the time is come when the final determination of this question can be postponed no longer, and as they cannot disguise from themselves, so neither would they deem it right to conceal from the Government and the country, the inevitable result of a continued refusal on the part of the Legislature of that indispensable measure of relief which they think they have a good right to ask and good reason to expect. Their situation, in truth, is most painful and embarrassing. They cannot conduct the affairs of the church in the manner in which the civil courts have prescribed : they could not themselves remain in the communion of a church which should agree to regulate her procedure according to the principles now held to be involved in the civil law ; nor can they allow others, in the same communion, to do so. But it is well known that a large minority of the church's office bearers are prepared, in obedience to the civil courts, to cast off her authority ; and were the church, while continuing to claim the advantage secured to her by law, to persevere, as she must in principle do, in maintaining her discipline over all who, under whatever civil sanction or compulsion, transgress her orders and violate her laws, founded, as she believes, on the word of God,—not only would she be exposed to grievous obloquy and reproach, but a spectacle both painful and scandalous must, in all probability, be exhibited, of two sections of the same church striving with one another, in the use of civil pains on the one hand, and spiritual censures on the other. Hitherto, notwithstanding the allegations of her enemies to the contrary, the church has never felt herself compelled to inflict the severities of her discipline on any of her ministers or members for an act done under the compulsion of the civil courts, or in obedience to what has been declared to be the civil law. She has proceeded against none, excepting the few individuals who of their own accord, and without any plea of necessity, have placed themselves in a position of defiance of authority. Even this, however, has led to unseemly consequences ; and after the final decision of the supreme civil court, affirming the principles upon which not a few of her office-bearers have intimated their determination to act, it is plain that if no legislative relief be conceded, and if the Church proceed according to her own views of duty against those who transgress her rules, she has no alternative but to deal forth the censures of ecclesiastical power in a manner that must provoke retaliation, and must necessarily lead to inextricable confusion and disorder. The memorialists are not ashamed to confess, that they shrink from such an exhibition as would thus be presented before the people of Scotland ; and this is one practical consideration, among others, which has weighed much in determining them to bring this whole question to a final issue, and to retire from their position, as connected with the establishment, rather than prolong an unseemly contest with the civil courts, which deny, and with their brethren, who set at nought, their jurisdiction—a contest which could not fail to be attended with most disastrous consequences, affecting both the majesty of law, and the higher interests of religion.

"But the memorialists have stated other grounds on which chiefly they rest their determination, as matter of Christian duty and sound principle. It has been with extreme pain that they have felt themselves compelled to oppose the civil courts in any of the decisions which they have pronounced. They have done so only because their consciences required it, and because they considered that the constitution of the Church, as established by law, sanctioned and authorized the measures which they adopted. They are still most decidedly of the same opinion. But, as they claim for the Church no right of resistance to the civil magistrate in the exercise of his authority, as determining the terms on which he will establish the Church, so they feel, that if the Government and legislature of the country do not interfere for their relief from the condition to which they are now reduced by the Supreme Civil Court—viz. the condition of subjection in things spiritual to civil control—it is not for them, as servants of that Lord whose kingdom is not of this world, to vindicate the constitution further ; they can only protest, with all solemnity, against the wrong which they believe the Church has sustained, and leave with the rulers of this nation itself, the responsibility of allowing national institution of the Established Church of Scotland to be subverted and overthrown.

"In conclusion, the memorialists beg leave very respectfully to remind her Majesty's Government of the obligation under which states and their rulers lie to Him by whom kings reign and princes decree justice—whose cause they are bound to espouse, and whose Church it is alike their interest and their duty to support and secure in all the freedom with which He has endowed it. The memorialists deeply feel the solemnity of the question now submitted to the decision of Parliament and of the nation ; it being, in the opinion of the memorialists, nothing less than the question, whether the Church unalterably established in Scotland is to be preserved inviolate, according to the faith of treaties, or whether this great kingdom is to commit, as the memorialists would regard it, the heinous national offence, of not only breaking the national faith, but of disowning the authority of Christ in his own house, and refusing to recognize his Church as a free spiritual society, instituted by him, and governed by his laws alone.

"The memorialists now leave the whole subject in the hands of her Majesty's Government, uniting in most earnest prayers to Almighty God that He may direct the councils of her Majesty to the conclusion which shall most conduce to the good of the country and to His own glory.

"Signed in the name and by the authority of the assembled ministers.

"THOMAS CHALMERS, D. D.
"Chairman of the Meeting."

ROBERT HALDANE, ESQ.—This venerable gentleman died at Edinburgh on December 26th, in the 79th year of his age. Mr. Haldane devoted his whole energies from an early period to the cause of true religion, and with an efficacy rarely in any age equalled. At a period when Moderation in the Church of Scotland was at its meridian, or rather at its midnight, he arose, and imagined the gigantic enterprise of evangelising India ; with a view to which it was that his estate at Airthrey was sold. But after some progress was made, the measure was arrested by a public and official interdict from the Board of Control, rested on the dread of an unhingement of our Indian dominion, by an interference with the superstitions of the natives ; and Mr. Haldane turned his attention to the revival of religion in Scotland itself, when prevented from dealing with a distant colony. We have cause to know that, as early as 1810, he had spent 56,000*l*. in the cause of the gospel ; what since we know not, but he never ceased from his liberalities. —Ibid.

THE MORMONS.—As a number of our townsmen are taken in the snares of this delusion, we quote for their edification, the following paragraph from one of the American papers received this week :—"These people are still busy, but the prophet, Joe Smith, is absent to some parts unknown—probably gone on a visit to paradise. In consequence of the increase of his holy business, Joe has resigned the editorship of the Times and Seasons into the hands of Brother Taylor, who is said to be under the special inspiration of Gabriel. The temple is rapidly going up—a cargo of lumber having arrived from the Upper Mississippi to further the work."—Birmingham Advertiser.

MISCELLANEOUS.

OPENING OF 1843.—But we had intended to say, that we are commencing a new chapter of our labours under inspiriting circumstances, not in reference merely to our Journal, but with regard to the aspect of public affairs, which, if still overcast, exhibits a break in the clouds. On casting a glance over the events of the last twelve months, we are struck with evident signs of a material advance. Lord John Russell once said, not very sagely, that we cannot afford to have a Revolution every year. The truth is, however, that every year brings with it a revolution, and all progress is effected by revolution. We are not sure but that the Tariff is as great a revolution, and as violent a one, as the Reform Bill ; with this difference, that the Prerogative was stretched to carry the latter through the House of Obstructives ; while, in the financial Reform, the discontented aristocracy were curbed and made to succumb by the all-powerful autocratic Minister—the son of a cotton-spinner. The House of Lords once more reduced to that dignified insignificance which best comports with the safety of our institutions and the public weal, contented itself, during the last session, with registering the measures that had been dictated to the Commons by the Conservative Premier ; measures submitted to as necessary, but every one of which has proved a rod of retributive punishment to the party who placed the reins of power in his hand.

The Sliding Scale, that precious trick of legerdemain, deceiving the farmer with a mockery of protection, and holding out to the merchant a bounty upon gambling,—has succeeded as admirably as the genius of mischief could desire. It has kept out American corn, and produced a retaliatory Tariff, destructive of our trade ; it has carried bankruptcy and ruin into the Corn trade to an unexampled extent ; and, with the aid of a good harvest, has produced a glut in the market at the moment most injurious to the farmer, and least beneficial to the public. The Tariff, unsettling every thing, and settling nothing, because arbitrary and partial, and leaving the main articles of import untouched, has been a heavy blow and great discouragement to the cattle-dealers and cattle-lords, although they have been more frightened than hurt ; but it has knocked on the head the Idol of Protection in which they trusted. It is now felt to be inevitable that other changes must follow,—that the present Corn-law must be abandoned ; and the farmer is invited to consider "whether the change, great though it be, were not better made at once." Meantime all improvements are at a stand, and agricultural industry is paralysed. The Income-tax is the third great collateral benefit conferred upon the country by the Conservative majority of Ninety-one,—the third lash of Peel's triple scourge,—the thumb-screw of finance,—admirably adapted to render taxation as vexatious and painful a process as possible, and thereby to teach every man to reflect what is done with the proceeds of taxation. It is a severe lesson, but the people may be rendered wiser by the imposition.

Upon the whole, it cannot be doubted, that the Corn-law question, or rather, the broader question of Free-trade and the Rights of Labour,—has rapidly advanced during the past year ; and much has also been done in dispelling a host of popular illusions, which, during the reign of the Whigs, it was the interest and study of the Conservatives to perpetuate. The new light that has been let in upon almost every subject of legislation, entitles the Tories to share with the discoverers of the Bude light and the Boccius the honour of turning old principles to a new account in the science of illumination. The Whigs burn dimly by the side of the new Tory lights. Upon the subject of National Education, Lord Wharncliffe is as good a Liberal, as thorough a utilitarian, as the noble Ex-president of the Council. The Irish Bishops protest against the Popish Education Board in vain. The No Popery agitation is quenched. It is quite refreshing to be relieved from the endless Irish questions, and to find it admitted by Conservative journals, that the landlords and the agrarian system are the cause of the crime and misery of Ireland, rather than the priests and O'Connell. The Canada question was already settled, but Sir Charles Bagot has not only justified Lord Sydenham's policy ; he has given the coup de grace to the Tory oligarchy in that colony. In the West India Colonies, the Planters are anticipating in their discussions the inevitable reduction of the sugar duties, feeling that the days of their monopoly are numbered. Now all these are cheering indications, that, strong as the Government is in its parliamentary majority, there is something stronger still in the spirit of the times, or rather in the force of circumstances, which is drawing them onward. We look forward to the coming Session with more hope than fear. Sir Robert Peel's only safety lies in a decided, onward course. The moment he betrays a disposition to recede, he is lost. He will be like a huntsman in the midst of his hounds without a whip. Fear, or the semblance of it, would be fatal to his ascendancy.

The year 1843 certainly opens under happier auspices than the one that has just closed. The hoarse artillery of war has everywhere been silenced, and the sword is returned to its scabbard. Affghanistan, reconquered and abandoned, will no more tax the resources, or threaten the security of our Indian Empire. Peace with China opens new prospects for commerce in the East. The Ashburton Treaty, with all its faults, guarantees our pacific relations with the United States. Great Britain is once more at peace with all the world, without having any reason to apprehend a rupture with any power, civilized or barbarian. The earth is at rest. Here is abundant cause for national gratitude and confidence. In this spirit, we wish our readers emphatically a happy new year.—Pat.

THE LATE LORD HILL.—Nothing could be more serene and peaceful than the death of Lord Hill, except the calm, dignified tenour of his life. He knew well for a considerable time that death was the inevitable termination of his illness, and he prepared himself for that event with the resignation of a Christian, and the fortitude of a good man. He attended Divine service at his parish church regularly with his two sisters—two of the most amiable ladies in existence—and on one occasion he was forcibly struck with the text from which Dr. Gambier addressed his congregation, "Thou art weighed in the balance and found wanting." On returning home, he spoke on the subject of the sermon with great earnestness, and sighed whilst he said, "Of what avail are all human honours when our conscience whispers to us, that when weighed in the balance we shall be found wanting!" His sister pointed his attention to a Sacrifice which was infinite in the Almighty's eyes to blot out all guilt of thought or deed; and the dying soldier avowed that upon that rock all his hopes were placed; for if God were not pleased to accept that Sacrifice, man was unable to appear before him. To add to the affliction of Sir Rowland (now Lord Hill) and the whole of the members of the family, the dowager Mrs. Hill, the mother of his Lordship, expired on Tuesday week at the Citadel, after a severe illness. The death of the amiable lady, although long expected, came with such violence upon the family at the last moment, that the arrangements which had been previously made for the procession of the funeral of his Lordship were altogether laid aside. The shock was so sudden, and the grief of the family so great, that several of its members were unable to attend.—Bristol Journal.

SIR CHARLES BAGOT'S SUCCESSOR.—The Toronto Examiner intimates that his Excellency's departure, on account of ill health, has been anticipated for some time past, and that Lord Eliot, the Secretary for Ireland, is likely to be Sir Charles's successor.—Pat.

FIRES IN THE METROPOLIS.—On Monday, Mr. Braidwood, the superintendent of the Brigade Force, at the meeting of the Directors forming the Committee of the London Fire Establishment, made his annual record of the conflagrations that have occurred during the past year (1842) in and around the Metropolis. The report commences by stating that fires were on the increase in London, the number of last year exceeding by 73 those of the preceding twelve months, and 213 over the average of the last nine years, though happily not so extensive in magnitude. The following are the number of fires that have taken place since the Fire Brigade was formed, in the year 1833, together with the number of houses totally destroyed, and those seriously and slightly damaged:—In 1833, there were 450 fires, destroying 31 houses totally, and damaging 427 other buildings. In 1834, 482 fires; houses burned down, 28; and 454 injured. In 1835, 471 fires; 31 houses burned down, and 440 damaged seriously and slightly. In 1836, 564 fires; 33 houses totally destroyed, and 531 more or less damaged. In 1837, 501 fires; 22 houses consumed, and 479 damaged. In 1838, 560 fires; 33 houses destroyed, and 535 injured. In 1839, 584 fires; 17 houses consumed, and 567 damaged. In 1840, 681 fires; 26 houses burned down, and 655 damaged. In 1841, 696 fires; 24 houses totally consumed, 672 injured; and last year (1842), 769 fires; 24 houses destroyed, and 743 more or less injured. From the report, it appears the chief number of the fires takes place in private and lodging houses, and carpenters' workshops. Public-houses and drapers' shops follow in rotation. Upwards of 20 persons have lost their lives at fires in the course of the year.—Ibid.

"THE UNIVERSAL HALL OF COMMERCE."—On Monday, the opening of the building in Threadneedle-street, recently erected by Mr. Moxhay, was celebrated by a dejeuner, under the auspices of the Lord Mayor, several of the aldermen, and sheriffs. The interior of the establishment, which is at once spacious and elegant, consist of a hall of assembly, with every accommodation for the transaction of business connected with the general commerce of the United Kingdom, a reading room supplied with British and foreign newspapers; private apartments, to which parties meeting in the hall may retire to conduct negociations of a confidential character; sample and deposit rooms, with iron safes, a register office, &c. Lord J. Russell arrived soon after the commencement of the proceedings, and was received with loud cheers. The Lord Mayor proposed, "Prosperity to the Hall of Commerce." That magnificent building had been erected by the unaided means of one man, Mr. Moxhay, at a cost of more than 60,000*l.* The Lord Mayor next gave the health of "the Representatives of the City of London." Mr. Masterman having had occasion to retire, Lord J. Russell said, it devolved upon him to return thanks. He was sure they were all actuated by one cordial feeling of admiration of the public spirit and enterprise which had prompted Mr. Moxhay to undertake the building of that great and splendid hall, and they all wished him the fullest and most complete success. In conclusion, he would beg to give, as a toast, "Prosperity to the City of London and the trade thereof." Among the embellishments of this institution, a beautiful statue placed at the grand entrance, attracted general admiration. It is executed in Malta stone, and represents Whittington, the size of life, seated on the mile-stone, tired and dejected at the moment when the merry sound of Bow bells strikes upon his ear.—Pat.

BLASPHEMOUS PUBLICATIONS.—The summonses which were issued on the part of the Government against Thomas Patterson, of Holowell-street, were returnable at Bow-street on Saturday; but Patterson did not attend, and warrants were issued for his apprehension. Mr. Chambers, counsel for the prosecution, stated that it was not the intention of Government to extend any leniency towards Patterson, as they were determined to suppress anything which might be injurious to the religious feelings of society. He also intimated, that it might be a matter of future consideration whether the power of Magistrates in such cases should not be enlarged by law; for all that could be done against persons guilty of the offences with which Patterson was charged was to fine them in the penalty of 40s. for every separate offence proved against them. Patterson has been turned out of his shop. His landlord, Abrahams, was, it seems, a middle man; he was in arrears with his rent; and the first landlord took possession on Wednesday.—Ibid.

NEW RAIN GAUGE.—Mr. Dickenson, an extensive paper-maker living near Watford, and having paper-mills on the river Colne, resorts to the following expedient to ascertain what quantity of paper he may contract to supply his customers. On the hills in the neighbourhood of his mills he has fixed a gauge buried in the ground a little depth below the surface. By consulting this gauge, he is enabled to compute the amount of rain which finds its way into the earth during the winter season, and which must be again remitted before it can be decreased by evaporation. Experience has proved to him that, with this index, he can precisely ascertain the influx of tributary water which the river Colne, whereby his mills are worked, will receive. This statement was made at the Institution of Civil Engineers, by Mr. Clutterbuck, and substantiated by Mr. Dickinson himself.—Ibid.

THE RE-BUILDING OF HAMBURGH.—We have seen a map of the alterations proposed to be effected. They are evidently great improvements, and will render the new streets far more handsome and commodious than the old ones. In the neighbourhood of the New Exchange, which stands uninjured in the midst of the waste caused by the fire, the little fleths, or canals, which are too narrow to be available for the purposes of traffic, will be filled up, and on the ground behind the Exchange will be erected the new Senate-house, the Treasury, and the Courts of law. To this spot, thus forming the great centre of the new town, a number of streets will lead, both wider and straighter than those formerly existing, and sites will be reserved for churches, market-places, and other public buildings. The line of houses on the pleasant promenade of the Jungfernstieg, in front of the lake called the Binnen Alster, (which was entirely destroyed by the fire,) will also be rebuilt in a more regular fashion, and the promenade itself, which now embraces only three sides of the Binnen Alster, will be carried round the fourth or south-east side. Thus there will be formed a terrace, adorned and shaded by trees, along the four sides of the lake. This will add greatly to the beauty of the spot, as well as to the enjoyment of the Hamburghers. In addition to these improvements, the Government has decided on constructing a lock and other works for opening a navigable canal between the rivers Elbe and Alster. A complete system of sewers, also, upon the large scale of those in London, will be established; and one of the main lines is already in progress of execution. The greater part of the new plan is, we are given to understand, the work of Mr. William Lindley, an English engineer.—Times.

THE FREEHOLD SYSTEM is about to be fairly tried in Tobago. We are informed by a friend on whose authority we can rely, that one of our most extensive attornies (in consequence of instructions from home) has recently ordered about 100 acres of one of the estates under his charge to be surveyed, and divided into small lots, which he means to offer to the labourers of the estate at a moderate rate of purchase. An estate long out of cultivation, and situate near the Moravian church at Mount Moriah, has also been purchased a few days ago on speculation, with the view of leasing and selling land to the peasantry. The experiment therefore is about to be entered on—and, once begun, it must, in self-defence even, be adopted by all.—Tobago Gazette.

THE UNIVERSITY OF DORPAT has just been deprived of two of its professors in a manner not very creditable to the Russian government. Dr. Ulman, professor of theology, had filled the rectorial chair from 1839 to 1841, and had then tendered the resignation of that dignity on the plea of ill-health. His resignation was accepted, but a number of students contributed to the purchase of a splendid silver goblet, to be presented to their late rector, as a token of their respect. According to the Russian law, no public officer is allowed to accept an homage of this kind from his inferiors, without the express permission of his superiors. Nevertheless, Professor Ulman did accept the proffered present, and Dr. Bunge, professor of law, publicly expressed his approval of his colleague's conduct. The Russian government has marked its displeasure of this proceeding, by dismissing Professor Ulman from the public service, and sentencing him to banishment from Dorpat. Professor Bunge has been punished by being removed to an inferior appointment at the University of Kasan.—Pat.
